I hope that the House will give the Bill its wholehearted support. The Government support its principles and I have been assured that they do not intend to introduce any unreasonable regulations or restraints for trading schemes that are entirely legitimate and beyond criticism. Direct selling and franchising are large and fast-growing sectors of our economy. The House has a duty to ensure that the legislation properly reflects the need to ensure that those who are responsible for carrying on such businesses are not unduly hampered, but that people will be protected from those who use holes in existing legislation to run what are undoubtedly scams and tricks, to persuade people to part with their hard-earned money or redundancy payments.

I know that the Government support the principle of the Bill and I am grateful for their backing. The Bill was also supported in other parts of the House during its earlier stages.

9.54 am

Mr. Andrew Rowe (Mid–Kent): I start by declaring an interest. The only outside interest for which I receive any remuneration whatever is that I am an adviser to Amway UK, which is one of the biggest direct selling companies in Britain. I assure the House that I spent much time thinking about it before I agreed to assist the company, because a connection with pyramid selling in even the most legitimate direct selling companies would cause any hon. Member to pause. I looked at how a reputable direct selling company operates before I agreed to be an adviser. I am glad that I did that, because I have learned a great deal about a field of endeavour about which I knew little before I took on the role.

As my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea (Sir N. Scott) said, this is a rapidly growing method of selling, but scams have caused huge distress to a substantial number of people who invested redundancy money or pensions and received nothing. One of the most common scams is that there is nothing whatever to sell, and that is absurd. When all the glamour and glitz of the west end hotel foyer or banqueting room were stripped away, people found that they were being asked to pay a substantial sum up front, in the hope that they could then con others into joining a scheme that had nothing whatever to sell. Sadly, the most vulnerable people are often the most desperate and they are easily persuaded that there is a crock of gold at the end of the rainbow.

Amway has tens of thousands of distributors throughout the land. Some of them work all the hours that God sends, and many husband-and-wife partnerships have managed to build substantial businesses. There are millionaires working for companies such as Amway, but the vast majority of workers are people who are trying to augment their incomes. Some vicars' spouses are augmenting the stipends of their husbands by toiling in a small way for the company, as such people do for many other direct selling organisations. Many of them are students who seek to augment their student loans.

Many people who get sucked into such an activity quickly find that they are temperamentally hopeless at it. One of the Bill's great advantages is that it will make it much harder for confidence tricksters and others to load such people up front with a huge stock of material that they are temperamentally unable or do not have the skill or assiduity to sell. In some instances, the stuff begins to depreciate or deteriorate the moment they take delivery of it. There has been little enforcement of any suggestion that the supplier should take it all back. Such behaviour has brought the entire direct selling operation into disrepute.

A similar difficulty may arise—indeed, it has arisen in Amway UK. Training materials are made available by companies within the Amway chain, and people who are not good at selling and who are temperamentally of the belief that, if they tried only a bit harder or seized on to the latest gimmick, their fortunes would be transformed, feel obliged regularly to buy the latest video, booklet or whatever and can easily build a substantial outlay for little return. Reputable companies in the Direct Selling Association, of which there are a substantial and growing number, are keen to ensure that people have a real opportunity to give back the materials that they purchased in good faith, but ill-advisedly, without losing large sums of money. My right hon. Friend's Bill will make such an improvement in standards even easier.

The Bill takes the best practice in what is an innovative and growing form of selling and is determined both to generalise that good practice and to outlaw bad practice. The bad practice varies from downright fraud to careless overselling to people who are incapable of determining whether they are in a good position. One can never entirely protect gullible people by legislation or any other means, but one can ensure that the damage to those people is limited as far as possible and that they do not get sucked into things which, on any examination, are regarded as totally crooked.

Therefore, my right hon. Friend has done the country a considerable benefit by introducing the Bill. I am delighted that the Government recognise the value of trying to tighten the whole system and that they have, by endorsing the Bill, clearly recognised that direct selling is here to stay and that it is one of the many new ways of getting goods to the customer which the retailing revolution is bringing about.

Many people would, for all sorts of reasons, prefer to buy from someone they know products that they have grown used to in their home. That is an admirable feature. It is also a way of doing business which, for the distributor, fits in extraordinarily well with the growing instability of the employment market. People who expect to go in and out of work during their lifetime may find it a great anchor to have, as part of their family income, the amounts of money that come in from providing a relatively small number of customers with a steady supply of products. That is an admirable way of trying to iron out the peaks and troughs of an employment record which, in the modern technological world, is unlikely to be the flat line, or the climbing graph, which most of my generation expected to enjoy when we left school or university.

For all those reasons, I commend my right hon. Friend for introducing his admirable Bill.

10.3 am

Mr. Andrew Robathan (Blaby): As my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) has said, this is an important issue. I am delighted to have the opportunity to speak on the measure. I just slightly regret that there does not seem to be much interest from the Opposition Benches. I know that the Opposition support it, but it is a pity—[Interruption.] I welcome the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown). I hope we shall hear from the Opposition of their support for the Bill, but the empty Opposition Benches sit ill with the slogans that we hear about supporting business.

Mr. Paul Flynn (Newport, West): The hon. Gentleman might realise that the reason for the empty Opposition Benches is that the Bill is entirely non-controversial and that it is not expected that any Member will speak against it. For that reason, Members hope that it will have a swift passage through the House this morning to allow hon. Members to consider in detail and come to a decision on other important Bills that are before us this morning.

Mr. Robathan: Indeed. The hon. Gentleman has his own issue in the Bull Bars (Prohibition) Bill, which I believe is coming up later and which I also commend to the House. I do not think that the hon. Gentleman will find much objection, certainly not from me anyway, to his measure. At 10 o'clock this morning, he has plenty of time to look forward to that.

[Mr. Robathan]

The Trading Schemes Bill deals with an important issue. Although I am sure that my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea (Sir N. Scott) will leave many lasting memorials to his time in this place, this Bill will certainly be one, perhaps not the greatest—

Lady Olga Maitland (Sutton and Cheam): He is not dead yet.

Mr. Robathan: One may leave one's memorials long before one passes on, and I know that my right hon. Friend will be back after the next election, as will we all, God willing, but this Bill may be one of the small memorials that he leaves the House and it might improve the lot of many people who might otherwise have become victims or dupes of bogus promoters of the dubious financial schemes that he has mentioned.

It is said that a fool and his money are easily parted, but this issue is much more complicated than that. There are many sad cases. I suspect that most Members have, as I have, met sad constituents who have explained how they have lost money in one scam or another and who have wondered what could be done about it. The sadness is that we discover that, often, little can be done.

What we might describe as an innocent abroad, perhaps a man in his 40s or 50s who has recently been made redundant and who is unable to get a job in the declining industry in which he was working before, may be enticed by advertisements into putting his redundancy money into a scam. Often, those people have no experience or knowledge of the world into which they are venturing—or think they are venturing—be it insurance, financial investment or selling of some sort and they see an opportunity. We should beware of criticising those people because they are being enterprising and trying to raise themselves from an unfortunate position.

Mr. Piers Merchant (Beckenham): I agree with my hon. Friend. Does he agree that, when some people suggest that the Bill's purpose is to protect gullible people, although that may be true, it goes much further than that and many of the people who are caught by the sort of schemes that the Bill attempts to extinguish are not gullible? They have been seduced by deceptive literature, advertising and schemes.

Mr. Robathan: My hon. Friend makes an extremely good point. Before coming to this place, I was in the Army for many years and having left the Army, I was surprised, as I looked through the opportunities in the newspapers—the House of Commons was not there; I had to find that one for myself—that there were many enticing advertisements explaining how I could make money with my enormous skills, which, of course, were flattered by those seductive advertisements. When I replied to one, however, I discovered that it looked rather fishy.

That is the nub of the matter. Everything is about getting rich quick and, of course, getting rich quick is rare, apart from the lottery or tomorrow's Grand National. Incidentally, as we discuss the Grand National tomorrow and the Bill, I would appropriately recommend to the House Young Hustler, which at 7-1 must be a favourite.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): Order. The hon. Gentleman may want to offer such advice, but not here and not now.

Mr. Robathan: I am not offering advice. I am just commenting that Young Hustler at 7-1 is running tomorrow. I take no responsibility for anyone who backs it.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must, however, take responsibility for the relevance of his remarks to the Bill.

Mr. Robathan: We are talking about get-rich-quick scams, but I shall move on from the Grand National and the lottery.

There are few ways in which one can get rich quick, or, indeed, get rich, apart from by working hard. Getting rich quick usually involves crime. I was going to comment on those of us who are backing a horse at Aintree tomorrow, but never mind. Those of us who are buying a lottery ticket tomorrow know in our hearts that we are unlikely to be able to spend Easter in the Bahamas as a result. Sadly, some people who are conned by pyramid selling and similar trading schemes, which my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea has mentioned, have lost so much that not only the Bahamas but even the most excellent resort of Blackpool is an unlikely destination.

When I was a child, I was occasionally privy at school to receiving what were known as chain letters. They were rather fun and said that one must not break the chain or one would get bad luck. I personally never returned one such letter, so I suppose I broke the chain. The letters usually originated in Minnesota or Uruguay, from some holy man or sadhu in the Himalayas, or perhaps some child in Sweden. Maths was never my strongest point at school, but I could understand quite easily that to keep such chain letters going, an enormous number of people needed to be involved.

More recently, and more seriously, about ten years ago, when I was working in London, the same sort of letters began to appear, but they demanded money. It was not a great deal of money—£10 or so. They also warned that the chain must not be broken, but they were curiously mystical. Examples were given of people who had received £20,000 and of some who had had bad luck and lost a great deal of money. Such letters also all began in the deepest south of America or the mountains of Asia, but rather than coming from a holy man they were usually from a very clever mathematician.

I recall that in the space of about two months I received about three or four such letters, which always included lists of names. One had to send £10 to the top name, strike it out, and send on the letter to six more people.

Mr. Flynn: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Will the hon. Gentleman refer to the clause that would stop letters coming from Ukraine and south America?

Madam Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order for the Chair. I thought that the hon. Member wanted to intervene.

Mr. Robathan: It might have been an intervention, but I thought that the hon. Gentleman wanted to get on to his Bill. Surely the point is that exactly the same sort of scam is run by businesses. If the hon. Gentleman would like to study previous discussions and the Second Reading debate, he will find that particular comments relate to Romania and Russia, which tie in quite closely with what I am talking about.

By examining the lists of names on those chain letters that required £10, I saw that there was at least one general and several people who may since have become generals—I was in the Army at the time—who were not dupes or fools but quite sensible, responsible and educated. When I received three letters, I began to smell a rat. I worked out that by sending six letters, I could receive 46,656 letters by the sixth stage, which, at £10 a head, would have amassed almost £500,000. If I was not at the beginning but already at the sixth stage, more than 2 billion people would have needed to have been involved in the chain for me to have received the same amount of money. If I was at only the fifth stage, the whole population of the United Kingdom—every man, woman and child—would have to have sent letters for me to be have received the same amount of money. I have lost money in some ventures, but I have never been quite as foolish as to engage in that.

Although that was not a particularly important scam, the issue that it raises is nevertheless serious and directly relates to the Bill, notwithstanding what the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn), who has just left, said. I was often told that such a practice was illegal, and perhaps my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea or my hon. Friend the Minister can confirm that. It should be illegal. Although the generation of such money is perhaps trivial, it is nevertheless worrying.

The same principle was applied by such companies as Global Pioneers Ltd. and Alchemy UK plc, as I understand it. Such companies were getting rich quick by putting money up front in order to get other people to give them money. Of course that is all too easy, and involves amounts much more than £10. Some people's losses have been great. Perhaps the promises of selling, financial work and insurance were given, and always the income was guaranteed—except that it never came. The parallel is clear.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea has been in touch with the Direct Selling Association, as he mentioned, and I am delighted that it supports the Bill. As my right hon. Friend and my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Rowe) have mentioned, our retail habits and unemployment in the retail sector have changed over recent years. If we look to America, we see that it is likely to change even further. Many busy people choose to buy items from catalogues or from agents of direct selling companies. There is nothing wrong with that and I am delighted that the Bill will not harm it. It is important that bureaucratic regulation does not build up and stifle perfectly proper enterprise. The franchise sector has been mentioned and there are technical issues in it that need to be considered by the DTI in years to come—not necessarily by special investigation. Since the Bill concentrates on providing a framework and does not deal with detailed regulations, it is a great asset in that area.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea will know that I wanted to debate an amendment on Report, which, despite being accepted when I tabled it was declared defective. I am not sure why. It was not in any sense a wrecking amendment. It was to investigate the difference that was raised by consultees between directly inviting or asking people to participate, as opposed to informing or giving information designed to lead people into such participation. The consultees raised that as a matter of importance and my amendment would have altered the Bill so that section 119(1) of the Fair Trading Act 1973 would read:

> "Regulations made by the Secretary of State by statutory instrument may make provision with respect to the issue, circulation or distribution of any form of advertisements, prospectuses, circulars or notices, which
> (a) contain any invitation to persons to become participants in a trading scheme to which this part of the Act applies, or

It is quite a technical point, and we have moved on without debate. It is important, however, that in the interpretation of law such factors are understood and dealt with. It should probably be dealt with in regulations drawn up by the DTI. My right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea mentioned weaknesses in current legislation. I have been in the House for only four years but I have noticed that sometimes legislation is not perfect and we need to make certain that, when passing such legislation, even on a fairly empty Friday morning, it is absolutely correct.

I welcome the opportunity to support the Bill. I should be grateful if my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea would comment on one or two of the issues that I have raised. I congratulate him on his success in this small monument, and look forward to many further monuments to his diligence and industry during his time in the House.

Mr. Anthony Coombs (Wyre Forest): I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea on bringing the Bill forward. I was delighted to hear both him and my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) say that it is very important that when passing such legislation one does not throw out the baby with the bath water. In this instance, the baby is very significant, robust, healthy and perfectly legitimate. I have noted, for instance, that the direct selling or franchising industry of the kind that we are attempting to regulate has a turnover nationally of about £300 million. Not only does it provide additional income entirely innocently and helpfully for a large variety of people, whether they be students, wives—we ought to say spouses—or vicars, it provides a training ground for many people to develop gradually their entrepreneurial skills with minimum overhead and maximum back-up.

That is why the Direct Selling Association supports the Bill's principle but does not want it to become the trojan horse of a huge amount of regulation, which would become bureaucratic and stifling. That is one of my concerns about legislation that opens up new areas of activity to regulation. I am sure that although all of us present in the Chamber consider that the regulation would be helpful and not unduly constricting, and at the same time would protect vulnerable people, it might in other cases, in particular locations with particular trading standards officers, be highly oppressive in a way that I am sure none of us would want.

[Mr. Anthony Coombs]

In nine years in the House, I have received but one complaint about direct selling organisations. People who are duped or feel that they have been wronged by such organisations may not be the type of people who want to admit it and go to their Member of Parliament to draw attention to what they regard as an unfortunate episode in their life. We should nevertheless take account of the lack of complaints and say that, although there may be a problem, that money circulation schemes may have to be better regulated and some people may well have lost money, the benefit of franchising and direct selling far outweighs the problems against which we hope to regulate today.

I have always believed that we should consider any type of regulation from two angles. We should protect vulnerable and innocent people. The trouble is that a person who complains that a trading scheme has gone wrong will always present themselves to the authorities as vulnerable, exploited and innocent, despite the fact that many people who enter such schemes are not innocent or gullible but greedy and seeking a quick return as much as the guy who set up the scheme. That may not be the easiest thing to admit in political terms, but in practice it is often the case.

Mr. Robathan: I agree with my hon. Friend, but are not the advertisements very seductive nevertheless? Greed is a factor, but so is need, in whatever work we do, because we wish to make money for our industry. Perhaps some people are greedy, but I have cases of people who believed that they had found a good way to make money but were duped.

Mr. Coombs: Of course that happens, which is why we are considering the Bill, but I am saying that any scheme of regulation should be considered against that proviso.

The deregulatory aspects are the other side of the argument about regulation. It is highly ironic that the document "Pyramid Selling and Similar Trading Schemes", produced on 16 March 1995, is—at least according to the Library brief—part of the Government's deregulation initiative. I should have thought that it was the major complaint of the majority of my constituents, including small companies and many people involved in business on a larger scale, that far from deregulation being the order of the day, despite many of the prognostications and pronouncements of Ministers, insidiously, gradually, their businesses are more and more overwhelmed with regulation, whether from Europe or from over-zealous civil servants locally or nationally. It should be our major preoccupation to reduce regulation and to produce regulations that are unlikely to be perverted in the way that I described earlier.

Significantly, in the past 15 years the United States of America has produced about 20 million jobs, mainly in the private sector, whereas in Europe the regulation effort may have reached its nemesis—about 8 million have been created, none of which has been in the private sector.

Mr. Rowe: It may be worth pointing out to my hon. Friend that a substantial proportion of the direct selling companies that have found it useful to their business to enforce very much stricter controls are American.

Mr. Coombs: I take that point. We would all welcome necessary regulation for properly run, sensible companies, but we should bear it in mind that one man's necessary regulation may be someone else's unnecessary interference in the way they go about their business.

I am in favour of the Bill and of extending the number and type of schemes it encompasses and the type of advertisements it oversees, because naturally I want to protect people who are genuinely vulnerable in a way that is in the public interest.

I shall now discuss pyramid selling schemes. Inner Sanctum, which my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) may have mentioned earlier, was a scheme that, through an unauthorised Swiss bank Swiss Investment Bankers AEG, offered people wildly unrealistic deposit rates on their money. The bank was registered in a place called Melchizedek, which was purported to be a rock off the coast of south America, but in fact Melchizedek is an Old Testament priest or king of Canaan.

Obviously, it was a scam from the start and people needed to be protected against it. Although it claimed 7,000 members, no one got their money back. It was eventually wound up by the Department of Trade and Industry and the Bank of England, and so say all of us. That is the type of scam against which people should be protected.

The Bill widens the scope of existing regulation. It is important to ensure that those regulations are appropriate for overseeing the franchise and direct selling industry.

The consultation document issued by the Department of Trade and Industry, "Pyramid Selling and Similar Trading Schemes", suggested ways in which regulations and controls might be updated to protect investors. These included the requirement for information to be revealed to new participants in schemes so that they go in with their eyes open; information such as details of the promoter, his registered address, the assumptions on which advertised profit levels were based, information on the role of participants and their obligations, the terms under which contracts originally entered into could be cancelled without penalty, the length of cooling-off periods and the penalties that would apply to participants if a promoter terminated their contract unilaterally.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent said, it is extremely important that people who put a lot of money into schemes, whether it be in trading or in advance orders for goods and so on, should be protected by buy-back provisions. I believe that that was suggested in the consultation document. Equally important, at least for the first two weeks of someone's participation in a scheme, maximum levels of achievable turnover should be quoted. Otherwise people would be swept away with promises of massive future riches and make investments that were unsustainable for them and which could not be relied on in the future.

I want the Minister to reassure me that, in addition to extending the Bill's scope, he will consider the suggestions in the consultation document, which would result in such industries being better policed—better, not more oppressively—in a way that is likely to be accurate and relevant.

I shall briefly mention money circulation schemes. In the 1920s, one Charles Ponzi, an American "entrepreneur"—probably the wrong way to describe him—set up a money circulation scheme; a scam in which millions of people lost millions of pounds. A few years ago the Caritas scheme, which my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby mentioned—based mainly in Romania and Russia—was wound up and 4 million people lost no less than £630 million.

There are also money circulation schemes, as my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby mentioned, which involve three levels and which give a return only when one person recruits six, and those six recruit another six. Before people make any money at all, they have to recruit 216 people. Before those people make any money, 1,296 have to be recruited and before those people make any money, 279,936 people have to be recruited. Before those people make any money, 60 million need to be involved in the scheme—the population of the United Kingdom. Such schemes are scandalous and unrealistic. It is rather like riding a bicycle. One has to ride faster and faster and faster, otherwise one will fall off. People need to be protected from such schemes.

I am not sure, however, that we can make the same point about all money circulation schemes. One of my concerns is that there may be money circulation schemes into which people go fully aware of the kind of scheme they are entering and which are regarded as a club in which everyone understands the potential downside. People may get a great deal of entertainment and pleasure from such schemes because they are almost a social club. Such schemes should be allowed to persist because they are private ventures in which everyone is a member, and willingly so. Those schemes should be regulated in a constructive and rigorous but sensitive and sensible way.

The biggest money circulation scheme in the country is the national lottery. It is not easy to say that, but it is effectively a money circulation scheme. The only basis on which it works is that the vast majority of people go into it knowing that their chances of winning or getting any return at all are minuscule. The vast majority of people go in knowing that they will lose their money, but society has taken the view that in terms of good causes and in terms of the innocent pleasure it gives to millions of people, it is worth while.

Mr. Merchant: Does my hon. Friend accept that one of the major differences between the national lottery and the schemes he has described is that people do not spend their entire redundancy payment on the national lottery?

Mr. Coombs: I take that point. I was defending only money circulation schemes in which people are made aware, through the regulations we have talked about, of the potential downside and in which they take part on virtually a social basis, knowing full well the risks that they take.

We all agree that the national lottery, although a money circulation scheme of rare proportions, is worth while. That suggests that one should not throw the baby out with the bath water, not only in terms of direct selling and franchising operations, but in terms of money circulation schemes.

The Minister for Small Business, Industry and Energy (Mr. Richard Page): I intervene on the narrow point that the national lottery gives even odds to everybody whereas the schemes that my hon. Friend is describing, which are right scams, have differentiated odds as one goes further down the chain. That is the essential difference.

Mr. Coombs: I agree that it depends on the kind of schemes. The odds depend on the rules that apply to individual schemes. My point is that whether we are talking about direct selling, franchising or money circulation, the regulatory regime should be not only rigorous and all-embracing, as proposed in the Bill, but sensible. On that basis, I support the Bill.

Lady Olga Maitland (Sutton and Cheam): I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea (Sir N. Scott) on introducing this important Bill; the whole House is grateful to him for promoting it. The Bill has not caught the public headlines, but the wider public—the vulnerable, commercially innocent people who have been caught up in scams—will undoubtedly have great cause to be grateful for it.

I can describe the perpetrators of the scams only as sharp sharks and swindlers. It is hard to find an attractive adjective for them because, to be perfectly honest, they have gone out of their way to prey on people's vulnerability. I have seen the way in which they have approached people who have recently been declared redundant, people whose businesses have gone bankrupt and people who have left the armed services, as my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) pointed out. People in the armed services seem to be more innocent than others when it comes to commercial transactions.

I myself was pressured by someone who had left the Navy and who thought he was on to a winner. It was rather embarrassing to watch the way in which he and his wife put me under tremendous sales pressure to try to get me to join their recruitment drive. In the end, I had a feeling that it would all end in tears, as it surely did.

We are talking about get-rich-quick schemes which have mushroomed over the years. It was absolutely appropriate that we should overhaul legislation that seemed appropriate 20 years ago, but which had become rather toothless. It is significant that no one has been prosecuted despite a number of well-documented scams.

The Bill will have an effect on the way in which pyramid selling schemes are promoted. We have to bear in mind the fact that they are sometimes promoted through rather innocent and harmless methods, such as hand bills or a little notice in a newsagent's window which suggests that one can easily earn £1,000 a week for just two or three hours of effort. It is only too easy to be taken in.

It is salutary to look at one or two examples. In the autumn of 1991, the television star Danny Baker made a promotional video for a firm called Entertainment Xpress. The company promised to supply cut-price CDs and videos to members who signed up at £29.95 a year. Any regular music buyer could save a few pounds a year, but the real money came from recruiting others into the scheme. The Baker video promised earnings of up to £29,000 and even as much as £207,000 a year, depending where one was placed in the pyramid. All that people had to do was to recruit new members; it was too easy. Those members brought in two more members who went out and found two more. Once people were at the top, having gone through five layers on the way and having recruited at least 16 members, they earned only a paltry £1. If one controlled a pyramid of more than 8,000, one could earn £29,000.

[Lady Olga Maitland]

The trading standards officers calculated that the method would require the recruitment of virtually every regular music-buying family in a city the size of Aberdeen. The very top level would have required cities the size of Birmingham, Glasgow or Edinburgh. The good news is that Mr. Baker withdrew his endorsement of the video when the scam was properly explained to him and Entertainment Xpress went bust in 1992. Other examples of schemes that depended on recycling members include Alchemy Foundation, which was wound up by the Department of Trade and Industry in 1994, and successor companies such as Powertag and Headlogic, which were also shut down.

Lest anyone should believe that all methods of pyramid selling are bogus, it is important to recognise that there are some reputable schemes, such as those that my hon. Friend the Member for Mid–Kent (Mr. Rowe) has described. Amway and Cabouchon jewellery operate reputable schemes which can provide a useful source of income for people such as housewives who want to earn pin money to supplement their regular income. I have heard only praise from people who have operated with Cabouchon. They sell a product for which they get a direct return. It is quite different from the schemes dealt with by the Bill, which sell only recruitment, for which there is no return.

This is a valuable Bill and I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea on it. It will be a blessing to all genuine traders involved in pyramid selling because it will legitimise their work by outlawing scams.

Mr. Den Dover (Chorley): I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea (Sir N. Scott) on seeking to update the legislation on such activities, which is 20 years old and seriously out of date.

Franchising organisations should not fear their activities coming under this legislation. They should welcome it. I emphasise the need for very light regulations which do not cramp an ever-increasing source of income for all sorts of entrepreneurs who, through no fault of their own, have lost their main employment and want to create job opportunities for themselves.

The Government should perhaps produce guidelines or a code of practice rather than regulations. I am anxious to ensure that people are not taken advantage of through their lack of experience or gullibility. If the Government were to put out guidelines, it would help people and ensure that the practices that we are discussing are engaged in responsibly and are effective, efficient and profitable for those taking part. I am impressed by the number of hon. Members present to support my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea. I wish him well in the passage of the measure into legislation.

I am also impressed by the number of people who go into such activity. Amway UK Ltd. has said that the term "pyramid selling" should be more distinctly defined and perhaps related only to crooked activities. I would welcome the removal of that term because it has bad overtones throughout the industry. We are talking about selling in its widest aspect. That is a very good activity. All business organisations work on a pyramid basis, although there is currently much de-layering in industry across the board. We should ensure that the Bill deals with crooked activities and not with valid and important business activities.

10.42 am

Mr. Piers Merchant (Beckenham): I was fortunate enough to be able to speak on Second Reading and in the brief Committee stage of the Bill. I am grateful for the opportunity to contribute to Third Reading.

I have strongly supported my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea (Sir N. Scott) and his Bill and I do so now in the almost certain knowledge that it will shortly pass into law. It is an unusual example of regulation that should both simplify the law and save public expenditure. Both my right hon. Friend and my hon. Friend the Member for Solihull (Mr. Taylor), the Minister who dealt with the earlier stages of the Bill, said that in their best judgment the changes would save public money, principally because the regulations would simplify the environment.

Trading standards officers will be able to enforce this legislation against the schemes that we have been discussing much more easily than they could enforce the previous legislation. That is why there should be a net saving in public expenditure. It will be simpler for trading standards officers to take action, simpler for the public, whom the legislation is designed to protect, and simpler for industry as well. That is why the good side of the industry—which is, of course, the majority—strongly supports the Bill. Amway has been mentioned and is an example of an excellent company which operates in this way and has long pressed for reform, as does the Direct Selling Association, which represents the bulk of the industry.

The people who will suffer are the minority of bad, exploitative, almost criminal, parts of the industry which exist by operating scams and using loopholes in the law—the chain letter and pure cash-generation schemes, sometimes referred to as snowball schemes, which is an appropriate description as they gather size and then melt away. Such schemes cannot work because they exist on ultimately impossible assumptions—a constant increase in the size of support and constant generation of more money. As many good examples have already been given, I shall not give any more. The examples have shown that it is easy to sell such schemes but that they can never realise their ambitions. They are false premises based on false prospectuses.

I recall the notorious case of Hudson the railway king in the last century, who used a similar scam based on shares. He was for a while able to satisfy new shareholders with promises of huge returns by paying them out of the new shares that he sold. Ultimately, the scheme collapsed because he could not forever continue to sell new shares and thus satisfy the original shareholders. Such schemes will be ended by the changes in the Bill and the regulations that will stem from them.

I wish briefly to consider the victims of the schemes, partly because on Second Reading I mentioned a constituent of mine who lost all his redundancy money after many years of work by falling prey to the sort of misleading advertising connected with such scurrilous schemes. As I said in my intervention, the Bill will protect the gullible people who will fall for such schemes, but the problem goes much further than that.

Many of the people involved are basically sensible, well intentioned and well balanced. The trouble is that they are often inexperienced in business. More to the point, they fall prey to the glitzy advertising attached to the schemes and believe that they are entering a genuine business based on enterprise. It is often not immediately apparent that that is not the case. They suddenly find that they have lost all their investment, which may be their life savings or their redundancy settlements.

This Bill will close the loophole which has enabled many such schemes to operate in defiance of the Fair Trading Act 1973, which was largely a reaction to some glaringly bad examples of pyramid selling in the previous decade. Things have moved on since then. People with devious intentions always manage after a while to find loopholes in legislation. That is precisely what has happened. As the world and trading have changed, minds have set to work and ways have been found around the restrictions that that the 1973 Act brought to bear. Those who have wished to exploit have been able to do so. This is a timely means of setting right those problems.

I am glad that the Bill makes specific reference to advertising. As one who worked in the advertising industry for a while, I am in many senses partial to it, but for the industry to operate correctly and be seen to be above criticism it is sometimes necessary to have strict regulation. It cannot always be self-regulation. I am glad, therefore, that the Bill includes statutory control on advertising, pyramid selling and other trading schemes. I welcome that, and I am glad that my right hon. Friend included them in the Bill.

For all those reasons, I strongly support the Bill. I believe that it will bring benefit to the public, to honest traders and to the direct selling industry in general. I hope that it will reach the statute book swiftly.

Mr. Richard Spring (Bury St. Edmunds): I thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to make a brief contribution. I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea (Sir N. Scott) on introducing the Bill in an extremely sensible way, and on putting his case this morning cogently and persuasively.

Over the past 20 years, direct selling—whether it be pyramid selling, multi-level marketing, network marketing or whatever other term is used—has flourished. It is a real phenomenon of our times, and it is estimated that the market is now worth about £200 million. With that truly enormous increase over the past 20 years, many individuals have been brought into direct selling, dealing with kitchen goods, jewellery and other products, many of which are sold from people's homes. Collectively, all those schemes have come to be known as trading schemes.

A market worth £200 million is very big business indeed. The human spirit being what it is, where such sums are involved the market will inevitably attract people who are open to fraud and abuses of the law. Having seen the evolution of the business over 20 years, it is appropriate now to consider the legislative framework under which it all operates, to bring that up to date to cope with the size and complexity of the market and to make it relevant to the marketplace as it is, with all the mushrooming of activity that is involved.

The blunt truth is that the Fair Trading Act 1973 is no longer appropriate. Such a multiplicity of trading schemes operate in the United Kingdom that only some of them are subject to the Act's controls. The Bill will protect vulnerable people from loss by ensuring that all trading schemes whose members recruit others are subject to proper control.

A long catalogue of financial tragedy has been mentioned by my hon. Friends, especially my hon. Friends the Members for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) and for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe), who talked about it most poignantly.

Given the changes that we have seen in marketing and consumer activity, the opportunity has arisen for many people to become budding small entrepreneurs. That is why I am pleased to see my hon. Friend the Minister for Small Business, Industry and Energy here to reply to the debate. Entrepreneurial activity at this level often encourages people to set up small businesses.

In this country there has been an explosion of entrepreneurial activity, especially at the small business level, often involving people who have taken redundancy payments or have retired early and decided to go into business, perhaps after some marketing or selling experience. Tragically, some—albeit a minority—have lost their money in crooked schemes. Nevertheless, I believe that the seed-corn of our success as an economy depends on such entrepreneurial and small business activity.

The Government have sought to help small businesses by increasing the value added tax threshold, cutting corporation taxes and removing much of the burden of inheritance tax. That has all led to the dramatic decline in unemployment in the United Kingdom, compared with the contrasting situation in so many of our European competitor nations. That has happened because we have fostered and encouraged the entrepreneurial initiative.

At the heart of the Bill is the idea of giving protection to people who in their own different ways, sometimes even part time, are mini-entrepreneurs. I strongly support that, because it will bring the legislative position to a state relevant to our situation as we approach the millennium. I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea once again on bringing the Bill through to its Third Reading.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths (Edinburgh, South): I welcome the Bill, and I have listened with great interest to Conservative Members revealing their detailed knowledge of the scams, swindles, schemes and shadowy chancers operating in the market. There appears to be great expertise on the Government side of the Chamber.

Despite all that knowledge of pyramid selling, network selling and multi-level marketing, however, there have been years of inaction in terms of clamping down on the scams about which we have heard in graphic detail. There have been several promises of action by the Government. Sadly, however, those promises have been broken and it has been left to a private Member, the right hon. Member for Chelsea (Sir N. Scott), to promote the Bill because the Government have found neither the will nor the way to do anything about the problem.

When I asked the then Minister at the Department of Trade and Industry, the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh), on 31 March 1993 whether he would take action on the matter, he declined to do so.

[Mr. Nigel Griffiths]

More time went by and in 1994, my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) specifically pressed the then Minister responsible, the hon. Member for West Derbyshire (Mr. McLoughlin), to "bring forward legislation to outlaw any business scheme of pyramid selling requiring payments purely for the benefit of registration" and highlighted the sort of problems which existed. The then Minister replied:

"I have, at present, no plans to amend the Fair Trading Act 1973".—[Official Report, 27 April 1994; Vol. 242, c. 167.]

In the same year, on 20 July, the Department of Trade and Industry had to go to the High Court to wind up Alchemy UK Ltd., a company which had preyed on people who had received redundancy payments or had a spare bit of cash, because thousands of people had lost thousands of pounds each.

The Direct Selling Association made fairly urgent representations to the Department—Amway, which we have already heard about, was also involved—and the then Minister said, also in July 1994, that at long last the Government were prepared to legislate. Sadly, however, no legislation followed, despite the fact that James Erlichman—then of The Guardian, now of the BBC—revealed that in that year almost 17,000 people in Britain had lost £10 million in such schemes.

Earl Ferrers, the Minister at the time, said that he was powerless to stop such schemes getting off the ground. We were aware of that fact: that is why we were asking for legislation. In March 1995, the DTI promised us a draft law, and in a boastful press release said that it intended to amend the Fair Trading Act 1973 and to clamp down on such abuses. Yet again, however, Ministers did nothing.

The latest money-for-nothing scam appears to be Titan Marketing, which offers invitations to join a business club. Tony Hetherington, of the Financial Mail on Sunday has exposed the hard sell, the threats of violence and the secrecy surrounding that German-based scheme. It has operated in Cheshire, Greater Manchester, Staffordshire, Stoke-on-Trent and Lancashire, where the trading standards officers have done their best to try to catch up with the crooks, and is similar to Alchemy UK, which the DTI had to wind up, FPW and Inner Sanctum.

My concern is that it has taken so long to get legislation on trading schemes on to the statute book. This legislation—which Labour has supported throughout its passage—was introduced not by the Government but by a private Member, and I am concerned that it was not passed by the House today in 10 minutes. A parliamentary on-line information system check on parliamentary contributions shows that in this debate we have heard from a group of hon. Members who have previously asked no questions and made no contribution—with the exception, of course, of the hon. Member for Mid–Kent (Mr. Rowe), who has shown a long-term interest in this issue and who represents Amway as a Member of Parliament and as a paid consultant, and the hon. Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant), who spoke in the debate on the Bill's Second Reading.

Mr. Spring: I am disappointed in what the hon. Gentleman has said. I happen to be vice-chairman of the Small Business Bureau and chairman of the parliamentary advisory group of the Small Business Bureau. Every Conservative Member is dedicated to ensuring that small businesses are allowed to operate successfully in this country. That is precisely what this measure is about, directly and indirectly. I hope that the hon. Gentleman will therefore understand why there is considerable interest in it: it is because, unlike the Labour party, Conservative Members have a real interest in creating jobs.

Mr. Dafydd Wigley (Caernarfon): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I apologise to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) for cutting across his speech, but 11 am is usually the time for statements in the House. Have you had any request from the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to make a statement on the discussions in Brussels? I ask that question because of the very considerable urgency for the farming fraternity to have news of developments there. If no request for a statement has so far been made, can you tell the House whether you would be prepared to consider a request for a statement at 2.30 pm on this matter? Every day counts for farmers and ancillary businesses, Madam Deputy Speaker, as I am sure you know.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I have had no request for such a statement to be made. It is not for me or for any occupant of the Chair to tell the Government what statements they should make; but a Minister is in the Chamber, and no doubt that information can be passed through.

Mr. Griffiths: Madam Deputy Speaker, I should like fully to associate the Labour party with the point of order raised by the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley), which was, of course, well made.

It is very interesting that the profound interest in this issue declared by the hon. Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring)—which he says that Labour Members do not have—was not manifested in a contribution on the Second Reading. Nor has the hon. Gentleman found time to table any questions on the subject or to take part in previous debates on direct selling—in contrast with the questions tabled, not particularly by me but by a great many of my colleagues, on this matter. We are concerned that people have lost their redundancy payments and that others who have worked and saved hard have been swindled out of their savings because of Government inaction.

I made that point because this measure should have gone through very quickly—on the nod, as we say—because it has had our full co-operation and support. If, as I believe, there is currently an attempt to talk out the Bull Bars (Prohibition) Bill, as there was with disabled rights legislation, the House will be particularly annoyed and the victims of bull bars will vent their anger on Conservative Members. I end my speech with that statement.

11.4 am

The Minister for Small Business, Industry and Energy (Mr. Richard Page): I join all my hon. Friends in congratulating my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea (Sir N. Scott) on this legislation. It gives me great pleasure to support the Third Reading of his Bill. I was interested to read his comments in the debate on Second Reading, about promoting a Bill for the first time without the comfort of the Dispatch Box. I know exactly what he means.

Before offering to support the measure, the Government considered long and hard the considerable postbag that we had on the subject, including responses that we received to consultations on proposals to change the legislation controlling pyramid selling and similar trading schemes. It might help the House if I were to set out briefly some of the background.

Trading schemes are widely used by companies that do not employ a sales force. Their sales forces are self-employed individuals earning commission on their sales. There are literally hundreds of thousands of individuals who are members of such trading schemes. Some of them supplement their income by selling consumer goods to their friends and neighbours. That point has been made by my hon. Friends. Those people sell all manner of things: cosmetics, jewellery, gold necklaces, flashy cufflinks, books, toys, household goods and—shock, horror—even sex aids. There is probably hardly a home in the country that has not, at one time or another, bought from a member of a trading scheme.

In some trading schemes, members may also earn commission on sales by other members of the scheme whom they have recruited. In that way, it is possible for some people to earn substantial sums through membership of a scheme.

Franchise schemes in which franchisees acquire the right to use a trade name or design owned by franchisers are also trading schemes. Those franchises include many household names, selling burgers and all types of takeaway meals, and services such as photocopying, drain cleaning, picture framing and printing. At the other end of the spectrum, of course, many chain letters are also trading schemes.

Trading schemes include many reputable organisations that make a significant contribution to Great Britain Ltd.—how great a contribution, it is impossible to say. On one definition, as my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring) said, it is several hundred million pounds. On another definition, it could be said that annual sales probably exceed £1 billion. I can say that with some confidence because, in 1994, retail sales of members of the Direct Selling Association were estimated to be £948 million. As the House has already been informed, the Direct Selling Association is the trade association for companies selling consumer goods in the home through independent self-employed sales people.

Members of trading schemes include the smallest of firms. My hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds touched on the role of small businesses. As the Minister for Small Firms, Industry and Energy, I am very tempted to launch into a spiel about the importance of small businesses to the country. That would take up time, which I do not wish to do today, but I should underline the point that he made about the importance of small business to the UK.

We do not want to burden those people with unnecessary regulation. On the other hand, we want to ensure that entrepreneurs are not exploited by the promoters of the schemes in which they participate.

My hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) reminded the house of the pyramid scandals of the 1960s. In those scams, members bought a vast quantity of products, so that garages, attics and garden sheds were literally stuffed full of such items as shampoos or cleaning products that were virtually unsaleable.

Those unfortunate victims had few rights. Some of them had no contracts, and others had contracts that made it impossible for them to return the stock in which they had invested. Other people had contracts with onerous termination conditions. The unfortunate members trapped in those schemes, unable to sell any of their stock, concentrated their efforts on recruiting others; and so the number of victims grew and grew.

Not every scheme supplied unsaleable goods. But even when it was not possible for members to sell the goods, in some cases, they bore virtually all the scheme's commercial risks. The company promoting such a scheme carried virtually little or no risk, making profits whether the goods were sold or not. There is no doubt that such schemes caused immense hardship to thousands of people.

Those were problems that part XI of the Fair Trading Act 1973 was intended to remedy. The legislation provides essential protection for sales people who belong to a trading scheme, so that they are not unfairly treated. The Act provides power to regulate contracts between promoters and members of a trading scheme. It also provides power to regulate promotional material aimed at recruiting new members to a trading scheme. The most important protection was the creation of an offence relating to recruitment, which prevents payments for others being recruited into the scheme and their being the main attraction of such a scheme.

These controls apply to schemes in which: goods and/or services are provided by the scheme's "promoter"; such goods and/or services are supplied to others by the scheme's members; most of the sales do not take place on premises where either the promoter or the member carries on some other business; and in which members expect benefits related to the activities of other members, activities such as the recruitment of other members, the supply of goods, training or other services to other members and commission on sales by other members.

Many trading schemes with a pyramid recruitment structure do not have all those characteristics, but at present, only schemes with all four of those characteristics are subject to the controls of the Fair Trading Act 1973. The Bill widens the coverage of the controls under that Act. I assure the House that the Government would not favour any measure that widened regulatory control if it were not absolutely necessary.

As has been said, the Bill has become necessary because unscrupulous people have found ways of avoiding the present controls, by devising schemes that do not have all the characteristics specified in the Act. That point was made by my hon. Friends the Members for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) and for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland). Last year alone, 17,000 people lost £10 million in three such schemes. One poor individual lost £78,000.

I am not sure whether my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Robathan) was trying to illustrate the need for the Bill by giving a dodgy tip for the Grand National, but my advice to him is to stick to politics and not get into any form of the horse tipster business.

I cite a typical real-life example of the type of scheme with which we are dealing. It was run by One Life Ltd. and its recruitment material shows how insidious and clever such material can be. It states:

"The Facts of One Life . . . started in November 1974 with just 7 people. It is constantly expanding and now there are hundreds of people involved. There is no other company like it in the UK.

In their first few weeks most people earn between five hundred pounds and two thousand pounds per week. In subsequent weeks people are disappointed if this hasn't doubled (or even trebled!). It is a part-time job that fits comfortably in with most people's full-time work."

Once members had been suckered in, they were given guidance on how to recruit. The recruitment material continues:

"You have a good business opportunity to offer, show enthusiasm for it! If you appear apathetic you will put off your guests.

When making the first moves, it is vital that you do not beg and plead with them to come to the seminars, show them that you are offering them something they need and make them desperate for more information . . .

Create an air of importance around you, remember, few people are interested in a tramp. How you dress and what you say will influence people's attitude towards you . . .

Provide hints in the form of magazines and car brochures so that the other person is interested in your finances. By them asking questions on expensive purchases, you are creating a window of opportunity. Let them make the first step. Try and find out if there is something that she or he desires. Use this as a carrot to entice them to attend the seminar."

Eventually it says:

"Keep them guessing as to the nature of the business. If you start giving out more information than you should, it may be provided in the wrong way and at the wrong time. Remember, each person is worth thousands of pounds to you. Is it worth losing that potential investment".

I believe that that technique persuaded more than 1,600 people across the country to pay an initial up-front membership fee of £2,000 each to One Life. As my hon. Friend the Member for Blaby, who has now vanished, is not very good at mathematics, I shall help him—it amounts to some £3.2 million.

As I have already explained, One Life is an example of the sort of scheme that avoids the present controls under part XI of the Fair Trading Act. I am sure that the House will be relieved to hear that, last November, we successfully petitioned the High Court to wind up One Life Ltd. following an investigation under section 447 of the Companies Act 1985. The petition was under the Insolvency Act 1986, which enables the Secretary of State to petition for the winding-up of a company where it appears to him expedient to the public interest to do so.

We have taken similar action against other companies operating such schemes, but the powers currently available for protecting the public against such scams are cumbersome and limited in their application. We can wind up only companies with a UK presence and, unfortunately, it is possible for the people behind such schemes to set up new companies and do the same time and again.

For example, last July, we successfully petitioned the courts to wind up a company called Goldmark Inc., which was trading as Lifeline (UK). That company's managers had previously been involved with Tsar Computer Projects Ltd., which operated a scheme called Peace of Mind. That company was wound up in August 1994—the month before Lifeline started to operate.

Last August, the High Court wound up a company called Alchemy (UK), which ran a scheme promising members more than £30,000 in return for 24 monthly payments of some £75. I am sure we all agree that that would be a fairly healthy rate of return. Within a mere 48 hours of the winding-up, two successor companies were incorporated and took over Alchemy's assets and membership. That reinforces the point made by my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea.

Mr. Dover: Is there anything that we can do to stop such practice, or is it totally impossible under present legislation? So many companies fail and then resurrect themselves within a day or two; that is not in the interests of our constituents.

Mr. Page: My hon. Friend is straying from the Bill and moving to general legislation. Under general legislation, we have the power to disqualify directors if they are found to be operating companies fraudulently, but the Bill will, in particular circumstances, be able to deal with the situation that my hon. Friend describes.

The Bill is needed so that it is possible for action to be taken against those who exploit people who may be financially naive—those who persuade others to part with considerable sums of money by promising them riches if they can persuade others to do the same.

Mr. Robathan: I have not been out to place a bet on Young Hustler, although I recommend it.

My hon. Friend is explaining how penalties can be invoked. Will he confirm that someone who contravenes the Bill's provisions could go to gaol? In view of that, does he think that just over one hour on Second Reading and less than two hours on Third Reading is too long, which is what the Opposition seem to think? Curiously, they believe that even to discuss the matter is unreasonable.

Mr. Page: I shall resist my hon. Friend's invitation to get involved in a party political controversy, but I confirm that someone could go to prison if he contravened the Act. In view of the misery that some people cause by their activities, that is perfectly justifiable.

As I was saying, the Bill does not seek to move responsibility for enforcing the controls under part XI of the Fair Trading Act. That will remain the burden and responsibility of the Department of Trade and Industry. The Bill will not place extra work on trading standards departments. In fact, as has already been intimated, we expect the cost of taking action under the Fair Trading Act to be less than the cost of using the existing, less appropriate powers.

Enforcement of the Bill is expected to cost £200,000 a year at today's prices. That is nearly 25 per cent. less than the current annual cost of investigations, under the Companies Acts, of unscrupulous promoters and the submission of petitions to wind up these companies under the Insolvency Act. We also expect a reduction in the cost of handling inquiries from the public on whether particular schemes are subject to the provisions. I hope that that is of encouragement to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent.

The Bill is prudent. It seeks to widen the coverage of the existing controls under the Fair Trading Act only so far as necessary to protect the public from the risks associated with trading schemes.

In pyramid scams, very little may be provided other than money. The Bill provides for a wider definition of "goods" so that, for example, it covers money. It also lists the ways in which members of trading schemes may earn income and it then applies the controls to schemes in which members expect to earn income in one of the listed ways, and in which goods—as defined by the Bill—or services are provided by the promoter, whether to members or to others introduced by members.

Furthermore, the Bill provides power to widen further the coverage of the controls by disapplying altogether the qualifying criteria relating to goods and services. If in the event it were to prove necessary, we would not hesitate to use that power if the criteria relating to goods and services would otherwise protect pernicious schemes from prosecution.

The Bill also provides powers to exclude prescribed schemes from all the controls under part XI of the Fair Trading Act. That makes it possible to take out from those controls any type of scheme for which the Secretary of State is convinced that the controls are not required for the essential protection of the members of those schemes. I hope that that is of some comfort to my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea. The Bill provides powers that will address all the concerns expressed by the British Franchise Association Ltd. The greatest danger to the public is from schemes to which they are lured by promises of riches from the recruitment of others.

From our consultation, we have concluded that franchisees do not need the protection of the Act if their expected income comes entirely from their sales to third parties. We therefore intend to use the power to exclude prescribed schemes by excluding franchise schemes with only one person benefiting from the recruitment of others to the scheme.

The franchise schemes that we intend to exclude from those controls are at present subject only to the recruitment offences. That is because the existing powers provide for the regulations to apply differently to different types of trading scheme. The power is used at present to exempt two types of scheme from all the regulations. The exempt types of scheme are those in which only one participant in the UK can benefit from the activities of others, and those in which the financial benefits are no more than £30 in respect of the introduction of other participants.

Some hon. Members have mentioned chain letters, and harked back to their schooldays. We also intend to exclude simple chain letters from the controls under part XI of the Fair Trading Act. No doubt hon. Members have come across chain letters at various times. Some involve sending books, postcards, and other items to those higher on the list; others involve sending money; and others bring promises of bad luck to those who break the chain. The latter types may involve offences under the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976 or the Malicious Communications Act 1988.

Under the Bill, many chain letters will become subject to control under part XI of the Fair Trading Act. It is clear that the most basic examples are not detrimental to the public. We therefore intend to use the power to exclude prescribed schemes, to exclude simple chain letters. The controls will apply to any chain if anyone can benefit from it throughout its existence. For example, the controls—including the recruitment offence—will apply to any chain in which new members send money to a central organiser who takes a cut before passing the money down the rest of the chain.

The Bill also seeks to widen the controls over the promotional material used to recruit new members. It would make it possible for the regulations to apply to all forms of promotional material. Videos, recorded messages, the Internet and so on are now commonly used to attract potential members, but at present the controls apply only to documents.

The Government welcome the extension of the regulation-making powers to include other media. It is right to look ahead and it is right that all promotional materials should be treated equally under the regulations and that those considering joining a scheme are provided with the protection that we consider necessary, regardless of the form of the promotional material.

On Second Reading, my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham asked whether the control over promotional material is best achieved by statute or through the Advertising Standards Authority. The Government prefer self-regulation where it is effective. The present Pyramid Selling Schemes Regulations therefore do not apply to advertisements that form part of a newspaper or magazine, and we intend to continue that exclusion in the trading schemes regulations. However, much of the promotional material for trading schemes is privately produced and distributed. Regulation is needed to ensure that promotional material does not deceive, whether by including misleading information or by excluding essential details.

In deciding to support the Bill, we have been greatly influenced by the consultation that we held last year over the legislation controlling pyramid selling and similar trading schemes. Widening the coverage of the controls under the Fair Trading Act was only one of the proposals in that consultation. A summary of the results is in the Library of the House.

We sent out more than a thousand consultation documents. Some 256 responses were received, of which 40 were from promoters and their representatives, and 173 were from consumer organisations and members or ex-members of trading schemes, including those who belonged to schemes operated by companies that the Department had wound up.

I shall not go through all the comments that we received from the organisations, but they gave encouraging endorsement to the proposals in the Bill. Comments received included:

"To allow these schemes to continue is to condone trickery."

"I was promised large tax free earnings. All I had to do was bring in as many as possible friends, relations, business associates."

"It is about time 'money games' were outlawed because they are 'scams' and give our industry a bad name."

The list of complaints and the support for the Bill are there for all to see.

The consultation not only addressed the coverage of the controls. It also proposed trading schemes regulations to replace the Pyramid Selling Schemes Regulations 1989 and the Pyramid Selling Schemes (Amendment) Regulations 1990. Those regulations relate to the promotional material aimed at potential recruits to trading schemes and to the contracts between a scheme's promoter and its members.

The present regulations are not ideal, as my hon. Friend the Member for Chorley (Mr. Dover) pointed out. In some respects, the apparent protection to members of requirements that are costly to promoters is considerably greater than the actual protection provided. In the light of our consultation, we intend to overhaul the regulations so that they provide more effective protection to members and potential members of schemes at no greater cost to schemes' promoters.

It would be unfair to promoters to replace the present regulations so soon after extending their coverage. Therefore, if the Bill is approved—and I believe it will be—we shall lay new regulations on a timetable that will enable them to come into force at the same time as the Trading Schemes Act. There will, of course, be transitional provisions to minimise the costs for schemes that already meet the requirements of the regulations.

It gives me great pleasure to repeat that my right hon. Friend the Member for Chelsea has done a service for the country in introducing the measure. I commend the Bill to the House.

Sir Nicholas Scott: With the leave of the House, I shall speak briefly. First, I wish to apologise on behalf of my hon. Friend the Member for Mid–Kent (Mr. Rowe), who has left the Chamber briefly to respond to a green card that has been delivered to him. Secondly, I wish to express my gratitude to all those who have played a part in the progress of the legislation to this stage. I am grateful for that unanimous support, because we are tackling an important issue.

I know that the House is rightly wary of the excessive use of secondary legislation instead of primary legislation, but on this matter secondary legislation is essential. Indeed, if there are further developments and scams of one sort or another and gaps are found, it should be possible speedily to plug them with further secondary legislation.

I repeat my gratitude to the House for the support that I have had and ask it to give the Bill a Third Reading.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill accordingly read the Third time, and passed.

Bull Bars (Prohibition) Bill

Order for Second Reading read.

11.29 am

Mr. Paul Flynn (Newport, West): I beg to move, That the Bill be now read a Second time.

The greatest advance in road safety in recent years is the escape from the attitude towards driving of the early part of this century, which was characterised by Toad of Toad Hall figures, who delighted in the speed and power of motor vehicles. We have changed to defensive driving and now drive our vehicles in a good-mannered way, seeking to avoid problems to other users, particularly injuries and death. I am sad to say that bull bars have reversed that trend.

The case made for bull bars started in Australia, where they were designed as 'roo bars—short for kangaroo—to prevent kangaroos from being scooped up by the sloping bonnets of vehicles on impact and going into the passenger's space. They are now unpopular in Australia; they have been banned and replaced by a clever device that is based on high frequency sound, which is designed to shoo away kangaroos. A similar problem is being dealt with in a similar way in Sweden, which has the highest number of accidents involving impact with animals.

Now bull bars are being sold in this country in the belief that they prevent disabling and trivial damage to the fronts of vehicles. They are also being sold because they are aggressive in appearance and will intimidate other road users with the message, "This vehicle is tougher, harder and stronger than you. Keep out of my way." They have also become a declaration of the life style of the country person and the generation who had Tonka cars when they were young—cars with chunky, large wheels. They have a tendency to fall for bull bars in the pursuit of a fashion image.

The case against bull bars is proved and cannot be questioned. Every safety organisation and group of independent scientists, particularly in this country, Germany and Australia, has said that the rigid metal structure concentrates and multiplies the force of impact at the level of a child's head and vital organs.

Hon. Members will be familiar with the stiletto heel syndrome with which we were familiar in the 1950s when seven stone young women were wrecking the floors of dance halls that had survived for a century because, as they pirouetted on the tiny heel, their weight was changed from that of a young woman to that of a fully grown elephant and they bored sixpence-sized holes in the floor. Exactly the same physics is at work when a bull bar hits the head of a child. Not only does the bar, which might weigh about 100 lb, hit the child but it has the force of the vehicle behind it, all concentrated in a tiny area on the circumference of the bar's rim. Research proves that the bars change trivial accidents into serious accidents and serious accidents into fatal accidents. In Australia, the Madymo simulation proved that the bars changed the direction of the fall of pedestrians who were hit and consequently increased the danger of deadly head injuries.

The campaign against bull bars on four-by-fours has had some success. A firm on the borders of my constituency, which employs some of my constituents, manufactures bull bars. Nearly a year ago, it said that it had lost 50 per cent. of its sales. I told the company that sales should go down because there would be fewer deaths and injuries, but that I would like it to diversify into other, safety areas—there is a great market in safety. I take no joy in the fact that there might be a threat to the jobs of my constituents, but the lives of young children are far more important.

Manufacturing companies have altered the bars' image by changing the name from the aggressive bull or nudge bar to the protector bar. They are now concentrating on selling them to owners of vans, with some degree of success. The term protector bar is deceptive. Research proves it to be entirely inappropriate, but some van drivers feel that they are under threat because they have no engine but only a thin layer of metal between them and the rest of the road traffic. Manufacturers adamantly deny that there is any truth in the belief that those vans are inherently dangerous. Even if it were true, it would be unforgivable for people to make themselves safer by greatly magnifying the risk to other road users, including pedestrians and cyclists.

All the research has proved that bull bars fitted on four-by-fours or vans increase the severity of injuries and multiply the number of deaths not only for the people who are hit but for the passengers and drivers of the vehicles on which they are fitted, for reasons that we all understand. Bull bars stiffen the fronts of vehicles and destroy the vital controlled shock absorption that is designed into vehicle fronts. The forces of the crash are transferred from the vehicle and the impact hits the bodies of those inside, increasing their injuries.

Bull bars also interfere with the operation of air bags because the sensors are put out. The bags can inflate unnecessarily, but may well not be activated when they are required in a smash. By wrecking the aerodynamic profile—they alter what are known as the laminar boundary layers—the weight and the drag of the vehicle are increased, thus adding greatly to fuel costs, air pollution, tyre wear and making handling more difficult.

Few studies have been carried out on the extra injuries caused to passengers in vans, but studies in Australia showed that no extra safety is to be gained by the use of bull bars. In detailed studies in Australia it was found that injuries were likely to increase as the force was concentrated into a smaller area. In one accident examined, the bull bar changed shape and inflicted injuries to the top part of the body of many people in the van.

Virtually everyone is in favour of the Bill, except those who want to use bull bars—a declining group—and those who have a vested interest in profiting from them. The organisations that support the Bill include the Royal Automobile Club, Automobile Association, the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents, the Pedestrians Association, Headway—an organisation for head injuries—the Cyclists Public Affairs Group, the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Child Accident Prevention Trust and the Parliamentary Advisory Council for Transport Safety.

Mr. Alan Williams (Swansea, West): Does it not seem strange that insurers are the one group missing from that list? Would it not seem sensible for them to take into account the fact that third-party costs that may arise out of insurance policies could be increased, as could personal damage risks? I should have expected insurers to be penalising rather than encouraging the use of bull bars.

Mr. Flynn: I have good news on that front as I wrote 18 months ago to every insurance firm in the country and although I received a fairly negative response at that time, since then one insurance organisation, CGA Direct, has said that it will not insure any vehicles fitted with bull bars and Norwich Union, Eagle Star, Cornhill and others have taken action to waive the policies. That has become a major issue among insurance companies.

There is good news also on the newspaper front. Vigorous campaigns have been conducted by Wales on Sunday, the Northern Ireland Sunday Life, the Nottingham Herald and Post, the Evening Chronicle and the Daily Express—the Express is not a newspaper that I have praised before, but it has printed a splendid series of articles inviting its readers to nominate uses for dead bull bars. It received more than 100 entries. Most prominent of all have been The Independent and The Independent on Sunday and Christian Woolmar's long campaign.

There are distinguished supporters of the campaign to ban bull bars. Anneka Rice, Roger Cook and a lady who I cannot mention by name but who has some influence in the royal parks have all removed bull bars from their vehicles. They have responded to my letters. There has been a response also by many hon. Members, some of whom are in the Chamber. Some of them have views that would lead others to think that they would not necessarily support proposals related to defensive driving. For many weeks I have not seen a bull bar in the car park, where 27 were once assembled.

The Bill is straightforward. The intention behind it is that no person shall use on a road a motor car to which a bull bar is attached. It sets out suggested sentences—prison sentences and a maximum fine at the appropriate level. There is a similar Bill in the other place and there is activity in the European Parliament.

A letter was sent to the Minister on 24 May 1995, and it is of some significance. It was written by an EU Commissioner, who suggested three approaches, which might be the subject of detailed discussion today. There is a view that was supported by The Mail on Sunday in a headline that declared that Britain had won an EU ban on bull bars. Sadly that is not true. There is a dispute over who should be responsible for introducing such a ban.

The Commissioner stated that there were three ways in which the Government could ban bull bars. He said that if they were not fitted as part of the original European type approval, owners could be compelled to remove them because they would be breaking the law. Secondly, there is the safeguard clause within the framework directive for European type approval. It allows member states to introduce a temporary ban on registration if bull bars are considered to be a serious risk to road safety. I believe that a temporary ban would become inevitably a permanent ban. The third approach is to prohibit bull bars on vehicles that cross borders from one member state to another, under articles 30 and 36. That would be a powerful weapon in reducing the number of bull bars on vehicles.

It has been suggested that the Commission no longer takes seriously the three approaches to which I have referred. Accordingly, I ask for confirmation that it does take them seriously. By coincidence, the RAC met the Commission on Monday. In a letter to me, it reports that it is adamant that the three courses of action are accurate and can be adopted unilaterally by the United Kingdom. That view has been supported by the Commission and made known to two Select Committees that visited the Commission in the past six weeks, the Select Committees on Transport and on European Legislation.

One reason that the Government are advancing for taking no action is that they are waiting for the results of research undertaken in 1994. If the Minister has examined the findings of that research, I hope that he will agree that a report has been much delayed and that it may be better if a report is never produced as it would not be worth the paper on which it was written. Disastrously unscientific methodology was employed. It constitutes a voluntary and amateurish exercise. Accidents were reported haphazardly and chaotically.

The Minister seems to be taking an interest in this part of my speech, for which I am grateful. I wrote to all the police authorities. Some had taken part in the research and others had not. Any conclusions drawn from it would be meaningless and possibly dangerously misleading. Only 29 of the 50 authorities took any part in the research. It was not treated seriously by many of them. According to the chief superintendent of Northumberland, participation was voluntary, which suggested that there was no attempt to ensure that the police forces taking part were a representative sample. The Northumbria police authority did not take part. Yet I have evidence from my mailbag of fatal accidents in that area.

The replies from the police to my letters show that the numbers of accidents vary greatly from county to county.

The Minister for Transport in London (Mr. Steve Norris): It would seem that the hon. Gentleman has encountered research the results of which he does not like. It is extraordinary how the findings of research are denigrated in those circumstances. It was never the intention that all the police authorities should be included in the survey. The hon. Gentleman refers to "only 29" as if that implies that the others had declined to take part in it. In fact, the 29 constituted the survey group that we selected. We did so deliberately.

Mr. Flynn: I raised the matter in anticipation of the Minister using the findings to be drawn from the survey.

I want to reach an intelligent conclusion on the value of the figures that the research produced. I have studied them, as have others, and other parties have reached conclusions. I shall refer to the conclusions of those groups.

The Hertfordshire police authority took the issue extremely seriously. It has an interest in it. Until recently, some police authorities were using bull bars on their vehicles. Their attitude has, regrettably, come through in the results obtained. The Hertfordshire authority reported that in one year total casualties involving bull bar accidents were 143, in 91 accidents. A nearby county reported no such casualties or accidents. That is not plausible. In Dyfed, Powys and Gwynedd there were no injuries caused by bull bars throughout the period in question. Any respectable statistician would come to the conclusion that the counties that took part in the exercise were not entirely representative. I find it strange that the Metropolitan police were not involved and tiny Scottish counties were.

An analysis was undertaken by an independent body of the results of the survey. It has reached a judgment that is based on the accidents of which we are aware. I should say that in my office there are figures that did not appear in the report. They were not reported by the police. In some areas the police are blind to the involvement of bull bars in accidents.

The independent body to which I have referred puts its considerable reputation behind the conclusion that 70 people were killed in accidents involving bull bars and that 400 were seriously injured. Those findings are based on the independent body's interpretation of the figures. It is a body for which we all have a great deal of respect because of its campaigning activities.

Mr. Den Dover (Chorley): Is the hon. Gentleman aware of the total number of vehicles that are fitted with bull bars? Is he aware also of the percentage of vehicles that have them and of any geographical spread?

Mr. Flynn: Half a million has been quoted for some time. Many people, however, have now removed them from their vehicles. There has also been a trend to fit bull bars on to vans. There is no reliable, accurate figure.

In a debate last April and in an interview that the Minister gave to the Daily Express, he expressed similar views. He takes the view that it is not possible for us, the United Kingdom, to take independent measures to ban bull bars. He takes the view also that there must be an appropriate directive from Brussels. He has said that he will keep up pressure on the EU, adding that the Government have not thrown up their hands. I hope that he will not do so today.

The Minister gave an interview to The Mail on Sunday on 19 November last year. It appeared under the heading that Britain had won an EU ban on bull bars. It told us that the EU had caved in to pressure to change a Euro directive so that controversial steel cages would be outlawed on new vehicles. Apparently the promise was given to the Minister after he had lobbied the Commissioner with responsibilities for transport, Mr. Kinnock.

Is there really reform coming from Brussels? In a letter written on 21 March, the Director General of the Transport Commission says:

"The Commission has drafted an amendment to a Directive"— a well-known directive, with which the Minister will be familiar—

"to include a bull bar as an item that should not be too hard or sharp so as to cause an unacceptable risk of injury. This draft amendment has been discussed with member states and they hope that it will be accepted within the next few weeks. It will take a while for it to pass into law and then for it to be adopted by member states."

Sadly, the effects of the directive will be far more limited than the Bill, which seeks to ban the use of bull bars on all vehicles. It is certainly no substitute for the Bill, although it will, I believe, make it easier for the Government to accept it because action will be taken European wide and not just in this country.

The letter continues:

"The legislation will relate to new cars, and not vans"—

as I have already said, vans are becoming the main problem—

"and equipment sold as 'separate technical units'."

Again, that covers a huge range of bull bars, because many are sold by companies as accessories and are not fitted when they are new.

"The legislation is not retrospective in that it cannot encompass vehicles that are already on the roads."

We will have a ban from Europe that cannot cover more than 20 per cent. at the most of existing vehicles. There is no cavalry galloping over the horizon from Europe to rescue the Minister. The Euro ban will not cover vans, which must be about 50 per cent. of the vehicles involved, or bars that are sold as accessories.

I shall be as brief as I can, as many of these points have been made many times. I am reluctant to go through the long, bleak litany of names of those who have been killed by bull bars, but there have been many deaths: ranging from infants and toddlers to the elderly—one woman involved in an accident was in her 90s—and they happen in every part of the country.

I shall bring one case to the attention of the House. I know the family well, and the mother has been to the House recently. It is a case that must bear down on all of us as Members of Parliament, because this death followed last year's debate. As the child's mother rightly said, the House can act very swiftly when it wants to; when there is a major accident or major event, it concentrates all our attention. We had the debate a year ago, and other debates stretch back over two years. The child, Helen Baggs, whose picture I keep with my family pictures on my desk, died on the last day of the summer term last year. Rushing home excitedly from school with her sister, she ran into the path of a slow-moving Landrover with a ball bar attached. She was hit by the bar itself—the bracket on the bar broke in the impact. She lived for about seven days after, suggesting that her injuries were not instantly lethal. As the coroner said, Helen Baggs would almost certainly be alive now if it was not for that bull bar. We must all take it on our consciences that if we had acted swiftly last year we would have saved her life and, probably, if RAC figures are right, the other 70 unnecessary and avoidable deaths that have since occurred.

Any hon. Member today who wishes to see action taken speedily must ensure that the Bill is passed. If we do not pass it, we, as Members of Parliament, will be as responsible for future deaths, which will certainly occur, as a drunken driver at the wheel who had slain a child after taking a lethal gamble. We cannot do that. We must pass the Bill today. It is the only chance that this country has of a comprehensive ban that will save lives and avoid serious injuries. It is up to us now to reduce the crippling injuries and to save lives.

Bull bars reverse the life-saving culture of defensive driving and turn it into aggressive, lethal and offensive driving. Futile macho fashion accessories turn vehicles into child-killing machines. They intimidate and bully, and, tragically, they make trivial accidents serious ones and turn serious accidents into deaths. Fellow human beings are being sacrificed to what has become the foolish greed of the manufacturers and the vanity and macho feelings of irresponsible drivers.

Mr. Richard Spring (Bury St. Edmunds): I am most grateful to you, Madam Deputy Speaker, for the opportunity to contribute to the debate.

I unreservedly congratulate the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn). What he has sought to do in his campaign in the past few years is in the best traditions of Back Benchers. He has taken on board a cause which enjoys considerable public support—indeed, cross-party support—and has moved with it, and, I believe, has moved public opinion with him. I applaud him for what he has done and for his speech.

I am delighted to see present my hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London, because nobody has done more to highlight the issues of road safety in this country in an imaginative way. I believe that, in spirit, he accepts the underlying theme behind the Bill—the acceptance that bull bars cause grave problems for road safety considerations. I am sure that he will address that in due course.

I wish to comment on remarks made in the previous debate by the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths). He seemed to imply that Conservative Members of Parliament were not taking the issue of bull bars seriously. Yet the Opposition Benches are totally vacant. Only the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) is present. [Interruption.] I am sorry, I thought that the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) was a Front Bencher. It is a disgrace that the campaign is so ill supported by the hon. Gentleman's fellow Labour Members of Parliament, and I am horrified that no Liberal Democrat is here for the debate. Labour Members certainly cannot be talking to their farmers, which is precisely what many Conservative Members will be doing in the next day or two.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths (Edinburgh, South): We are adopting exactly the same position on this measure as we adopted on the earlier Bill. We want to give the Bill a fair wind, but there has been misleading information about reasons for not proceeding with the measure. The legislation is vital and the Bill is supported by many hon. Members. My hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) gave a good account of why it should proceed, and we look forward to the Minister assuring us that business will conclude before 2 o'clock so that the Bill is passed.

Mr. Spring: The hon. Gentleman is clearly not aware of the fact that I am one of the Bill's sponsors. The hon. Member for Newport, West is enjoying no support from Opposition Back Benchers. They are not here, and that is a reflection of the attitude of Labour Members.

Mr. Dover: The hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) says that he wants hon. Members to be here to support Bills that should be unopposed. Opposition Members who say that they want the Bill to be rushed through are not present. The earlier Bill was presented on a Friday when many of us were in our constituencies, some of which are distant. How on earth can we be in our constituencies and here at the same time? Labour Members are saying one thing and doing another. They say that they want the Bill to be rushed through, but they are not here to support it.

Mr. Spring: I agree with my hon. Friend, as will all Conservative Members.

Mr. Alan Williams: Is the hon. Gentleman aware of any Labour Member who opposes the legislation? Does he agree that the Bill will be stopped only by extended speeches by Conservative Members and the Minister? It makes sense for Opposition Members not to take part in the debate because that facilitates the Bill's progress. I have been in the House for 32 years and I am fully aware of how Governments operate on Fridays. The hon. Gentleman would be silly to try make this issue party political. There is consensus on the Bill.

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham) indicated dissent.

Mr. Williams: I gather that the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) is opposed to it. No doubt my hon. Friends will draw that to the attention of his constituents. Many parents in his constituency will want to know what the hon. Gentleman has to say on this matter.

Mr. Spring rose—

Madam Deputy Speaker (Dame Janet Fookes): Order. The purpose of Second Reading is to discuss the merits or otherwise of a Bill. It is not the occasion on which discuss who is here or who is not here.

Mr. Spring: I am grateful, Madam Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Norris: I shall be mindful of your advice, Madam Deputy Speaker. The issue is whether a Bill of this sort should be debated and thoroughly examined and whether we should accept the proposition, which is supported by my hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring), who is one of the Bill's sponsors, to ban aggressive bull bars. It is ludicrous to suggest that although we all support banning such bars we should simply nod the Bill through without serious examination. It is entirely right that hon. Members should seek to speak in the debate so that we can examine not whether we want to legislate against aggressive bull bars, but whether the Bill is the right mechanism to do that.

Mr. Alan Williams: On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. You said that a Bill's principles are discussed on Second Reading. Is it not also true that the place for detailed nut and bolt examination is in Committee?

Madam Deputy Speaker: Yes, but there is no reason why some details should not be considered on Second Reading, especially those that affect the Bill's principles.

Mr. Spring rose—

Mr. Norris: Further to that—

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. We cannot have points of order one upon another.

Mr. Spring: Progress on the Bill has been delayed not by Conservative Members but by constant Opposition interventions. I do not know whether Labour Members universally support the measure, but it is a fantastic parliamentary principle to say that if a Bill is supported we should not debate it. That is absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. Peter Atkinson: The Bill carries serious penalties of imprisonment or a level 5 fine, which is a considerable sum. It would be quite wrong for the House to nod through legislation that is incomplete and which would make people vulnerable to losing their freedom.

Mr. Spring: My hon. Friend is correct. In view of your ruling, Madam Deputy Speaker, I shall move to the essence of my speech.

My intense feelings on the subject arise from a personal experience. In December 1992 I was parking my car, a Volvo estate, in Bury St. Edmunds. It was stationary and in the rear view mirror I saw a four-by-four vehicle coming towards me at about 35 mph. It hit the back of my estate car. I saw it coming and wondered what damage the impact would cause as my estate car is supposedly one of the safest in existence with a protected outer steel chassis. I was appalled to find that the impact buckled the chassis of my car. The car was a write-off. That was a deeply shocking experience. That is why—I think that the hon. Gentleman will confirm this—I have in principle, all the way through, supported what he is trying to do.

An article in the Financial Times on 9 December 1995 dealt with the issue. Written by Stuart Marshall, it graphically summed up his feelings in a similar vein. He says:

> "It was morning school rush hour. Young mothers, many driving too fast, were arriving with their children. As I neared the school gates, a three-year-old slipped his mother's hand and started to run across the road. Because I was doing no more than 20mph . . . the Citroen Xantia pulled up almost instantly when I stamped on the brakes. Even so, the toddler was just touching the bonnet as I stopped.
> He was unharmed, but I would not like to say whether he or his mother were the more terrified. My heart rate was above normal, too. The Xantia's bonnet, by design, is pedestrian friendly. But what if I had been driving a recreational 4 x 4 with steel-tube bull bars across the front? A little boy would at best have been concussed, at worst received a fractured skull."

That graphically sums up the position. He goes on to say:

> "Interestingly, the Association of British Industry thought bull bars might increase the risk of a vehicle being stolen. A Range Rover or Mitsubishi Shogun with a hefty set of bull bars would, it reasons, be an even better car for ram raiding than one without them."

That is the sort of thinking of people who would steal a car for that purpose.

I can, therefore, genuinely say that I feel strongly about this subject. Bull bars are monstrosities, not fashion accessories. The hon. Member for Newport, West has said that they have been banned in Australia, where they originated. I am interested to hear that. I thought that it was only an urban ban.

Mr. Flynn: May I help with this? The ban is in urban areas. Bull bars have also been banned in Jersey from last week and in Cyprus. But my Bill covers a ban on public roads only.

Mr. Spring: I understand that. I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for making that point.

In the United States of America, bull bars are known as moose bars. In this country we do not have large beasts such as moose or kangaroos. Bull bars have no place in a temperate climate and in the United Kingdom with its wildlife. It is not like the United States or Australia. Even the beast of Bodmin moor is not especially large by all accounts. Therefore what goes on in the United States and in Australia is not relevant to the UK.

The main point, however, as that journalist graphically pointed out, is that bull bars are at the same level as a child's head. It may be a fashion that has caught on. It has spread from motor cars to lorries, to delivery vans, to buses and even, appallingly, to ambulances.

Mr. Andrew Rowe (Mid–Kent): May I draw a parallel from a different matter which remains persistently within the British safety regulations? The only people who can easily reach three-pronged sockets in domestic houses are toddlers, from whom we are supposed to keep three-pronged sockets away.

Mr. Spring: Exactly. The more we raise the level of consciousness about safety measures for children, the fewer fatalities we shall have in this country.

The Transport Research Laboratory has shown that a child may die as a result of a vehicle fitted with a bull bar travelling at only 12 mph, compared with a normal vehicle travelling at about 25 mph. As the hon. Gentleman said, the RAC recently said that it believed that the total number of fatalities as a result of bull bars was 70. Others, such as the Transport Research Laboratory, have argued that that number is too high and that the real figure is perhaps only half of that. The Association of Protection Bar Manufacturers has talked of only five deaths, but it would be bound to say that, would it not? And even if there were only five deaths, that would be five too many. Bull bars are a dangerous monstrosity.

Mr. Denis MacShane (Rotherham): If the hon. Gentleman goes into the House of Commons car park, especially when it is absolutely full, such as before a Division, he will see some vehicles fitted with bull bars. I am not saying that they belong to Members, because other people can park there, but should we not set an example by ensuring that no car can enter the Palace of Westminster if it is equipped with bull bars?

Mr. Spring: I take the hon. Gentleman's point. Largely as a result of the campaign of the hon. Member for Newport, West, I understand that there has been a substantial diminution in the number of vehicles in the House of Commons car park fitted with bull bars. I wish that there were none at all.

The two major road organisations, the RAC and the AA, have made very negative comments about bull bars. As I have said, the RAC released a report in February showing that the number of fatalities is twice what it was previously estimated to be. We have heard the oft-repeated and ghastly story of 12-year-old Victoria Moule, who was thrown no less than 30 ft up the road as a result of being hit by a Vauxhall Frontera, and a piece of her pelvic bone was broken.

The RAC has said that bull bars can cause injuries to drivers—this is the other significant point—by transferring the impact of a collision away from the car's crumple-zone panels so that the impact of the crash is felt around the car. Not only are bull bars dangerous externally when they hit people; they enhance the danger to passengers in and drivers of cars to which they are fitted. On both counts, they are extremely dangerous. Regardless of whether bull bars kill 70 people or one person per year, they are wrong. They are not a fashion accessory; they are a killing accessory. Tests in Germany suggest that the impact of a bull bar trebles the destructive impact on a human being. That is a terrifying statistic.

As I said earlier, I know that my hon. Friend the Minister is essentially sympathetic to what I am saying. I also know that there are difficulties in trying to integrate our procedures with European law. My hon. Friend will recall that he and I corresponded on the subject of fitting seat belts in minibuses carrying school children. Again, such provision could not be brought into British law unilaterally without European agreement, and I understand that in principle. I know that my hon. Friend is doing everything possible to persuade the Transport Commissioner, Mr. Kinnock, to speed up the process so that whatever blockages there are can be cleared and the legislation put in place.

The hon. Member for Newport, West mentioned—I am not clear about it—that Cyprus, and more recently Jersey, have banned bull bars. I understand that they may have a different relationship to the European Union than we have. Perhaps that is the point. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister will want to comment on that in due course. I very much regret, however, that it would appear that we cannot take unilateral action, which would be very popular. I hope that my hon. Friend will explain exactly why. However, that is no reason why others—such as organisations—cannot act.

I am pleased to see that the number of bull bars in the House of Commons car park has reduced substantially. I wish that it were zero—perhaps it is already. I am gratified that police authorities such as the Lothian and Borders police have banned bull bars on their vehicles and that many delivery organisations have done likewise.

I was delighted to receive last night a letter from DHL, an enormously successful and widespread organisation. Knowing that I am a sponsor of the Bill, DHL wrote saying that it would like to express on behalf of DHL International (UK) Ltd. its support for the forthcoming Bill for the prohibition of bull bars and saying that, following the public concerns about the safety implications for pedestrians posed by bull bars fitted to vehicles, DHL had removed the bull bars from all its vehicles to which they were fitted.

DHL has a good safety record; none of its vehicles had been involved in an accident, so it is not as though it was reacting to pressure from that quarter. It began the process of removing bull bars in October 1995. It took about three weeks and 250 man hours and was not cheap. It cost the company £60,000, but DHL felt that it was the right thing to do, not simply to improve its public image but because of the possibility that one of its vehicles might be responsible for a fatality. I endorse that sentiment.

Bull bars were originally fitted to 300 of DHL's vehicles out of a total of 627, but by October 1995 the figure had increased to 500. I am therefore very encouraged by the fact that that organisation, so well known world wide, has taken the initiative. Other organisations, not only delivery organisations, should take that route.

Mr. Rowe: If what my hon. Friend said earlier about the manifest increased risk to passengers is true, should not insurance companies consider that? Perhaps my hon. Friend was about to refer to that.

Mr. Spring: My hon. Friend makes a valid point. Several insurance companies are preparing or have begun to go down that route. We are having this comprehensive debate to bring the issues to light on the Floor of the House of Commons, after which they will no doubt be widely reported, especially in specialist magazines. I hope, therefore, that insurance companies will pick up my hon. Friend's point.

With that matter in mind, on my own initiative I have written to several organisations in the county of Suffolk. Yesterday I wrote to the leaders of St. Edmundsbury borough council and the leader of Forest Heath district council, asking them to set a best practice example in my constituency by encouraging councillors attached to those authorities plus all employees to remove their bull bars.

Twice I have written to the chairman of the highways committee of Suffolk county council to ask him to do the same for the county council. I regret to say that the gentleman has a bull bar fitted to his own vehicle. I was on BBC Radio Suffolk this morning discussing the Bill when a quotation was broadcast in which he said that he believed that there was no reason for him to remove the bull bar because he had no convincing evidence that bull bars were unsafe. I do not wish to personalise this issue, but I believe that he is setting a poor example. I have asked him to consider disallowing reimbursement payments to any councillor or council employee attached to Suffolk county council who has fitted bull bars on their vehicle. I would very much like that action to be taken.

I talked about my car being severely damaged. I believe—I hope that I shall not be corrected—that Volvo is the one manufacturer to have banned bull bars from being fitted. However, other manufacturers are moving down the same route. The Land Rover Discovery, for example, has a foam plastic variant. Mitsubishi has introduced a polyurethane bar and I understand that other manufacturers are going down that route, very much driven on by public opinion and by the gathering feeling that bull bars are nothing other than very dangerous items. I wish that car manufacturers would remove bull bars now from the specified list of options; they are invariably options and are not fitted automatically. Let us make the United Kingdom, from a car point of view, a macho-free zone.

I now turn to the European dimension, an issue that my hon. Friend the Minister will wish to address. Frankly, I find the whole issue confusing. In September 1995, the European Parliament backed a motion to ban bull bars but nothing much seems to have flowed from that. The European Commission is somewhat inhibited from taking action because of the attitude of Finland and Sweden. I find that difficult to understand. If Finland and Sweden have a particular problem with reindeer accidents, why should not the principle of subsidiarity be invoked? Moreover, most people in those two countries live in major urban areas such as Gothenburg, Stockholm and Helsinki, so it is not clear why they need to continue to have bull bars fitted to their vehicles. Even if they wish to have them, why cannot the principle of subsidiarity operate so that they can continue with bull bars while those of us who take a more sensible view are able to deal with the problem? That would be excellent.

There has also been talk, which I find rather disappointing, that an EC directive dealing comprehensively with the issue will not come through until October 1998. As the hon. Member for Newport, West said, the European Commission seemed to imply that the United Kingdom could take unilateral action, but only for a limited period of six months. It is not clear to me why that suggestion has not been taken up or why, as was hinted at the time by the European Commission, an extension could not be added. I understand that the British Government could ban non-approved bull bars, although I accept that that is a small number of cases.

Let us consider public opinion on the matter. Some 87 per cent. of readers of Auto Express, when canvassed, wished to have bull bars banned. The evidence is that with bull bars the crumple zone, far from protecting the vehicle and passengers, actually increases the danger to them. That is why the readership of Auto Express took that view. I understand that local authorities in Kent, Hampshire and Surrey have banned vehicles with bull bars from cross-country driving.

What is to be done? Lord Kinnoull sought recently to introduce the Road Traffic (Amendment) Bill in another place. I was interested to find out exactly what their Lordships discussed. Perhaps my hon. Friend the Minister will explain a little further what was meant by the following observation by Lord Goschen in reply to the debate:

> "Preventing the use of bull bars on all vehicles would be difficult to achieve at the present time. Popular models with bull bars fitted as original equipment by the manufacturers are likely to have been granted European type approval in respect of external projections. The free circulation of such vehicles cannot be impeded. That point was taken up by the noble Earl, Lord Attlee, and the noble Baroness, Lady Thomas . . . Such European considerations, and the fact that as yet there is no specific hard evidence as to the effect of bull bars on injuries to people, are partly why we have held back from proposing national action. We hope that when we have the results of the work that has been undertaken, we shall be in a much better position to judge the issues empirically."

I am nonplussed by all that, but I am sure that my hon. Friend the Minister will deal with it. Lord Goschen further said:

> "The other approach on the European basis, as agreed by Mr. Kinnock, is for the Commission to bring forward an amendment to the external projections directive. That is a separate measure from the general measure concerning softer car fronts. That could be achieved very much more quickly.
> Why do we not take unilateral action? I have explained that in a field that is so heavily governed by European directives on type approval, we feel that we would be in a position where we could very well be challenged in the courts because of the considerable body of legislation on type approval. That, and for the reason that I have given of ongoing research, is why we consider that getting speedy European action is very much more satisfactory and legally defensible than taking the national action that is proposed."—[Official Report, House of Lords, 17 January 1996; Vol. 568, c. 691-93.]

I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will be able to comment on that.

Penultimately, I want to touch on the relationship of Jersey and Cyprus to the European Union. Recently, when Jersey decided to ban bull bars, the RAC spokesman, Edmund King, said:

"Jersey's rules are based on UK legislation and therefore the same interpretation of the rules could be made throughout Europe."

My hon. Friend the Minister should comment on that.

Finally, in correspondence with my hon. Friend the Minister in the autumn, I received a letter dated 23 October 1995 in which he said:

"With regard to the legal position of bull bars, it is not at all clear what we can actually do. Most bull bars, and probably all those fitted to new vehicles, comply with the technical requirements of Council Directive 74/483/EEC on 'External Projections'. The articles of this Directive say that no Member State may prohibit the use of a vehicle on grounds relating to external projections if the vehicle conforms to the requirements of the Directive. We are in communication with the European Commission to clarify what we could and could not enforce."

The European Commission seems to have suggested that we could, in limited circumstances, undertake unilateral action if it was on a temporary basis. Will my hon. Friend the Minister comment on that?

Mr. Norris: Will my hon. Friend, as a sponsor of the Bill, express a view on the value of our taking action clearly limited to a few months' duration, after which, assuming that there had been no legal challenge in the meantime, the provision would lapse? Is that the way in which the House should proceed on a matter of such importance?

Mr. Spring: My hon. Friend raises a valid point. The point of this debate is to give him more strength in his negotiations with the European Commission to resolve the matter as quickly as possible. The fact that the Bill enjoys cross-party support and the overwhelming backing of public opinion in the United Kingdom should send a message to him. Whatever can be done to resolve the problem permanently should be done. I am confident that my hon. Friend will be able to do that as speedily as possible.

Mr. Flynn: Will the hon. Gentleman make it clear, as perhaps I did not in my speech, that the letter from Europe last May set out three methods for Britain to take unilateral action to ban bull bars? In connection with only one of those was a temporary ban mentioned. The other two methods suggested would have been permanent bans, and Europe has confirmed three times in the past six weeks that we can still choose any one of those three methods on our own.

Mr. Spring: With your permission, Mr. Deputy Speaker, perhaps my hon. Friend the Minister would care to address that point.

Mr. Norris: That intervention by the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) has produced a version of the correspondence greatly different from my understanding of it. No doubt the Commission may have suggested that there are three courses of action open to the United Kingdom Government, but the Commission has agreed with me, and the Commissioner has agreed with me personally face to face, that none of the three options presents a satisfactory long-term solution. That is the point that I was asking my hon. Friend to address, and I repeat it. I fear that the hon. Member for Newport, West is in danger of misleading the House if he suggests otherwise. I do not mean that he would knowingly wish to mislead; nevertheless what he said would be misleading.

Mr. Spring: I conclude by repeating that I support the Bill, I support the principle behind it, and I believe that the overwhelming majority of people in Britain also support it in principle. There is no reason why, while the negotiations between my hon. Friend the Minister and the European Commission are going on, there cannot be unilateral action by organisations throughout this country.

I hope that what comes out of the debate will strengthen my hon. Friend's authority in those negotiations. The message is loud and clear, and I know that he has already heard it, and will hear it again during the debate. It is that action should be taken as soon as possible. I have great pleasure in supporting everything that the hon. Member for Newport, West has done. I thank him for the dogged campaign that he has undertaken, and I commend the Bill to the House.

Mr. Denis MacShane (Rotherham): I shall now make what I hope will be the shortest speech on the Floor of the House in my career. I totally agree with everything that my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) has said, and also with the powerful case made by the hon. Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring).

I wish simply to underline what has been made clear in all the written communications from Europe. In the letter from Transport Commissioner Neil Kinnock to the Minister dated May last year, the Commission outlined three specific measures that the United Kingdom could take. The director-general of the transport directorate within the Commission, in correspondence with an individual in this country dated March this year, stressed that the United Kingdom has the power to take unilateral action.

In a letter dated 27 March, not three days ago, the Royal Automobile Club reported a meeting of the European Commission with members of both the transport and the trade directorates, at which Commission officials were adamant that there were courses of action that the UK Government could take unilaterally.

It would therefore be wrong—indeed, bordering on the misleading—for the Minister to suggest that the Government do not have powers to adopt such measures.

I finish by urging Conservative Members—

Mr. Dover: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. MacShane: I was just about to finish.

Mr. Dover: Just one quick query. Can the hon. Gentleman tell us the date of the letter from the Commissioner? The Minister may have met the Commissioner long after that date.

Mr. MacShane: As I said, the letter was dated May last year. But since then there have been two written communications, one dated March 1996—we cannot get much more up to date than that—confirming what was set out in that letter. So if there is to be any obstruction, it will be on the part of the Government.

Mr. Norris: The hon. Gentleman used the word "misleading"; I have also used that word. It might be helpful to him, in considering which of us is right, if I quote from a letter that I received from Neil Kinnock on 7 November last year. He said:

"while I agree that the suggestions I made for action by the UK in my letter to you of 24 May do not constitute a long-term solution, they do nonetheless offer possibilities for action by the UK without waiting".

A key to this debate is that that was an opinion that he expressed, which is not shared by the people who advise me on such matters. Even if the situation were as the Commissioner suggests, he says in terms that the measures he proposes do not represent a long-term solution.

Mr. MacShane: In the long term, we shall all be dead. In the meantime, can we at least protect some children from these wretched bull bars? Every written communication and every meeting between the Commissioner and the Transport Select Committee and the European Legislation Select Committee confirmed what he said last year, and what has been said as late as this month.

I appeal to Conservative Members, whether they are Back Benchers or Ministers, and after two excellent speeches on the issue from both sides of the House, not to talk out the Bill. If one child dies as a result of a bull bar injury because the Bill is not allowed to go into Committee, the consciences of those who talked out the Bill will rest heavy.

Mr. Peter Atkinson (Hexham): I do not want to bring a gritty tone into the debate, but I must say that I do not agree with the Bill. Perhaps one of the more unattractive features of private Members' days in the House, on Fridays, is that the majority of the Bills that we seek to introduce are those that seek to stop people doing something that they want to do. We must consider carefully before we do that, because the right to choose and to make one's own decisions in life is extremely precious.

The hon. Members for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) and for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) used an emotional arm-lock on us. They said that if one more child should die because of an accident, we would be to blame. If they want to save lives, they should introduce a Bill to ban young men under 25 driving high-performance cars. If we want to reduce the death rate on the roads, those are the people whom we shall have to stop. High-performance cars are no more and no less a fashion accessory than are bull bars.

I make it clear that I have no particular enthusiasm for bull bars. I do not have them on any of the cars that I own because I find no need for them. The hon. Member for Newport, West said that they are macho and unattractive, but the House's purpose is not to legislate on people's taste; the House's purpose is much more serious than that. I may not like beards, for instance, and I may not like bow ties, but I do not say that the hon. Member for Newport, West should shave off his beard or that you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, should not wear a bow tie. Those are purely matters of taste.

If one could demonstrate that bull bars, as they are currently designed, are without doubt dangerous, the situation would of course change; that is what we must debate carefully. In many respects, the Bill is defective. It proposes, of course, a gaol sentence of three months—

Mr. Flynn: Maximum.

Mr. Atkinson: It proposes a maximum gaol sentence of three months—I take the point—for anyone who has a bull bar on his car, and a very heavy fine, up to level 5. So the Bill is a serious measure. The problem is that the data on which the hon. Gentleman bases his Bill are incomplete, and we do not yet have proof that bull bars are essentially dangerous. The proof is not yet at a stage at which we should be able to take away someone's right to do something that he wishes to do.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring)—with whom I hate to disagree, because we have agreed on virtually everything that we have come across in the House—said that bull bars are a fashion accessory. To some extent, they are not a fashion accessory. My constituency compromises much hill country in the north of England. We had a lot of snow this winter, and people need four-wheel-drive vehicles. Many use four-wheel-drive pick-up trucks for farm work in which vehicles can easily be damaged.

Mr. Flynn: The Bill deals with the use of bull bars on roads, but there would be no problem with using demountable bull bars for farming purposes and on private roads.

Mr. Atkinson: With the greatest respect, the hon. Gentleman is making an entirely impractical suggestion. Bull bars are heavy and thus difficult to fix to vehicles. The idea of a demountable bar that can be removed as a vehicle crosses a road from one field to another and then replaced is utterly ludicrous.

Mr. Flynn: There is a range of farm implements that are not allowed to be used on public roads. They have to be taken off when tractors use such roads.

Mr. Atkinson: I do not wish to continue this agricultural debate, but those who know about farm implements will understand that it takes a long time to remove such an implement from, for example, the back of a tractor. The hon. Gentleman's suggestion is impractical.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds said that there are no moose or reindeer in this country, but there are deer. One of the reasons why the Lothian and Borders police fitted bull bars to their four-wheel-drive vehicles was the danger of hitting deer. I have seen vehicles—no doubt my hon. Friend has, too—which have hit deer while travelling at 50 mph. In such circumstances, deer can cause a great deal of damage. In Scotland, the problem is caused by red deer.

Mr. Spring: With respect, my hon. Friend misses the point. Lothian and Borders police have in fact removed bull bars from their vehicles. My hon. Friend will know that my constituency contains Thetford forest, in which there are a considerable number of deer. Sometimes, they are, regrettably, involved in accidents but, as devoted as I am to the deer in Thetford forest, in the grand scheme of things, I would prefer any fatal collision to involve a deer rather than a child.

Mr. Atkinson: I understand that Lothian and Borders police have removed their bull bars, but the reason why they introduced them and why some people like having them on their vehicles is the damage caused by hitting deer. The point that I am trying to make is that bull bars are not exclusively macho accessories—for some people, they are a useful motoring accessory.

Mr. Spring: Bull bars represent an external danger when hitting, for example, a child, but we know that the crumple zone and the force of energy are such that, if the energy is absorbed by the steel bull bar, the effect is to reduce the safety of the driver and any passengers. Bull bars are not only externally dangerous, but do not preserve the life of the driver or passengers. In fact, the contrary is demonstrably true.

Mr. Atkinson: I do not want to dispute those particular points, but my point is that people have bull bars on their cars not only for the sake of fashion—although, if they do, that is their choice and taste—but because they need them on, for example, vehicles used regularly on farms, in areas such as the highlands of Scotland, the borders of England and Wales and, indeed, Suffolk, where there are large deer populations. Bull bars are more than fashion accessories to such people.

Before the Bill is passed on the nod, as has been suggested, we must determine the facts. There are two questions to be asked. Are bull bars genuinely a threat to life? I shall return to that in a moment. Secondly, can they be made safe? Can we ensure that, if people want to fit bull bars to their cars, the bull bars are not dangerous?

One of the difficulties with this issue, as with all safety and road safety issues, is that as soon as it is raised, a whole host of pressure groups come out of the woodwork to grind their axes to show their members that they are clever, pretty and enthusiastic, so that they can raise more funds by getting more members. Often in such circumstances, the pressure groups—sadly, in this case, including the RAC—make predictions and often the data, facts and truth get rather blurred. In this case, that is what has happened, because if we consider the available figures in detail, the forecasts of death and injury are extremely misleading.

I accept that the figures that I shall give to the House were produced by another pressure group. I am grateful to Off Road and 4 Wheel Drive magazine for supplying me with the figures.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths rose—

Mr. Spring rose—

Mr. Atkinson: Hon. Members may stand up all over the House, but I wish to finish my point. I am aware that the magazine is also a pressure group, but my point is that we must treat the data that we have at the moment with great suspicion.

Mr. Griffiths: Does not the hon. Gentleman accept that exactly the same argument was used in the 1970s about seat belt wearing? There were thousands of unnecessary deaths and tens of thousands of unnecessary injuries. The facts here are overwhelming.

Mr. Atkinson: The hon. Gentleman says that the facts are overwhelming, but in my view the facts are not overwhelming. We should forget the projections. We have had projections of 35 deaths a year from the Transport Research Laboratory, based on figures collected by some police forces in the sample area that my hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London mentioned. We have had figures of up to 70 deaths from the RAC, but I am not entirely sure about the basis of those figures. But other figures, produced by the Association of Protection Bar Manufacturers—which, I accept, is a vested interest—[Interruption.] The hon. Member for Newport, West may laugh, but that organisation represents a £25-million-a-year business, and 1,000 employees. I accept that it is a pressure group, but it is no more and no less of a pressure group—and its evidence is no more and no less questionable—than the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents or any other organisation.

Mr. Flynn: The hon. Gentleman obviously does not have a financial interest because he would have declared it, but he is speaking on behalf of a group that has an interest in making money out of selling bull bars. The other groups that we have quoted are safety groups, which are interested in road safety and in the well-being of pedestrians and people who drive cars. There are no authoritative figures from his organisation or any other, but the best we can do is to work on the imperfect figures we have. The independent bodies say that there will be 35 or 70 deaths a year.

Mr. Atkinson: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for accepting that the figures are imperfect. That is exactly the point that I am trying to make, so we do not disagree on that. So we have a situation in which the hon. Gentleman is basing—by his own admission—the need for the Bill on imperfect figures. I do not believe that we should take away someone's liberty and ability to choose on figures that we all admit are imperfect.

A cynic may say that the Association of Protection Bar Manufacturers undoubtedly has a vested interest—the industry makes £25 million a year and employs 1,000 people—but so do the road safety pressure groups. Life in a pressure group today depends on one's success in increasing membership and obtaining funds. That is how people in pressure groups keep their jobs and that is how pressure groups earn the money to advertise for more members. Both sides are grinding axes and—not unreasonably—pushing for their vested interests.

We discovered that, in 1994, there were only six deaths of pedestrians who were killed by cars fitted with bull bars, and only four of those could be blamed in any way on the fact that the car was equipped with a bull bar. One famous case, which the hon. Member for Newport, West mentioned, involved a Mitsubishi Shogun, fitted with a bull bar, which was claimed to have killed a pedestrian. But when the coroner's inquest on the victim examined the evidence in detail, it discovered that he was under the influence of drink at the time, had walked into the side of the car and was thrown on to some railings at the edge of the pavement. That is how the coroner reported that, but it went down as an accident involving a car with a bull bar.

I am trying to point out that my hon. Friend the Minister should not proceed in any way with the legislation until the data are absolutely copper-bottomed and we are able to show that the right to choose should be taken away from people.

Mr. Flynn: Is the hon. Gentleman saying that, although we know from all independent expert opinion in the world that bull bars kill and will kill many more people, we have to wait until we are absolutely certain of that and take our action after the deaths? Is he happy to have those deaths on his conscience?

Mr. Atkinson: I am not happy to have any deaths on my conscience, but is the hon. Gentleman happy to have the deaths that will be caused by young drivers under the age of 25 driving high-performance cars on his? He is saying that we should outlaw everything that could cause any chance of a death, otherwise all hon. Members will have endlessly sleepless nights. It is a preposterous suggestion that we should be railroaded into passing bad legislation on the basis that, if we do not do so, we shall not sleep at night. That is not a way in which the House can continue.

On a more positive note, bull bars are being redesigned by responsible manufacturers that are members of the Association of Protection Bar Manufacturers. In Germany, they have already developed a bar that may well meet the high road safety standards required there.

Mr. Flynn: The hon. Gentleman may have noticed that the Bill refers to bars made of metal, not the type that he may be about to describe. Can he tell the House—he has not answered this question—whether he is being paid for his contribution to the debate today?

Mr. Atkinson: I find that an insulting remark. If I were being paid in any way for doing this, I would have declared it. I had absolutely no knowledge of the Association of Protection Bar Manufacturers until yesterday. When I saw the Bill, I took the trouble to ring Mr. Scott, the editor of Off Road and 4 Wheel Drive magazine, to ask whether there were two sides to the story. He said, "Yes, there are." He told me that, if I wanted to hear the other side, I should ring up that organisation. That is my sole interest. In fact, I have not even communicated with the association. I simply received an extensive fax, stating its case. I assure you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that no cheque was attached to the fax.

Manufacturers are studying ways to make bull bars more user friendly, by making the surface of impact much softer and making them from plastic, which will not be caught within the provisions of the hon. Gentleman's Bill. The bars should have energy-absorbing features and should not have any features likely to catch or entrap pedestrians or cyclists. They should also spread the load of impact over as large an area as possible and not block the headlights.

The hon. Member for Newport, West mentioned the problem with airbags and bull bars. The magazine states:

> "Jeep, Land Rover, Mercedes-Benz and Mitsubishi all crash-tested their airbag-equipped vehicles and found there was no chance . . . of malfunction" if the vehicle was fitted with standard bull bars. Only Suzuki recommends that its vehicles should not be fitted with the bars.

The European aspects have been touched on. No doubt my hon. Friend the Minister will deal with what the European regulation is, but as I understand it—perhaps he will put me right—the European Community is working on a directive to make the bonnets of all cars user friendly. A European Union-designed car front is a slightly chilling thought. No doubt, we shall be seeing stories in the newspapers saying that the traditional Rolls-Royce lady will have to disappear. That will also have a considerable impact on vehicles such as Land Rovers, Range Rovers and the other four-wheel-drives, which are much heavier than ordinary cars.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds talked of Volvos and read out an illustration about a Citroen Xantia. By their nature, four-wheel-drives are heavier and bigger. Irrespective of whether it is fitted with a bull bar, there is always the likelihood that if a pedestrian is struck by a four-wheel-drive vehicle, he will suffer more injuries than if he is struck by a family saloon. That is probably inevitable. Similarly, if a pedestrian is struck by a heavy goods vehicle, his risk of injury will be vastly greater than if he is struck by a Ford Fiesta. That is one of the facts of life. Surely we do not propose to ban Range Rovers, Land Rovers and heavy goods vehicles.

I do not support the Bill. I would not wish to see its enactment. I shall have to live with my conscience. It is the absolute duty of the House to ensure that the legislation that passes through it is properly thought out and properly discussed, and does not gratuitously take away the right of the individual to make choices about his life style and to make decisions.

Mr. Den Dover (Chorley): I am an agnostic in my attitude to the Bill, but I think that it goes over the top. Threats of possible victimisation of fellow colleagues do not go down well with me.

In many instances, bull bars are found not only on the front of vehicles. There is talk of offensive weapons on vehicles, but there are bars on the corners of vehicles to protect lights. They are to be found on lorries as well as on cars and four-by-four vehicles. They are also on the rear of vehicles. Others may not call those bars bull bars, but I do. They are bars that provide protection. Recently I have experienced two instances in which, unfortunately, my car lost its nearside front winkers and lights, both front and rear. I would have been delighted to have some sort of protection. The bill was virtually £100 for two small pieces of glasswork.

Bull bars are fashion accessories. There is a tremendous accessory market throughout the transport industry, and long may it last. Many jobs depend on it. I have no objection to vehicle owners using bull bars as fashion accessories. They make the vehicle look more appropriate to the circumstances in which they want to use it. They attract vehicle enthusiasts generally. The magazine industry that is based on the latest gadgetry and fashion is to be applauded. Computers, cars and vehicles generally are involved. I welcome the industries that have mushroomed over the past five or 10 years as a result of the interest in accessories.

The design of these appliances is all-important. We are talking about pedestrians being hurt by bull bars, but there is nothing to stop them being designed and produced using materials such as polyurethane. If we adopted that approach, damage would not be caused to pedestrians if they were hit. At the same time, vehicles would be protected along with their occupants. Such bull bars could be attractive. They could be produced in all colours. I see no reason why they should be considered as ferocious accessories. I accept that there are some mad people who want to assert their authority on the road, and we are aware of road rage, but many people look after their own vehicles and are proud of them.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: Does the hon. Gentleman accept that the bars about which he is talking would be exempt under clause 2? The example that he has given is a bull bar that would be exempt from the Bill's provisions. Has he not read the Bill?

Mr. Dover: I do not want tight, restrictive legislation that could lead, as my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) said, to imprisonment. We should not be in the game of over-regulating car users. Vehicle users generally are going about their business, enjoying leisure activities or travelling to work. We do not want to put unnecessary restrictions on them. We want instead to ensure that they have vehicles that are fit for the purpose to which they want to put them, and that they can ride where they wish and how they wish.

It is important that, as well as protecting pedestrians or anyone else, bull bars protect vehicles and their occupants. Clearly, impact absorbtion is important also.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bury for St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring) mentioned children in minibuses. Minibuses, frankly, are open to impact, particularly by lorries, and I dread to think what might happen if a minibus with 20 or so children scrambling about inside without seat belts was hit by a lorry. In my book, there is nothing wrong in having protection back and front, ensuring that the reinforcement is there, in the interests of protecting the occupants, particularly those of a tender age.

I draw the attention of the House to a note from the Library on bull bars, which has been alluded to. It relates to personal injury road accidents in 1994. Twenty-nine police authorities listed in the briefing produced figures. I shall raise one particular point. Under the heading, "Accident distribution", the table lists the number of accidents that were fatal, serious or slight. The total population covered by the 29 police forces that reported bull bar accidents is approximately 29 million—well over half the population of the United Kingdom. The figures show clearly that the total number of accidents involving a vehicle fitted with a bull bar, or pedestrian accidents involving such a vehicle, amount to only 1 per cent. of the total accidents in those police authorities.

One might say, "That's irrelevant. So what?" The fact is that I asked the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) how many vehicles he thought had bull bars fitted. He said that the number was reducing, and that people were removing bull bars. Fine. He estimated that there were 500,000 such vehicles in this country. I think that at the most there are 25 million vehicles in this country. Perhaps my hon. Friend the Minister knows the exact number—

Mr. Norris: There are 24 million.

Mr. Dover: Half a million out of, say, 25 million—to make the arithmetic easy—is, I think, 2 per cent. In other words, the hon. Gentleman has said that 2 per cent. of vehicles are fitted with bull bars, yet in the police authorities only 1 per cent. of accidents involve such vehicles.

Mr. Flynn: I do not want to mislead the hon. Gentleman. I said at some length that that survey is entirely discredited, from the evidence of the police themselves. There is no way to explain how one county force reported 129 casualties, and a neighbouring county reported none. The report is not plausible, because it was not treated with any seriousness by the people who took part. Those who have analysed the figures, from some of the police forces that the hon. Gentleman mentioned, who did take it seriously, have come to the conclusion that there were 70 deaths and 400 serious accidents. They are not pressure groups; they are independent bodies, such as the Transport Research Laboratory and the RAC.

Mr. Dover: I welcome that intervention. All that I am trying to point out is that the figure is statistically significant. Otherwise, surely those police forces would have made a nil return or just said, "Sorry, we don't have the detailed information." Perhaps some of the areas do not have many accidents, or have zero accidents involving bull bars. As we know, statistics can be twisted to show anything, but what I am saying is that approximately 2 per cent. of vehicles are fitted with bull bars, but only 1 per cent. of accidents involve such vehicles. One can give equal weighting to the figures, and the table from the police authorities is official. A new survey by the RAC shows that 70 deaths a year could—I emphasise the word "could"—be caused by bull bars. I would put that against the figures in the brief from the Library. The House of Commons Library has no axe to grind and provides us with wonderfully accurate and unbiased briefings.

We must be careful not to prejudge the issue on numbers alone. I am agnostic on the issue. People should be free to fit to their vehicles attachments that they think will protect them. If Parliament thinks that people are going over the top, it should introduce gentle regulations and guidelines advising that certain components should be modified or reduced in their effect. That is better than introducing a draconian measure that hints at victimisation, to which I take great exception.

I am not in favour of the Bill as drafted. More needs to be done, and I am delighted that the Minister has met his opposite number in the Commission and has had several constructive discussions. The correspondence between them has been made available to us. That is a responsible approach, and the way ahead should be to legislate lightly. We should reject this draconian Bill.

1.5 pm

Mr. Piers Merchant (Beckenham): I am afraid that I fundamentally disagree with my hon. Friend the Member for Chorley (Mr. Dover). We are debating the serious matter of road safety and, in view of the potential danger of road vehicles and the real danger as shown by accident statistics, it is incumbent upon Parliament and the nation to ensure that steps are taken to require all motor vehicles to comply with the highest standards of safety. That should be a mandatory requirement. One cannot allow individuals to make decisions about fittings on their cars that are designed to protect their own safety when what might provide safety for them may be to the detriment of others. We require impartial, carefully calculated and scientific engineering design that will enable cars and other vehicles using our public roads to have the highest degree of inbuilt safety.

Like many hon. Members, my attention was first drawn to bull bars and the potential risk by constituents. I was vaguely aware of such additions to vehicles but I had not thought about the safety aspect. I had assumed that, in the 1990s, additions that sprouted on cars were subjected to exhaustive tests and complied with the highest safety standards. Perhaps that assumption is a damnation of the system.

When I received letters and phone calls from constituents I became very concerned, because the evidence suggested that these additions to vehicles gave rise to great risk and that people were being killed because of them. I listened carefully to the comments, many of which were not deeply scientific but were based on commonsense judgment. I was contacted by a local GP, Dr. Roger Wells, who was motivated purely by his own judgment and his medical knowledge of the damage that can be caused when a person is hit at certain levels of the body by a fast-moving piece of metal, which of course describes a bull bar.

I looked into the matter in more detail and was surprised to find that tests had not been carried out before bull bars becoming available. In my naivety, I always assumed that a vehicle had to meet safety regulations on car bumpers and the collapsible elements of a car's structure for it to receive type approval and to minimise the damage not only, of course, to the driver and passenger, but to pedestrians. I am disappointed, therefore, that, in a way, we seem to be going backwards: something has come in first and we are talking about the safety implications only now.

One point has been missed.

Mr. Alan Williams: The hon. Gentleman makes a lucid case. Will he reflect on the fact that many of the libertarian arguments adduced today for opposing the Bill were the same type of arguments that were used to try to prevent the compulsory use of crash helmets? Now, everybody recognises that lives have been saved and people have not been turned into cabbages because they do not suffer the serious injuries that they otherwise would have suffered. Today, we are hearing almost a rerun of that pterodactyl case.

Mr. Merchant: That is true in relation to crash helmets and safety belts. I am not a libertarian, but I have some libertarian tendencies in the sense that I do not like unnecessary state intervention or unnecessary regulation, but that is not to say that I reject regulation if it is necessary. When it comes to safety and, especially, individual safety on the road, an extremely dangerous place, regulation is justified.

I want to inject one word of caution. As far as I am aware, today's discussion has linked bull bars with the danger that they can cause in an accident, but there has not been much discussion of the other contributory causes. That is not, in any sense, a defence of bull bars—no one would think, from what I have said, that I am in that line of business—but we must bear it in mind that, for a bull bar to cause damage, there must be at least one additional contributory factor: speed, error by one of the parties involved and so on.

That is an important point, not just because it puts the whole thing in proper perspective. During research into the causes of accidents, apparent anomalies can emerge as the accident is probably multi-factorial: it could be ascribed to speed, to weather conditions or to a pedestrian's mistake. Statistics might not show that the bull bar played an important part in an accident. However, the reverse can be true. We can fall into the mistake of thinking that only the bull bar is to blame when other factors also contributed to causing the accident.

Mr. Norris: My hon. Friend's observation is especially acute bearing in mind the fact that, at 40 mph, more than 80 per cent. of people involved in a pedestrian accident are likely to die, whether the vehicle has a soft front or a bull bar. That is a regrettable fact that we should never forget. It is in that area that some of the analytical difficulties lie.

Mr. Merchant: Yes. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for making that point.

I reach two conclusions from this. First, important though it is to legislate on this matter, we must keep it in context and be cautious about the statistics, whatever they are and whenever they arise. Secondly, in legislating, we must bear it in mind that other action must be taken in the realms of road safety. Speed in particular is a major cause of accidents, but there are others too.

I know that my hon. Friend the Minister will well remember this. I have spoken in the House many times on road safety matters, which are a particular concern of mine, and on previous Bills on the subject, some of which have passed into law. I have always been motivated by the general desire to achieve a reduction in accidents. The law has an important part to play in that, but it is mistake to think that any one measure alone will achieve everything that we want. Nevertheless, the issue of bull bars has been in the public domain for some time. Months, indeed years, have passed in which we have been able to identify a cause of serious damage to humans on roads without taking any real action. I greatly regret that.

Evidence from the RAC, the Parliamentary Advisory Council on Transport Safety, road safety officers and RoSPA has mounted, and action has been taken by companies such as DHL, which has been mentioned, and insurance companies such as CGA Insurance, all of which I welcome, but none of which has yet taken us the necessary further step to legislative action. That seems largely to be because of confusion over the roles of the Government and the European Union. It seems that, all too often, the EU acts when it is not necessary and fails to act when it is necessary. There is no doubt that if the EU were determined enough, action could be taken at European level. I would, however, very much prefer that action were taken at national level, and it is regrettable that, under our treaty arrangements, and so on, that does not entirely seem possible.

We should be listening to the day-to-day experience in this country, and acting on it. I was in touch with Andrew Rogers of the Bromley road safety unit in my borough and quickly discovered that, based on their professional judgment, the head of the unit and the borough's director of engineering, Gordon Hayward, are totally opposed to bull bars, and say that the sooner that they are removed from all vehicles the better.

I rely heavily on such experience and judgment because such men have the full-time task of monitoring road safety at local level. They are not sitting behind a desk compiling statistics—valid though they may be—or talking about it, as we do in the House. They are out there at the sharp end, at street level, seeing what happens and judging where there is safety and where there is not. They do not make their judgment on the basis of statistics, as I understand that the Metropolitan police force is not among the forces conducting a statistical analysis.

It is important to look at the wider statistics on accidents. The 1995 accident figures for Bromley statistics showed a rise in the number of deaths from nine to 12 since the previous year. That occurred after many years of a declining trend in the number of fatal accidents. There has also been an increase in serious accidents from 115 to 129, and 275 accidents in the past year have affected people under the age of 18. Unfortunately, those figures are also matched nationally. Figures published yesterday showed an increase in road deaths nationally, which I very much regret. It follows great achievements in continuing reductions in the death rate on the roads over the past decade. We must therefore double our efforts in all directions to do everything that we can to reduce accidents, deaths and serious injuries. The Bill introduced by the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) will play an important part in that process.

Mr. Dover: Has my hon. Friend any knowledge of the number of accidents involving vehicles with bull bars in or near his constituency? I would be most interested in the answer.

Mr. Merchant: My hon. Friend must have missed my point. When I was reporting the views of road safety officials in Bromley, I said that they did not have those figures because the Met was not one of the forces collecting them. I sincerely hope that it will conduct such research and collect figures. I would very much welcome that. However, I felt that I could rely on the professional judgment of the road unit, based not on statistics but on the experience of men who have been in the business long enough to have a good feel. In a way, I would rather rely on that than simply on statistics that are capable of many interpretations.

Mr. Dover: Does my hon. Friend know of any newsworthy unfortunate accidents in his area? Has he been approached by many people—victims or drivers—about this issue?

Mr. Merchant: Yes, I have been approached by many people; I said at the start of my speech that my interest had originally stemmed from that.

It is not up to me to analyse individual accidents. I would be in danger of using only hearsay evidence. I have heard of some, and I have read details of accidents outside my constituency in which bull bars clearly played an important part in inflicting injuries, but I hope that we would not need to base our judgment entirely on the evidence of fatalities that have occurred. I would hope, as I said when I was discussing safety measures on vehicles, that we could be forward-looking enough to work out where accidents would be at their worst and take steps to prevent them from happening.

Pertinently, the hon. Member for Newport, West mentioned the macho image of driving. Why do people want bull bars on their vehicles? In general, they are not put on for safety reasons. The signs are that they do not improve the safety even of the occupants of the car, and some studies say the reverse. No; people put bull bars on their vehicles because it is a fad—a trend. Unfortunately, motoring is very susceptible to trends. It should not be.

The object of getting in a vehicle is to travel and it should be to do so reasonably comfortably and, above all, as safely as possible. I deprecate fashion accessories that have nothing to do with safety or with the drive. Moreover, this fad is dubious because it panders to people's image of driving as an aggressive, macho power kick, and that is one of the most dangerous elements evident when someone is behind a wheel. I start from a position of considerable doubt, even if there were no evidence of danger, because of the psychological aspect.

Bull bars are a visual element. The definition of a bull bar in the Bill is a "protection system". There is evidence that in many cases it is not a protection system but a decorative, visual system. I hope that the hon. Member for Newport, West takes note of that.

I am worried about the reference to a "metal" bar because, although I have no evidence for saying so, common sense tells me that a bar might be made of other materials that might be equally dangerous. They might be equally tough—as are carbon fibre-based materials—or they might on impact do equally serious damage. A plastic bar might fracture, producing sharp edges that would drive into someone's side. The Bill's scope should be not narrowed but widened.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring) mentioned a survey carried out by RoSPA and Auto Express, which showed that three quarters of those surveyed believed that the bars were fitted to vehicles only because they were fashionable and that 90 per cent. of the readers of Auto Express—people in driving for driving's sake—wanted bull bars banned. Eighty-nine per cent. believed that bull bars were dangerous. The public view is perceptive and should be taken into account when we examine such issues.

I made passing reference to PACTS. Its conclusions are interesting. Its members are experienced people who know what they are talking about and have considered the matter in detail. The council said in September 1995:

"Given widespread public concern, the government should introduce national legislation to prohibit aftermarket fitment"—

which is probably permissible under European agreements—

"and to discourage manufacturers who force purchasers to fit bull bars in order to be able to have optional extras such as spot or fog lights. PACTS also believes that exhortation and advice are not sufficient to cover the problem of aftermarket fitment."

That comes on top of conclusions that back up virtually everything that the hon. Member for Newport, West said and gives further credence to fatality and injury figures.

[Mr. Merchant]

The council backs the Transport Research Laboratory's initial findings of 35 deaths and 350 serious injuries. The council's view is powerful evidence that needs to be taken into account. We cannot agree today with certainty on a specific figure for deaths, but that does not matter because in my book, one death is too many—indeed, one potential death is too many. I am sure that, however one reads the statistics, more than one death has resulted from bull bars. That requires us to act.

We could simply wait, but I believe that the evidence is strong enough and that commonsense signs are powerful enough for that to be a dangerous and rather irresponsible direction to take. Alternatively, we could explore the possibility of taking limited action in the knowledge that we are probably restricted from the overwhelming action that I would like to see because of European agreements.

If we can take limited action, there is a powerful argument for doing so. There is also a powerful argument even for temporary action. I understand the problems and limitations, and especially the upset that such action will cause tidy legal minds or tidy departmental minds. However, if we had a three or four-month period in which we introduced a total ban, we would probably succeed in delivering a death blow—perhaps I should not have used that phrase—or in making an impact on the industry and on consumer attitudes that would be so powerful that the fashion would never recover. In other words, the fashion would be wiped from people's minds.

Mr. Dover: Is it not far better to use persuasion? Already, the number of vehicles with bull bars fitted has declined and some bull bars have been taken off. Surely that means that the art of persuasion is working and that it is far more effective to ensure that people realise why bull bars are dangerous objects and why they should take some avoiding action.

Mr. Merchant: I entirely agree that persuasion is important and I hope that this debate is part of the process of informing and persuading. Sadly, however, persuasion is normally not sufficient with human beings. Not everyone who is attracted by bull bars will be persuaded, and there will remain irresponsible individuals who will continue to use them. They will probably be the worst offenders because they will have bull bars for entirely the wrong reasons. They are exactly the people who may then, regrettably, be involved in fatal accidents. We are talking about people's lives and about the terrible mayhem that still occurs on Britain's roads, which would not be tolerated in any other part of our national life. Bearing that in mind, we cannot simply rely on persuasion, important though it is. We must take further steps and those steps must be legislative.

I mentioned two possibilities—doing nothing or taking limited action. There are two other possibilities. One is to press forward with greater vigour to try to achieve a European settlement on the matter. I have no objection to that being done, but I am sceptical—it is not the only sense in which I am sceptical about the European Union—about anything resulting from that in the near future.

I have worked on directives, or objections to directives, where it has been promised that one will be introduced next year, and then that it will be introduced the year after. Four or five years on, one normally finds that it has not been finalised or agreed, or, if it has, it has been watered down. When it eventually comes, it is not properly applied across Europe. I have no objection to a directive, but we would be literally taking our lives into our hands if we sat back and waited for one.

I am increasingly drawn to the conclusion that the House should take definitive action. That is why I so much welcome the Bill. It may be that once it has been scrutinised, improved and brought into law, we would clash with the European Union over it. I for one would not find that especially unwelcome. Apart from anything else, it would put tremendous moral pressure on European institutions to act more quickly and responsibly. Even if, having passed the law, we were prevented from putting it into full effect, that law would shame the European Union into taking action. For all those reasons, I find the argument in favour of firm, swift and full action against bull bars overwhelming. I hope that some means will be found to bring into law in this country a measure that will not only enhance safety on British roads but save British lives.

1.30 pm

Lady Olga Maitland (Sutton and Cheam): I, too, congratulate the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on introducing the Bill. He may be surprised to hear that from me because on the previous occasion on which we met in a public debate, we were of different opinions. That does not mean that we must always be at odds with each other.

I support the Bill, its spirit and its determination. When I read it, I was especially pleased that it was so determined to hammer home the point about the harm that bull bars can do. It provides for a three-month gaol sentence for any person driving such vehicles, which are killing machines. There is no other term for them. The Bill's spirit is appropriate.

I do not believe that concern about violence on the roads—that is what we are dealing with—is restricted to the hon. Member for Newport, West and those who have been immediately involved with the sponsorship of the Bill. I am well aware that my hon. Friend the Minister has been following the issue for some time. He has been hitting the bureaucrats. I am sure that he will tell us about the results of that. If he is getting at the red tape and the dilatory thinkers, they will not stand a chance.

We are talking about 'roo bars, crash bars or bull bars which originated in the Australian outback. It is a romantic notion to think of vehicles skidding across that wide open landscape trying to avoid damage from leaping kangaroos, which are much attracted by the headlights of cars. In the right environment, bull bars are valid. In the Australian outback, kangaroos are a hazard, as were cows when cowcatchers were fitted to trains in America in the last century.

Times have moved on. It is a curious paradox that Australia, where one might have thought that there was good reason to keep such bars, has now banned them. The news has travelled from down under back to the mother country and we are behind the Aussies. I love the Australians dearly for many reasons, but this time it is salutary that we should consider their experiences. In 1980, Australia's transport department began studies that showed that bull bars, and their increasing use in urban areas, were causing more accidents, injuries and fatalities and that pedestrians were particularly at risk.

In this country bull bars are legitimately used by farmers in their four-wheel drives. The RAC, and probably everyone now in the Chamber, would admit that in the right situation they are perfectly acceptable. However, the difficulty is that in the early 1990s vehicles with bull bars achieved a tremendous boom in popularity, and became a common sight on urban streets.

This morning, making a quarter of an hour's journey in my little Ford estate—which has no bull bars—while I was going round Trafalgar square, down into Parliament square and into the House of Commons, I spotted three jeeps with bull bars in that small area, although I am glad to say that I also spotted seven without.

It is good to arrive in the House of Commons car park and realise that we are now, by election, a bull bar-free zone, but we must still ask ourselves why on earth people put bull bars on vehicles. Much as we love to pretend that we live in the country, we do not have to brush cows and bulls from the motorways or from our streets. They are not even seen in the streets of my leafy constituency of Sutton. The majority of bull bars are fitted purely as a fashion accessory to vehicles that have never been driven off the highway and into the countryside—vehicles that have never crossed turf in a field and never will. Fashion has gone mad.

Macho, ego-boosting, fitted to vans and pick-up trucks, bull bars have now caused unacceptable damage. They are an extra hazard on the road, in addition to road rage and ram-raiding. Indeed, I suspect that much of the ram-raiding is carried out using such vehicles. So what are bull bars really for? It must be vanity. It is estimated that no less than 12 per cent. of the vehicle fleet in this country have had them fitted. As the hon. Member for Newport, West said, 500,000 vehicles are involved, and that is fashion design gone mad.

I do not believe that a bull bar is worth the sacrificing of a life. Three tragic cases, out of many more, come immediately to mind, such as that of 12-year-old Helen Baggs, hit full-square in the chest. I was deeply moved by the description by the hon. Member for Newport, West, because she was his constituent and he must know her family well. It is always deeply painful for a family to lose one of its loved ones, but to lose a child is even worse.

We also think of pensioner Ivy Harnett, and 13-year-old Victoria Moule, who was seriously injured. I pay tribute to Victoria's mother, Sharon Moule, who has worked tremendously hard to bring to public attention the awful and totally unnecessary suffering brought about by bull bars.

Surely vanity should not be allowed to cause 35 fatal accidents over the past year, and 350 serious injuries. And according to the RAC, the real figures could be twice as high, because it is difficult to obtain correct figures from the police. Of course the police force is not trying to be deliberately obstructive, but there is a genuine difficulty in analysing precisely what was the cause of an individual injury or death. One thing is for sure: whenever bull bars are attached to a vehicle involved in a serious accident, the injury will be infinitely greater. It is ironic that when more effort than ever before is being put into designing safer cars, we are still producing devices that are the antithesis of good practice and safety.

It is worth bearing in mind the new tests carried out by the BBC1 consumer programme "Watchdog", which are said to show just how dangerous bull bars are. Research showed that nine out of 10 children would survive if hit by a car travelling at 20 mph and without bull bars but that all would most certainly be killed if knocked down by a vehicle with bull bars and travelling at only 12 mph. It is therefore hardly surprising that Sharon Moule should have been so determined to carry on her courageous work. She provides a salutary lesson because she has in her daughter a consistent reminder of what bull bars can do. Her daughter is still suffering from her injuries, has dizzy spells and has fallen behind at school, yet Mrs. Moule says:

"We are the lucky ones."

I hope that in future there will be no more cases like that involving Victoria Moule.

Most cars and vans and newer models of four-wheel-drive vehicles are now designed with what are known as pedestrian-friendly bonnets and fronts that crumple on impact, but bull bars transform the bonnet into a solid barrier. About 8 per cent. of pedestrian casualties of road accidents are children. The hard, narrow steel bull bars are set at a child's eye level and adults are likely to be hit in the chest, abdomen or pelvis, but adults and children alike will be hit in the legs by the reinforced bumper area of the crash bar. In some well publicised cases, surgeons, coroners and police officers have expressed the opinion that accidents would not have been fatal had bull bars not been fitted.

Research in Germany, New Zealand and Australia concludes that bull bars turn slight injury accidents into serious ones and serious accidents into fatalities. It is interesting that not one researcher has concluded that bull bars add anything to safety. Research in Germany found that a collision between a pedestrian and a car fitted with a steel bull bar can be fatal at only 16 mph. Because of the better energy absorption, the speed at which a fatality occurs when elastic, plastic devices are fitted is 37 mph. Further tests found that a vehicle equipped with a steel bull bar was six times more unsafe than one without.

In addition, the fitting of bull bars can provide a sense of invulnerability. Drivers believe that they are beyond harm and can hurtle along the roads, up and down back streets and in and out of traffic. We have all seen them sitting high up in their seats, holding a big wheel and hitting the accelerator, confident that the bull bar will protect them from everything. It might, but it certainly does not protect pedestrians. In fact, such drivers' safety is only illusory.

Research has shown that drivers of vehicles fitted with bull bars are at risk because their feeling of security is undoubtedly misplaced. Bull bars increase the risk of serious injuries to the occupants of a vehicle. A car fitted with bull bars will absorb the energy of any impact in such a way as to trigger the mechanism that brings into operation the safety bag or, indeed, delay it, as the case may be.

There has been some debate as to whether the Department of Transport has carried out sufficient research into the effects of bull bars. I draw the House's attention to a working paper that the Transport Research Laboratory at Crowthorne in Berkshire produced at the suggestion of the Department of Transport, because it makes interesting and useful reading. It certainly adds to the arguments in favour of the Bill. The document states:

"Crash bars fitted to vehicles used on the public roads are likely to increase the risk of serious injury to pedestrians in road accidents."

[Lady Olga Maitland]

A detailed, six-page document follows, which anyone can examine and which leaves us in no doubt about how important it is to consider direct action and not just to leave regulation to wishful thinking, self-regulation and self-motivation. Those are not working.

Mr. Dover: Does the paper that my hon. Friend mentioned contain any information about the damage to the occupants of the vehicles? My hon. Friend said that she thought that there was danger to the occupants of vehicles and that those driving them were perhaps over-confident. I am not saying that she is wrong, but does that document include any evidence to that effect?

Lady Olga Maitland: It so happens that that document does not consider occupants—I came across that information from other research—but it does state:

"A code of practice has certain limitations."

I am sure that the laboratory has done more work on the subject, and if it has not, perhaps it could be encouraged to do so.

I have said that I am not happy about whether self-regulation is working, but I should pay tribute to the manufacturers that are taking action. It would be churlish to ignore what they are doing. For example, Nissan was the first four-wheel-drive builder to drop the steel bull bars from its vehicles, including the Terrano II, the Patrol GR and its light commercial range. But Nissan has installed instead a mock substitute made from polyurethane. Mitsubishi is doing the same for the Shogun vehicles. I am not happy about that because I do not believe that the substitutes will minimise the impact that much. Indeed, the RAC also does not regard them as especially safe. They are illusory and cosmetic. They make the driver feel good, but they will not make the pedestrian feel any happier.

Mr. Norris: I am following what my hon. Friend says with interest and I applaud the remarks that she has made so far. On the question of polyurethane accessories, there is no doubt that those accessories—whether they are of value in protecting the vehicle—overcome the reluctance of hon. Members to allow the fitment of aggressive steel bull bars. The real issue is the aggressive steel bars fitted in front of a pedestrian-friendly front. I would not want my hon. Friend to discredit the polyurethane fitments because I believe that, in road safety terms at least, they are perfectly acceptable.

Lady Olga Maitland: I hear what my hon. Friend the Minister says. I usually agree with him 100 per cent., but I hope that he will not think that I am being disrespectful if I say that it might be useful to do a little more research on what happens in an accident involving a polyurethane bull bar. I personally would not like to take that statement as read.

Mr. Flynn: I am delighted by the hon. Lady's speech, but the point of putting the word "metal" into the Bill was to avoid this argument. It might well arise in Committee. The problem with the polyurethane bars is that they legitimise the metal bars, but research might show that the shape of the polyurethane bars—they are well designed in some cases—has the effect of reducing the impact.

Lady Olga Maitland: I thank the hon. Gentleman for those remarks. It is obviously useful to consider such factors.

Other organisations are already throwing away bull bars and we should take comfort from that. Nationwide delivery companies are throwing them out, ambulance services have removed them from their vehicles, which is interesting, and the Army probably never even considered them in the first place for its latest huge order of Land Rover Defenders. One would have thought that the Army would have been a natural customer for them.

Most four-wheel drives do not have bull bars fitted as standard equipment. They are generally an extra-cost option. Losing them will cause no problems for owners, although an exception may be made in any legislation for farmers, for whom they can be useful rather than part of an ego-boosting exercise.

It would be appropriate to remove bull bars from the manufacturers' catalogues. We should discourage their use. Indeed, we ought to encourage people who have bull bars on their vehicles to get rid of them. I understand that discarding them is not difficult; a few minutes' work with a spanner is enough. Massive though they may look, they are effectively free standing with no structural function. They will not be missed. Even I might be able to turn a spanner to taking one off, although I am not always that practical.

People in public life should take a lead. I welcome the fact that Members of Parliament are living up to their responsibilities, but that should also happen in local authorities. I accept that the council in Sutton has taken the hint as far as its vehicles are concerned—acting on the advice of motor insurers it has taken the bull bars from all its 65 Ford Transit vans. That was done on practical—financial—grounds because it was told that it would face heavier claims if a child were hit by a vehicle with bull bars.

I ask Liberal Democrat councillors in Sutton to go one stage further and to remove bull bars from their vehicles and get their colleagues to do the same. In that way, the public would begin to understand that that is a policy that should be followed and that the bars are not to be admired.

Interestingly, insurance companies are pushing people to think more clearly on the matter. I congratulate CGA Direct of Horsham in West Sussex, which became the first insurance company in Britain to refuse cover for any vehicle fitted with rigid steel bull bars. The marketing director said:

"The bars do more damage to other vehicles in collisions, so claims involving cars fitted with bull bars tend to be higher."

That is undoubtedly a lead and it is something that I support.

We can also encourage public support in different ways. During a survey by Auto Express and the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents, 87 per cent. of motorists questioned said that bull bars should be banned. The Automobile Association is also very supportive of that case.

I congratulate my right hon. Friend the Earl of Kinnoull for introducing the Road Traffic (Amendment) Bill in the other place a few weeks ago, in January. Sadly, I fear that lack of parliamentary time might prevent it from progressing.

This is no new campaign, as the hon. Member for Newport, West is aware. It began about three years ago and we have to ask ourselves why on earth we have not taken action? What possible reason can there be for delay? I have become lost in the fudge and confusion, and the intricacies and bureaucracy, both at home and abroad. I do not want to throw too many sticks and stones, but it seems to have been a bit of a dance of the hokey cokey. Everyone agrees and says that the ban is obvious—we say it here in London and so do the Department of Transport, the European Union, and Commissioner Kinnock. What is the problem? Why are we so dilatory?

I have read the correspondence that has been passing between Commissioner Kinnock and the Minister. It does not make the issue any clearer. Each party seems to be saying that the other could do more. In the end, my hon. Friend will probably act on his own instincts, in which I have total confidence. I believe that he will say, if the Bill does not go through as planned, "Enough is enough. I am now going for it." I think that he will do that, and he should. He could quite easily justify that approach on the basis of subsidiarity. There are certain matters that should be dealt with at national level. In those instances, it is no one else's business what is going on. We should be allowed to get on with bull bars ourselves.

Let us make a plea for sanity. Drivers have the first responsibility. Let us say to drivers, "Take off your bull bars. You do not need them. You will cause a fatal injury, which will be on your conscience for ever." Let us say to manufacturers, "Don't push or encourage people to have bull bars." I say to the Government and to those in Europe, "Don't delay. Don't drag on. Don't fudge."

We have an important task to undertake. I have every confidence that in the end the Government will introduce effective legislation. In so doing, lives will be saved and we shall be eternally grateful.

1.56 pm

Mr. Nigel Griffiths (Edinburgh, South): First, I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on mounting a one-person campaign to persuade the Automobile Association, the Royal Automobile Club, the police force, the royal parks and even some insurance companies to have bull bars removed. I have no doubt that my hon. Friend has saved lives already by the action that he has taken. He is now giving the Government the chance to save even more lives.

I am grateful for support from my right hon. Friend the Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) and my hon. Friend the Member for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane). I welcome the thoughtful comments by the hon. Members for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) and for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland). The remarks of the hon. Members for Chorley (Mr. Dover) and for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) have produced a debate and allowed arguments to be aired.

It appears that there are three key objections. The first is that research is not valid and statistics do not count. The second is that the Commission is endorsing the Minister's view that he cannot do anything for the moment. The third is that bull bar owners are entitled to protect their vehicles.

It is clear that the research funded by the Department of Transport, which was published in its news bulletin in 1994, showed that an estimated 35 lives a year were being saved by action taken on bull bars. I recognise that there has been a growth in the use of bull bars since then.

The Minister cited his letter from the Commission in February. I received a letter on Wednesday from officials of the RAC, who met members of both Mr. Kinnock's and Mr. Bangemann's cabinet. The meeting took place on 25 March. They conclude in their letter:

"The Commission officials were also adamant that there are courses of action which the UK government can take unilaterally."

That is clear and we look forward to the Minister taking action.

The hon. Member for Chorley advanced the defence that car owners have the right to protect their vehicles. He told us that his car had lost its lights. Apparently that cost him £100. Helen Baggs lost her life, and that is what the debate is about.

The hon. Member for Hexham dismissed statistics. Previous predictions of fewer deaths were based on statistical information on seat belts, for example. The introduction of seat belt legislation has saved 1,000 lives and 5,000 serious injuries a year. Legislation was introduced on crash helmets. I am well aware of the excellent work that is done by the Astley Ainslie hospital in my constituency, which rehabilitates those with head injuries, and aware also of the beneficial effects of legislation bearing on crash helmets.

As regards the statistics on bull bars, I believe, as I am sure, does the whole House, that Helen Baggs was a person, not a statistic. People's lives have been destroyed. Ian Farnworth, 17, Nigel Sutcliffe and Susan Gardiner—all killed by vehicles that were armed, and I use that word advisedly, with these quite unnecessary bull bars.

One of the privileges of being a Member of Parliament is that we meet some remarkable people, people like Vicky Moule. I greatly admire her fighting spirit and her courage. She is a survivor. She has a great future. She had a lucky escape. Today, the House has an opportunity to replace luck with positive action for safety. There must be no delay. The Minister has 30 minutes to secure the passage of the Bill. Every week of delay could cost a child's life.

2 pm

The Minister for Transport in London (Mr. Steve Norris): I congratulate hon. Members who have taken part in today's debate. There have been two sides to the debate: my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) did not support the principle of the Bill, and my hon. Friend the Member for Chorley (Mr. Dover) ably expressed his scepticism, whereas the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) and the hon. Members for Rotherham (Mr. MacShane) and for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths), and my hon. Friends the Members for Bury St. Edmunds (Mr. Spring), for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) and for Sutton and Cheam (Lady Olga Maitland) were supportive of the Bill. My hon. Friend the Member for Bury St. Edmunds, of course, is co-sponsor of the Bill.

In the light of what I am about to say, let me make it clear that I have the greatest respect for the effort that the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) has put into this serious issue and for the improvements and action that he has achieved as a result of his campaigning zeal. He does indeed deserve our congratulations, our thanks and much credit for what he has achieved. I hope that it will be plain, if I may say so gently to my hon. Friends the Members for Hexham and for Chorley, whose opinions on this issue I entirely respect, that I strongly support the principle behind the Bill.

Sadly, however, allied to the no doubt perfectly genuine concern that the hon. Member for Newport, West feels about this issue, which as the Minister with responsibility for road safety I also feel, is an element that perhaps might be interpreted as a veiled party political argument: that somehow Labour Members are keener than Conservative Members that action should be taken. One thing that the debate has amply demonstrated, in the excellent speeches from my hon. Friends, two of whom are co-sponsors of the Bill, is that there is equal concern on both sides of the House on what we all accept is a serious issue. A number of hon. Members mentioned individuals who, as a result of road accidents, are sadly no longer alive.

I am not thought of as one who takes some aspects of life particularly seriously. As in most matters, Brian Walden got it right when he said that the vast majority of things in this life do not matter very much and the rest do not matter at all. However, I take some matters extremely seriously and I shall never be flippant about them. The paramount one is my job as the Minister with responsibility for road safety.

I am proud of the fact that, during my time as a Minister, there have been fewer deaths in road accidents than in any year since records were first compiled in 1926. That is an extraordinary achievement to which my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham rightly referred in a recent debate on that very issue. He will know, as the House knows, that my great concern is that we should not take pride in that achievement but remember that every day in Britain, including Saturdays and Sundays, bank holidays, Christmas and new year, on average 10 people are killed on our roads. I make it clear to the hon. Member for Swansea, West that I am quite prepared to be unpopular with my own colleagues or with Opposition Members if I believe that a serious road safety issue is at stake.

I was recently criticised by some ill-informed observers about the serious measures that we wish to introduce to ensure that monocular drivers are not allowed to drive heavy, large, dangerous and long commercial vehicles and coaches. I was described in extraordinarily disparaging terms by a number of commentators for what was seen as nannyism, bending over backwards to EC pressure and so on. To those who are aware of the real issue, that criticism was totally misguided and ill-informed, but I hope that it underlines the fact that I am quite prepared to face such criticism if I believe that action is needed to save lives. I shall go on to describe why it is clear that this is not the Bill to do that.

Mr. Flynn: The Minister is respected as a man of courage. On the issue he mentions, those hon. Members who are specialists on transport safety are entirely behind him. I am aware of the Minister's sincere support for the Bill's aims, if not for its detail. Will he give an undertaking that he will not talk it out but will allow it to be further discussed in Committee so that it may be improved?

Mr. Norris: No, I will not give that undertaking, and I shall say quite specifically why in my considered and serious view there is no purpose in allowing the Bill to go further. I shall explain why time spent in Committee would be totally nugatory. I know that the hon. Gentleman is kind enough to treat what I say seriously, and it gives me no pleasure whatever to say that the Bill should not proceed. It is my unfortunate responsibility to have to remind my hon. Friends who are equally enthusiastic supporters of the Bill of the reasons why I simply cannot allow it to proceed.

First, the Bill would "Provide for the prohibition of the use on roads of motor vehicles fitted with bull bars; and for other related purposes."

Those purposes are perfectly laudable. Surprisingly, the Road Traffic Act 1988 has not been mentioned in the debate. I refer the House to part II, which is headed:

"Construction and Use of Vehicles and Equipment".

Clause 41 is headed:

"General regulation of construction, use etc."

Subsection (1) states:

"The Secretary of State may make regulations generally as to the use of motor vehicles and trailers on roads, their construction and equipment and the conditions under which they may be so used."

Subsection (2) states:

"In particular, the regulations may make provision with respect to any of the following matters—

(a) the width, height and length of motor vehicles and trailers and the load carried by them, the diameter of wheels, and the width, nature and condition of tyres

(b) the emission or consumption of smoke

(c) noise,

(d) the maximum weight

(e) the particulars to be marked

(f) the towing of . . . vehicles

(g) the number and nature of brakes

(h) lighting equipment"

and so on. I shall not detain the House further. In the 13 minutes left to me, it is no part of what I want to say to bother to insult the intelligence of hon. Members by reading any further, but the position is straightforward. Adequate legal power is already available to Parliament and to the Secretary of State for Transport to introduce a regulation to produce the Bill's effect, subject, of course, to the fact that the hon. Gentleman is generous enough to acknowledge: in this matter, we are not dealing with the competence solely of the United Kingdom Government.

What is crucial here is the extent to which this activity is governed by European directive. Let me make a direct point on that. There are many matters, to which my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam alluded, in which the principle of subsidiarity, which the Prime Minister first seriously articulated at Maastricht and which is such a sensible and straightforward basis on which to frame the relationship between the Community and its individual member states, is involved. She is right to suggest that, under that doctrine of subsidiarity, much should be left to the nation state.

I remember the best of all definitions, which is that the European Commission should do only that which the nation state could not do better itself. One other principle of European Union membership is equally clear: it is a cardinal advantage to every person who manufactures in the UK and who seeks to sell not merely in the UK, but in other member states' markets throughout the European Union, to have an agreed framework of regulations that determines standards of manufacture and that therefore allows a manufacturer, once he has met those standards, to sell his product in any Community country. That is the reason why I—not necessarily noted for my massive enthusiasm for regulation from Brussels—am none the less content that, in this matter, it is proper to look to the European Community directives to establish an appropriate framework for construction and use.

Mr. Alan Williams: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Norris: Yes I will because, so far, I am grateful that the House has seen the wisdom of adopting precisely that approach.

Mr. Williams: I no longer want to intervene.

Mr. Flynn: Will the Minister therefore give way to me?

Mr. Norris indicated assent.

Mr. Flynn: If the Minister is blaming Europe for this and saying that we look to Europe, will he explain why he is ignoring the advice not only of the European Commissioner for Transport last year, but advice that has been repeated this week by the industry directorate, led by Herr Bangemann, and the transport directorate, led by Neil Kinnock, who say that we can go ahead unilaterally in three different ways to introduce a ban on our own?

Mr. Norris: I will explain that, but I should like to preface those remarks with an important clarification. Because of the general background of the debate in this country about our relationship with the Community, some commentators tend to view every issue in terms of either Britain right, Europe wrong; Britain right, Commission wrong; or, on occasions, Commission right, Britain wrong, depending on how it suits their political argument. I do not doubt that Commissioner Kinnock shares my view on this issue, is serious about it and makes his suggestions as to how the UK Government might proceed in good faith.

When I hear the hon. Member for Newport, West saying that I am blaming the Commission, I fear that not only does he do our relations with the Community no good, he distorts the nature of the extremely constructive dialogue that I have had with the Commissioner. It is important to remember—I say this to my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam, who said that I am not noted for allowing issues to become bogged down in red tape—that Mr. Kinnock cannot, on behalf of every member of the Community, enter into agreements that require other members' support. He has to work within a consensus framework. He and I have jointly sought to find that right framework.

Mr. Alan Williams: First, the Minister has made it absolutely clear for the first time ever that he has the power.

Mr. Norris indicated assent.

Mr. Williams: The Minister has made that clear, and he is not denying it even though he is able to do so. Secondly, he has also made it clear that he will not exercise that power because, basically, it would mean that our manufacturers would have to produce one thing for Britain and another for Europe. That is the essence of it; he is trying to hide behind a universal standard. Will he explain what is to stop British manufacturers, who can make left-hand-drive cars and right-hand-drive cars, being capable of making cars with and without devices such as bull bars?

Mr. Norris: Let us be clear what the debate is about. The right hon. Gentleman, for whom, as he knows, I have great respect, suggests that I am "trying to hide behind" the European argument. That would suggest that I have any interest personally in finding a convenient bulwark behind which to hide. For the umpteenth time, I confirm for him and the House that I have no such intention. I believe that the thrust of the Bill's intention is correct.

The hon. Member for Newport, West has been rather scathing about the recent research work done to add practical shape, in the form of statistical evidence, to a great deal of the desk exercises and foreign studies that have shown that bull bars are likely to increase the severity of accidents and lead to unnecessary deaths. I am sorry that the hon. Gentleman has been quite so scathing about perfectly respectable and serious work. I further reassure him by saying that I believe that my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham made the only proper and sensible point on the issue when he said that his conclusion may not be deeply scientific but is certain common sense. I share that view.

I associate myself unequivocally with the point that, regardless of whether the research is able to show beyond all reasonable doubt that 30, 40, 50, 60 or 70 deaths may have been caused by bull bars, all one's common sense and personal experience suggests that steel bars at the height of a child's head or a young person's pelvic or thoracic area cannot, against the background of our intention to produce softer-fronted vehicles, conceivably be an aid to road safety. I share the genuine frustration of the hon. Member for Newport, West at any argument that somehow we have to prove the point beyond all reasonable doubt. The research is useful, but I consider it corroborative and not necessarily a hurdle.

Mr. Dover rose—

Mr. Norris: Before I give way, I want to make quite clear the reasons why the three propositions advanced by Commissioner Kinnock are not in my view satisfactory. That having been said, I have great respect for my hon. Friend, and of course I give way to him.

Mr. Dover: The note from the Library this morning about bull bars, which I mentioned, says that the results of a report on the survey of accidents will be available in late March. I have just received a note today from the Library saying that the report, to be produced by the Transport Research Laboratory based on 1994 accident figures, is expected to be published in April. I urge the Minister to ensure that it is available as soon as possible because it provides fundamental background to the measure before us.

Mr. Norris: I shall do so. One of the reasons why the Transport Research Laboratory is still engaged in that work is that it wants to eradicate the type of anomaly that the hon. Member for Newport, West properly adduced from the existing accident statistics.

Mr. Alan Williams rose—

Mr. Norris: I must proceed.

It would be an irony, given that I have made no secret of my intention that the Bill should not proceed, if I were unable to make the argument that is fundamental to a serious debate on this issue. There is a serious debate on this issue, and it is not helped by wild assertions or by implying that every Conservative Member who chooses to block this unnecessary Bill will have blood on his hands. As someone who spends a great deal of his time every day of the week trying to ensure that we reduce loss of life on our roads, I resent even that implication. It is improper and ill-deserved.

Mr. Flynn rose—

Mr. Norris: I will not give way at the moment. I must make some progress because this point is directly related to the issues that the hon. Gentleman raised. As the House knows—there have been many references to it—I have been in regular contact with the Commissioner for some time on the matter. He wrote, in the letter quoted by the hon. Gentleman, in May 1995 about three ways in which he believed that it was possible for the United Kingdom to act unilaterally in this respect.

The right hon. Member for Swansea, West suggested in an intervention that if I had the power, there was no need for the debate to go a moment further. The right hon. Gentleman has been in the House far too long, and has far too comprehensive a knowledge and experience of the relationships between nation states and the Commission, to imagine that the fact, in statute, that the power exists to effect certain actions in the United Kingdom overrides any Community obligation in that respect. It cannot do so. It is part of the sham, and the deep cynicism of some of those who have opportunistically suggested that this is a political debate, that they have so crudely misrepresented the relationship between any sovereign state in the European Union and the institutions of the Union.

The first of the Commissioner's proposals was to invoke a six-month ban on registration of vehicles fitted with approved-type bull bars, under a clause in the framework directive for European type approval. That applies where a member state considers there to be a serious safety risk.

In order for us to invoke such a power, it would be necessary to show that that safety risk was of a different order of magnitude to those safety risks considered by the Commission when it allowed the approval of bull bars fitted as part of whole-vehicle type approval to vehicles that are already legally approved under those terms. On that basis, we would be at least vulnerable to challenge.

Incidentally—it is important to place this on record—who would be the challenger? My hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam says, as a mother and as a concerned parent, who could possibly object? That was the tone of this morning's debate. The answer is, first, the many people whose businesses manufacture bull bars—my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham referred to them—and, secondly, foreign vehicle manufacturers. The idea that we can just say, "Well, this is all jolly good stuff and nobody can object to it because it is all mum and apple pie. Let's get on with it," is an absurd and, frankly, rather facile notion which I am not prepared to entertain.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham raised a serious point amid all the rather cynical and bland assertions from Labour Members. My hon. Friend latched on to one of the few really good arguments for adopting a temporary ban. He said that, all other factors notwithstanding, the existence of a temporary ban would at least have—

Mr. Nicholas Brown (Newcastle upon Tyne, East): Address the House.

Mr. Norris: The hon. Gentleman knows that my responsibility in the House is to address the occupant of the Chair, which is exactly what I do. The hon. Gentleman's contribution to the debate has been wholly unworthy of him and quite inconsequential. He would do better to be quiet and remain in his place.

The Vice-Chamberlain of Her Majesty's Household (Mr. Andrew MacKay): Resign.

Mr. Norris: Indeed, perhaps the hon. Gentleman would do better to resign, as my hon. Friend so accurately says.

Mr. Flynn: Will the Minister give way?

Mr. Norris: No, the Minister will not give way.

My hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham made the serious point that even though we knew that the ban would be temporary, unsound and open to challenge, we should impose it in the sense of declaratory legislation. In other words, if I understand his argument—I hope that he agrees that this is an accurate paraphrase—the purpose would be simply to illustrate how strongly Parliament felt. I understand that argument. However, you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, as the custodian of the rights and traditions of this House, will know that it is not within the rights and traditions of the House to pass legislation that, almost at the time of its passing, becomes redundant and open to challenge. It is not within our rights and traditions to pass legislation simply to make a declaratory statement. I regard that as an extraordinary and unsound basis for legislation and the Government cannot treat such a proposition seriously.

The second proposal was to require the removal of after-market bull bars which had not been type approved. The problem with that course of action is that it would have to comply with articles 30 and 36 of the European Union treaty, which introduce broader difficulties. Article 30 prohibits restrictions on trade while article 36 provides powers to take action on safety grounds, but such action cannot be undertaken lightly for the reasons I have adduced. Any such action would have an extraordinarily limited effect and would be almost impossible to enforce as vehicle owners could simply switch to type-approved bull bars. As anyone who really understands the subject will know, it is practically impossible to tell a type-approved bull bar from a non-type-approved bull bar.

The third and last proposal related to a ban on the import of vehicles fitted with bull bars and first registered in another member state. The proposal would be subject to the application of article 30, as I previously suggested. I ask the House to consider this proposition. If we introduced that measure, we would be ignoring the fact that the overwhelming majority of vehicles that have these devices fitted are registered in this country and are not registered overseas before being brought into this country. Such a move would be extraordinarily ineffective. I would have welcomed a suggestion from the Commissioner that I felt met our requirements. However, I was, sadly, forced to conclude that the three suggestions did not present a practical solution in our eyes.

We hope, however, that we can take the matter forward, by agreement between me and the Commission, through making a change to the external projections directive. We may be able to make some progress in that way. The hon. Member for Newport, West referred to the fact that two directives are in play here. In view of the time allotted to me, I shall have to be very quick about this.

Ideally, we would need the pedestrian protection directive in place to provide a truly comprehensive solution. That directive is likely to be some time off. If we use the external projections directive and amend it by a procedure that is not as difficult, we may be able to obtain a solution which, while not perfect, is more adequate for our purpose than any of the options offered by Commissioner Kinnock that have been so enthusiastically supported—I believe utterly cynically—by Labour Members. If we were to go down the course that I have described, it would mean examining the proposal that we have received in the past week or so from the Commission and considering a form of words. I have told my officials that they should urgently examine that form of words. They know that my predilection is to ensure that we find an adequate form and take the proposal forward on that basis—

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

Debate to be resumed upon Friday 19 April.

Remaining Private Members' Bills

MARRIAGE CEREMONY (PRESCRIBED WORDS) BILL

Read a Second time.

Bill committed to a Committee of the whole House.—[Mr. Brazier.]

Bill immediately considered in Committee; reported, without amendment; read the Third time, and passed.

SEXUAL OFFENCES AGAINST CHILDREN (REGISTERS OF OFFENDERS) BILL

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Michael Morris): Not moved.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, notwithstanding Standing Order No. 14B (Proceedings under an Act or on European Community Documents), the Speaker shall, at any one sitting of the House—

(i) put the Questions on the Motions in the name of Mr. Secretary Lilley relating to the draft Social Security (Minimum Contributions to Appropriate Personal Pensions Schemes) Order 1996, the draft Social Security (Reduced Rates of Class I Contributions) (Salary Related Contracted-out Schemes) Order 1996 and the draft Social Security (Reduced Rates of Class I Contributions and Rebates) (Money Purchase Contracted-out Schemes) Order 1996 not later than one and a half hours after the commencement of the proceedings on the first such Motion; and

(ii) put the Questions on the Motions in the name of Mr. Secretary Dorrell relating to Special Grant Report (No. 17) and in the name of Mr. Secretary Hague relating to Special Grant Report (Wales) not later than one and a half hours after the commencement of proceedings on the first of these Motions; and the said Motions may be proceeded with, though opposed, after Ten o'clock.—[Mr. MacKay.]

Middle East Peace Process

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. MacKay.]

2.33 pm

Mr. John Marshall (Hendon, South): Everyone who knows anything about the middle east expects peace to come through a series of building blocks. The first was Camp David; the second was the widely acclaimed Oslo accords; and the third was the peace treaty between Israel and Jordan. The tragedy is that a small unrepresentative group of Muslim fundamentalists is seeking to derail the peace process. Their hearts are so full of hatred that they cannot tolerate a programme of peaceful co-existence between neighbours in the middle east. They believe that they can bomb their way into heaven, and into derailing the peace process in the middle east. I hope, as I am sure the whole House does, that they will fail, as I suspect they will, on both counts.

The objectives of the various parties to the peace process are, of course, different. Israel has always craved recognition by her neighbours—neighbours who sought to suffocate her at birth and to snuff out her existence both in 1967 and in 1973, and who until recently have always denied her right to exist.

Israel has craved peace because so many of her citizens have been affected by the wars that she has had to fight to secure her independence, and because between those wars she has been under constant attack from her neighbours. For example, the people in the north would suffer mortar attacks from the Lebanon. Israel sought peace as a means of giving her people security because she had suffered infiltration by guerrillas, and mortars had been thrust down on her people from the Golan. Hezbollah guerrillas used to infiltrate from the Lebanon, and still seek to do so.

Israel also hoped that as part of the peace process, her people would be able to discover information about Israelis missing in action since the 1980s. For example, Zachary Baumel went missing in 1982, and Ron Arad was captured in 1986. Several times I have met Zachary Baumel's parents, who are still desperate to discover what happened to their son nearly 15 years ago.

Many hon. Members have met the mother, brothers and daughter of Ron Arad. In 1986, when he was captured, his daughter was very young. She is now much older, yet during all that time she has not known what happened to her father. What sort of people will prevent a father from knowing his daughter over a period of nearly 10 years, much longer than the duration of the last war?

We must remember that it was Israel that kick-started the release of middle east hostages in the early 1990s. Israel released a flood of prisoners, thereby securing the release of Terry Waite and John McCarthy, in the hope of receiving back her own missing people. But that has not happened.

Of course we must recognise that the objectives of Israel's neighbours were different from hers. The Jordanians sought from peace economic advantage, increased investment and joint infrastructure projects. They also wanted to use Israel's knowledge of tourism to benefit their own tourist industry. The Palestinians sought an improvement in their living standards as well as the ability to rule themselves.

The history of the middle east demonstrates that our peacemakers are always as vulnerable to the assassin's bullet as the general is to hostile fire. King Abdullah, Anwar Sadat and Yitzhak Rabin all gave up their lives prematurely in the hope that their people would live in peace one with another. King Hussein has shown that he is luckier than a cat, because he has survived 11 assassination attempts.

Kamikaze guerrillas have now killed scores of Israelis in the hope of derailing the peace process by altering public opinion in Israel. That is why the conference was held at Sharm-el-Sheikh earlier this year. No more suitable place could have been found for such a conference, because it is in territory that Israel returned to Egypt as part of the peace process.

When we consider what happened at the conference we must congratulate the Prime Minister on attending it, and on the positive approach that he adopted. Of course, we must also condemn those who did not go to the conference. We should condemn Syria, in particular, for refusing to go to the conference. Syria has provided hospitality for many of those who reject peace in the middle east. Syria has helped many of those seeking to derail the peace process in the middle east. Syria invaded the Lebanon and keeps troops there, and it allows Hezbollah guerillas in the Lebanon to become a force that is anxious to derail peace and to fight the state of Israel.

Syria did not go to that conference because it is not interested in defeating terrorism; Syria is interested in sponsoring terrorism. How can Syria ever expect the Israelis to return the Golan heights when it refused to attend a conference designed to defeat terrorism? Of course every Israeli knows that, until 1967, the Golan was used for hostile action against Israel. Since 1967, it has been used for purely peaceful purposes.

Apart from condemning Syria for not attending the conference, we must condemn Iran and Libya, which are the paymasters of international terrorism. We must recognise the dangers that Iran presents to peace not only in the middle east but to peace in the world because, within the next decade, it is very likely that Iran will become a nuclear power. The world must squeeze Iran now so that there might yet be a change of Government in that unhappy country.

We must congratulate our Prime Minister because only he and the Prime Minister of Israel were willing to condemn Iran's reaction to the bombs in Israel and Iran's sponsorship of international terrorism. Let any apologists for the Iranian regime remember that Iran praised the bombings after they had taken place. Indeed, I have been told that the Federal Republic of Germany has put out an arrest warrant for an Iranian Minister. No one should enter into partnership with Iran, and people should follow our Government's lead in condemning the Iranian regime.

I am surprised that the President of France did not seek to condemn Iran; let us remember that Iranians went to Paris to kill Mr. Bakhtiar, a former Prime Minister of Iran.

We should listen to what victims of terrorism are saying. We should also listen to friendly Governments in the middle east which give advice to this country. We should listen to Saudi Arabia, Tunisia and Egypt. They say that Britain should not become a haven for Muslim fundamentalists seeking to wage war on friendly countries in the middle east.

We should not give asylum to political activists from the middle east who seek to abuse our hospitality by stirring up trouble there and by destroying our friendship and trade with those friendly nations. If we were to ask the President of Egypt and the Governments of Tunisia and of Saudi Arabia what they thought of the Asylum and Immigration Bill, we would quickly receive three assents to it.

Individuals sometimes come to this country to stir up trouble and to fight a war of Muslim fundamentalism. They are the blood brothers of those who went on the buses in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem.

We must also make certain that organisations in Britain do not fund terrorism in the middle east. We all know how people of the Irish diaspora in North America are used to fund terrorism in the United Kingdom. We must not allow individuals from the Palestinian diaspora and their sympathisers to fund terrorism in the middle east. It would be a great tragedy if they were to do so, and we shall be held partially responsible for it.

We must also ensure that we do not allow individuals to stir up a campaign of hatred on our university campuses, which can only influence the world outside the campuses.

I see that the National Union of Students has asked that action be taken on Hizb-ut-Tahrir. The NUS president, Mr. Jim Murphy, said at conference last week that the union should not be soft on HUT. He went on to say that HUT was filth and filth belongs in the bin.

I apologise for straying slightly beyond the Foreign Office's remit by saying that, as everyone condemns HUT, there is some surprise that there has so far been no successful prosecution of that organisation in the United Kingdom. Universities such as that at Birmingham have banned HUT from their campus, but there has so far been no prosecution. It is wrong for any organisation to preach religious or racial hatred on our university campuses. Members of such organisations are the blood brothers of the bus bombers of Tel Aviv and Jerusalem.

It is important that our country takes action against such individuals, but it is equally important that Mr. Arafat is seen to arrest and prosecute. So far, he has been strong on arrests but not quite so strong on prosecutions. It is important that the Palestinian national covenant is amended within the time scale promised by Mr. Arafat. Were he to fail to do so, that of itself would be a danger to the peace process.

We in this country must, as a fellow democracy, show understanding of the reaction of the Israeli Government to assaults on their people and their democratic process. The tragedy is that those who are fighting the peace process in the middle east all come not from democracies but from one-party dictatorships. We must understand that when any democracy sees its people attacked, as Israel has done, it has to react to ensure that peace and democracy prevail and that its people are not bombed and bullied into submission.

The peace process in the middle east will survive only if the aspirations of all are met. We have witnessed the attempts to destroy peace by destroying security for Israelis, but we need more than just security—we need prosperity. This is where the western world can move in with joint ventures and where the Arab world can say that it recognises that Israelis have experience in tourism, agriculture and industry which the Arab world sometimes lacks. I look forward to the day when we see joint ventures in Jordan, Egypt and other countries between Israelis, western entrepreneurs and the local countries.

I hope that everyone in the middle east will remember that when we are trying to bring the Jewish people of Israel and our Muslim brothers together, we might quote from the New Testament and say:

"Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God."

2.47 pm

Mr. Greville Janner (Leicester, West): I thank the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) for securing the debate and associate myself with everything that he said. I also thank him for being a great personal friend and pair and a doughty friend of Israel and of the Jewish people. I salute the work that he has done and is doing.

I also pay my respects to the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the right hon. Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) who, unlike his predecessor, has a clear vision of peace in the middle east and an understanding of the problems of a democratic Israel. In response to my outcry at the proposed closure of the British Council operation in Jerusalem, he stopped that closure. I greatly appreciate that, as do the many people who use it.

I shall deal with one further aspect of the peace process to which the hon. Member for Hendon, South has drawn attention. As chairman of the Maimonides Foundation—a Jewish organisation that seeks to foster good relations between Jews and Muslims—I have worked closely with the Muslim community. I pay special tribute to those in that community who have cried out against the attacks to which the hon. Gentleman referred. I pay tribute to Saba Risaluddin, the head of the Calamus Foundation, who said:

"Terrorism is completely alien to the ethos of Islam, as it is to the ethos of all the world's great faiths."

I pay respectful tribute to Ayatollah Rouhani, Imam of the Paris mosque and spiritual leader of the Shi'ite community in Europe, who called on

"all Islamic organisations and personalities to issue a joint fatwa condemning loud and clear all terrorist actions carried out by terrorist groups under the name of Islam aimed at the peace process in the Middle East".

I thank my dear friend and respected ally Sheikh Dr. Zaki Badawi, principal of the Muslim college in London, who wrote to The Times to attack

"those who glory in acts of violence and who equate peace with weakness. In this sad and crucial time, heroism should be accorded only to the peacemakers."

We have heroism in the middle east. We have the heroism of the Israelis in the face of attacks launched by people using pawns—those who believe that they will go to paradise by that path—but who would not take those risks themselves. We have the heroism of Shimon Peres and his people. He is coming up for election and we should think very carefully before we attack, in any way, the Israelis' efforts to damp down terrorism or the steps they have found it necessary to take in face of the ghastly atrocities that their people have faced. They have an election process, which others do not.

There is a certain heroism also on the other side and in Chairman Arafat, who is himself under constant attack. I hope that he will rise to what could be a great occasion for peace.

[Mr. Greville Janner]

This country should have no place for the supportive mechanisms of terrorism in any other land, whether in the middle east or elsewhere. We should hunt down the supporters and helpers of Hamas and Islamic Jihad in Britain. We should ensure that money collected in this country for charitable purposes is used in the middle east for charitable purposes and not to support Hamas, Islamic Jihad or other terrorist bodies. We could then at least know that in our small role in a distant land we have done what we can to promote a peace that we all need so badly.

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. Jeremy Hanley): I am most grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) for the opportunity to address the issues surrounding the middle east peace process. I wish to thank him and the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner), who are at the forefront of all those in the House of Commons who care deeply about the peace process. They are the most genuine and regular speakers on the subject. Both of them are friends and I listen to, take advice from and discuss the issues with them.

I am saddened that there are no Front Benchers from the Labour or Liberal Democrat parties. That is regrettable, but the weight of opinion of my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South and my hon. and learned Friend—if I may so call him—the Member for Leicester, West has made up for that, given the importance of this debate.

The peace process is an issue of great concern to the Government and, I am sure, to all right hon. and hon. Members. I know that we are all deeply shocked and saddened by the recent dreadful terrorist outrages in Jerusalem, Ashkelon and Tel Aviv. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary have expressed the Government's deep outrage and revulsion at the attacks and I am sure that all hon. Members join me in those sentiments. It has been deeply painful for all of us to see the threat to peace from those appalling actions, and we must not give the bombers the victory that they seek. Peace is their enemy and we must remained determined to achieve peace.

In these difficult days, the United Kingdom has made clear its wholehearted support for the struggle against terrorism and the continuation of the peace process. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister attended the summit chaired by Egypt and the United States at Sharm el-Sheikh on 13 March, to which my hon. Friend the Member for Hendon, South referred. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made clear the United Kingdom's support for peace through negotiation, coupled with our implacable opposition to terrorism. Officials are today taking part in a follow-up meeting to the Sharm el-Sheikh summit which we hope will lead to agreement on practical measures that the international community can take together to fight the terrorists. The Government will continue to support the process begun at Sharm el-Sheikh. Now, more than ever, the international community must unite behind the peacemakers.

The United Kingdom has been active diplomatically since the terrorist attacks to bolster the fight against terrorism and to boost support for the peace process. We have spoken to Israel's neighbours about the vocal presence in their midst of violent opponents to the peace process. We have urged other countries of the middle east to consider what more they might do to fight terrorism, to undermine support for it and for those who fund it and more actively support the peace process. The presence of many Arab countries at Sharm el-Sheikh suggests that our representations, coupled with those of others, may have had some effect.

For those countries that continue to oppose the peace process, such as Iran and Libya, we have only one message. Their policy is unacceptable. The chargé d'affaires of the Iranian embassy in London was told that when he called into the Foreign Office after the bombings. We were outraged by Iran's initial reaction and little impressed by its subsequent equivocations. If Iran wishes to be treated with respect, it must recognise the force of that message and act accordingly. With our European partners, we will continue to press that home through the European Union's critical dialogue with Iran. We believe that the Iranian Government and their surrogates continue to promote international terrorism and that they have been responsible for many attacks on Iranian dissidents in Europe since 1989. As my hon. Friend said, the recent decision by the German federal prosecutor to indict the chief of the Iranian Ministry of Intelligence Services, Ali Fallahian, adds weight to that claim.

In practical terms, the United Kingdom is doing much to help both the Israelis and the Palestinians fight the terrorists. Two City of London police experts are visiting Israel to offer advice on the surveillance and other techniques that help to form the ring of steel around the City of London. Although I cannot go into details today, there are other forms of co-operation with Israel in sharing information on the terrorist threat.

With the Palestinians, we are looking urgently at what further assistance we can give the Palestinian police in addition to the substantial assistance that we have given them in training and logistics to help them to maintain order and security in Gaza and the west bank. I was also pleased to visit Gaza not long ago and to see the gift of radios that has so helped the Palestinian police with security and the election process.

I am pleased too that the European Union is urgently working up a programme of assistance in counter-terrorism to the Palestinian police. We shall ensure that that assistance is promptly given and co-ordinated in full with the other assistance that the Palestinian authority is receiving.

The United Kingdom fully understands the pressing need for Israel to re-establish security for its citizens. They deserve that. We understand the need for the tough measures that have been taken. At the same time, we also recognise—this is a point of agreement between the Israeli Government and the Palestinian authority and both made it firmly to me during my recent visit to the region in January—that stability in Gaza and the west bank depends on employment and prosperity for the Palestinian people. We recognise the extremely difficult task facing the Israeli Government in balancing their security needs with the needs of the Palestinian people. I know that they are tackling the issue with the maximum energy and determination. We welcome the easing of the closures that has already taken place and hope that the Israeli Government will be able to relax measures further, but only where compatible with their security needs.

I met the Prime Minister, Shimon Peres, when he came to London and was impressed with his determination to secure the future for his people. I was also impressed with the way he felt that prosperity for the Palestinian people would aid security for the region as a whole and further the peace process. I believe that all hon. Members wish the Israeli Government well in achieving those aims.

My hon. Friend also mentioned Ron Arad and the other brave people who are missing in action. I raised that issue with Yasser Arafat directly and felt that he was most positive in his responses. We should and could make further progress, although it is difficult since we are largely dealing with the Iranians and others on the matter. I hope that progress can be made, not just because of those individuals and their families, but because I cannot think of any issue that would be a greater confidence-booster than if we were to find a solution to this long-standing problem which is at root, as my hon. Friend said so movingly, a humanitarian, family matter.

These are difficult days for Israel and the Palestinians. Despite the gloom of current circumstances, we must not forget that there is still a peace process. We must remember how much has been achieved. There are agreements between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organisation, which detail their mutual recognition and a process by which they can accommodate their differing interests. A Palestinian Authority has been established. As I mentioned earlier, there have been successful democratic elections for the new Palestinian Council and its president. We applaud these achievements and those who made them happen.

The vast majority of Palestinians and Israelis still crave peace and want the peace process to work. The terrorists cannot be allowed to dictate the fate of everyone else. They cannot be allowed to consign their neighbours to endless and pointless violence.

I shall say a few words about the Arab boycott, which is felt strongly in the United Kingdom and beyond. Following the first meeting of the Israel-Britain chamber of commerce, Israel's Minister for Trade, Micha Harish, told my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade that he was convinced that the boycott was no longer regarded by British business men as an obstacle to trading with Israel. Indeed, the rocketing trade figures over the past few years bear out that belief.

Both the Department of Trade and Industry and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office are taking a robust line, ensuring that companies are left in no doubt over our disapproval of the boycott. We are recommending, where possible, the use of an EU certificate rather than a certificate issued by the Arab-British chamber of commerce. The DTI, however, has an obligation to inform exporters of the facts. It would be useless to recommend the use of an EU certificate to a country which did not accept it, such as Syria.

The Arab boycott is now on its knees. Its final death throes are ever closer. It is unlikely, however, that the Arab League will end it formally before there is a comprehensive peace between Israel and all her Arab neighbours, but Egypt and Jordan have formally abandoned the boycott, the Gulf Co-operation Council no longer applies the secondary and tertiary aspects of it, and it is not applied, in practice, by Tunisia and Morocco. Only a few hard-line Arab countries insist on applying it. But while the Arab boycott office in Damascus is still open, we shall work hard to ensure that progress in the peace process brings with it a complete end to a useless, senseless and counterproductive boycott.

We look forward, of course, to the final settlement of the Arab-Israel dispute. The foundation of the settlement between Israel and the Palestinians, in the form of the declaration of principles and the interim agreement, already exists. We must all keep this goal in sight, for with it comes the prospect of a comprehensive middle east peace. Such a peace would bring immense prosperity to the entire region.

In that context, the United Kingdom welcomed the negotiations between Syria and Israel, which began at the Wye Plantation at the end of last year. The talks are currently suspended, but we hope that they will be resumed as soon as possible. It is vital that this opportunity for a comprehensive peace is not lost. We welcome the flexibility that both sides have shown to their approach to these talks and hope that they will continue to exhibit so constructive an attitude if and when the talks resume.

Our support is for those brave men and women, Palestinian as well as Israeli, who are building peace in the middle east. Nothing should detract from that goal. We shall do all that we can to help prevent the terrorists from destroying their and our dream of a comprehensive and lasting peace.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at three minutes past Three o'clock.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Children (Non-British Citizens)

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of children, aged 13 years and under, who were born in the United Kingdom but do not hold British citizenship.[20512]

Mr. Kirkhope: Such estimates are not made.

Burglaries

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 February, Official Report, columns 106–107, how many of the burglaries listed were domestic burglaries; what percentage of those who committed domestic burglary were sentenced to immediate custody; and what was the average sentence imposed. [20513]

Mr. Maclean: Of the 1,135 offenders in the sample convicted of burglary on a third or greater occasion in 1993, 525 were convicted of domestic burglary and 357 were convicted of a third or greater domestic burglary.

Around 55 per cent. of those convicted of a third or greater domestic burglary were sentenced to immediate custody, with an average custodial sentence of about 14 months.

Fire Service (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents the fire brigades in (a) Mid Glamorgan, (b) Gwynedd and (c) Wales attended in (i) 1980, (ii) 1990 and (iii) 1995; and if he will make a statement. [20650]

Mr. Sackville: The available information is given in the following table. Data for 1995 are not available. The answer gives provisional data for 1994.

Incidents attended by local authority fire brigades in (a) Mid Glamorgan, (b) Gwynedd and (c) Wales in (i) 1980, (ii) 1990 and (iii) 1994

Year	(a) Mid Glamorgan	(b) Gwynedd	(c) Wales
1980[1]	6,630	2,382	31,329
1990	10,857	4,080	52,180
1994[2]	11,199	3,887	55,644

[1]Includes estimates for periods of industrial action when data were not recorded.

[2]Provisional data which include special services attended between April 1994 and March 1995.

Suicides

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicide verdicts have been recorded for (a) men and (b) women aged under 25 years in each of the last 20 years. [20803]

Mr. Sackville: Information on the age of persons whose deaths are the subject of an inquest is not collected centrally. The number of verdicts of suicide for males and females respectively returned at inquests held by coroners in England and Wales for the 20 years up to 1994, the last year for which figures are available, are given in the table. The information has been extracted from the annual series of Home Office Statistical Bulletins, "Statistics of deaths reported to Coroners, England and Wales", copies of which are in the Library.

	Males	Females
1976	2,290	1,479
1977	2,340	1,569
1978	2,279	1,585
1979	2,539	1,606
1980	2,613	1,669
1981	2,807	1,664
1982	2,831	1,525
1983	2,778	1,464
1984	2,857	1,483
1985	2,944	1,452
1986	2,892	1,253
1987	2,840	1,147
1988	3,087	1,155
1989	2,773	984
1990	3,007	970
1991	2,968	870

Departmental Staff (Lunar House)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were employed in each of the last five years at Lunar house in Croydon; what were the changes in the volume of work at Lunar house over the same period; and if he will make a statement. [21531]

Mr. Kirkhope: The number of staff in the non-immigration service directorates of the immigration and nationality department who are based in Croydon, including Lunar house, are as follows:

31.12.93: 2,102

31.12.95: 2,105

Details of the volume of work considered by the Croydon offices over the same period are published in "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 1994", Cm 2935.

Prosecution Procedures

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average elapses between the date of an offence and the date of (a) arraignments and (b) conclusion of case at High Court for the main categories of serious crime in each area for which statistics are collated. [20347]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I have been asked to reply. The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer. I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mrs. Edwina Currie, dated 18 March 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department has asked me to reply to your Question about the duration of criminal proceedings. In preparing the reply I have liaised with colleagues at the Lord Chancellor's Department who are responsible for proceedings in the magistrates courts.

The average period between the date on which more serious (indictable) offences takes place and the committal of the defendant to the Crown Court is 23.9 weeks. Arraignment usually takes place at a 'Plea and Directions' hearing normally held within four weeks after committal for defendants who are in custody and six weeks in bail cases. The average period between the case being committed from the magistrates and the start of the trial is 12.4 weeks for defendants in custody and 17.0 weeks for defendants on bail. The average length of a criminal hearing is 8.6 hours for those defendants who plead not guilty and 1.0 hour for whose plead guilty.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Ex-service Personnel (Pension Appeal Tribunals)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 233, what estimate he has made of the cost of the action that is being taken to reduce waiting times for pensions appeal tribunals in the case of ex-service people with attributable hearing loss. [20770]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In 1995–96 the expenditure of the pensions appeal tribunals is expected to be approximately £1.4 million, which represents a 45 per cent. increase over the financial provision for 1994–95. This increase is a result of the action being taken to reduce waiting times in all cases, with priority being given to the specific groups set out in my answer of 6 March 1996. However, it is not possible to quantify the resources allocated to hearing loss cases as the pensions appeal tribunals do not record appeals by reference to the nature of disability or injury.

European Court

Mr. French: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the implications of the ruling by the European Court of Justice that the British Government can be sued for damages by an individual if an Act of Parliament is found to contravene European Law. [20828]

Mr. David Davis: I have been asked to reply.

The European Court of Justice's ruling in the Factortame case defines the conditions under which a Government can be liable in damages for breaching an individual's rights under Community law. The court ruled that such damages should be payable only where the breach of Community law has been serious and manifest. It will be for our national courts to determine in the light of the ruling whether in fact the UK Government committed a serious and manifest breach of Community law and whether any damages are payable to individuals as a result.

Legal Aid

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many persons found not guilty at trial in crown courts have been refused repayment of their legal aid contributions in the last 12 months for which he has figures. [20922]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Family Law Bill

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when a reply will be sent to the hon. Member's letter of 1 February concerning the Family Law Bill. [21230]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: A reply was sent on 14 March.

Departmental Printing Contracts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the printing contracts for his Department carried out by Wilprint Ltd. [21059]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: This Department has not directly entered into any printing contracts with Wilprint Ltd. Her Majesty's Stationery Office, on behalf of the Department, has one contract with Wilprint Ltd.

Divorce

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proportion and number of divorces were granted in (a) 1973, (b) 1983 and (c) 1993 on the grounds of (i) adultery, (ii) behaviour, (iii) desertion, (iv) two years separation, (v) five years separation and (vi) other reasons. [20391]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The proportion and number of divorces granted in England and Wales in 1973, 1983 and 1993 where the facts relied upon were adultery, behaviour, desertion, two years' separation, five years' separation and other reasons are shown in the table:

	Adultery	Behaviour	Desertion	Two years' separation	5 years' separation	Other reasons
1973	32,177 30.3 per cent.	22,692 21.4 per cent.	7,847 7.4 per cent.	23,109 21.8 per cent.	17,347 16.4 per cent.	2,831 2.7 per cent.
1983	43,722 29.6 per cent.	54,092 36.7 per cent.	2,481 1.7 per cent.	35,114 23.8 per cent.	10,219 6.9 per cent.	1,851 1.3 per cent.
1993	44,466 26.9 per cent.	74,583 45.2 per cent.	1,118 0.7 per cent.	34,196 20.7 per cent.	9,564 5.8 per cent.	1,091 0.7 per cent.

All the figures are taken from Office of Population Censuses and Surveys statistics. "Other reasons" include annulments; any mixture of adultery, behaviour and desertion; unsound mind and presumed dead.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list those areas of executive action where he has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for his decision. [20544]

Mr. Freeman: Comprehensive records are not kept in the form requested, but no such discretions have been identified from readily available sources.

Local Government Enforcement

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will publish the response of the Government to the recommendations contained in the report of the interdepartmental review team into local government enforcement. [20824]

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) on 20 December 1995, Official Report, column 1217.

In that reply I referred to a guide to good practice to be produced by the local authority associations. This was launched on 31 January 1996, entitled "Regulation: A Guide to Good Practice in Local Government". Copies of the guide will be placed in the Library of the House shortly. The guide takes forward a number of the recommendations of the review.

I also refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Mr. Deva) on 11 March 1996, Official Report, columns 464–65, which demonstrates the progress that we have made on enforcement more generally. In particular we published a draft statutory instrument containing a model appeal. The draft instrument will also require enforcers to give reasons for taking action, to explain how an appeal can be made and to give business a chance to make representations unless immediate action is necessary. These latter rights have already been applied to health and safety regulations and will shortly be applied to environmental standards, food safety and building regulations, with a range of consumer affairs legislation to follow.

ENVIRONMENT

Westminster City Council

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with Mr. Magill in respect of his role as the investigating auditor of Westminster city council. [20451]

Sir Paul Beresford: No such discussions have taken place. An auditor's inquiries are not a matter for the Government, but for the local authority and the appointed auditor.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans Mr. Magill has to make extracts of his report available prior to publication to those he is minded to criticise in respect of his report on Westminsters city council's policy on home sales. [20461]

Sir Paul Beresford: It is entirely for Mr. Magill, as the appointed external auditor, to determine the procedure for his investigation at Westminster, in accordance with the Audit Commission's code of audit practice for local authorities and the national health service in England and Wales.

Water Quality

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in the past 12 months towards the development of statutory water quality objectives for rivers in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [20730]

Mr. Gummer: The National Rivers Authority has drawn up proposals for statutory water quality objectives in seven catchments in England and one in Wales which have been chosen to test the use of these powers on a pilot basis. Consultation on these proposals will begin shortly.

Barnsley and Doncaster Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds his Department has provided to the Barnsley and Doncaster TEC in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and what amount is planned for 1996–97. [20724]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department provided £3,390,134 in 1994–95, £1,780,939 in 1995–96, and plans to provide £73,576 in 1996–97 for programmes previously funded by the former Department of Employment which are now part of the single regeneration budget.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure the prompt and effective disposal of clinical waste. [20660]

Mr. Clappison: The disposal of clinical waste is already strictly controlled by existing legislation.

Responsibility for the safe disposal of clinical waste rests with the waste producer. The producer is under a duty of care to ensure that waste is prevented from escaping and to transfer it only to someone who is legally authorised to accept it. Authorised persons includes waste carries registered under the Control of Pollution (Amendment) Act 1989 and persons who hold a waste management licence issued under part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

High-risk health-care waste should usually be disposed of by incineration—in a dedicated health-care incinerator. Where waste is made safe—for instance, by heat treatment—it can be landfilled.

New guidance on the handling and disposal of clinical waste will be issued by the Department of the Environment in a new edition of waste management paper No. 25.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the (a) contractors and (b) NHS hospital trusts involved in the disposal of medical waste which are currently being investigated by the Health and Safety Executive. [20766]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 14 March 1997]: The Health and Safety Executive is not currently investigating any contractors or NHS trusts in connection with the disposal of clinical waste.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what review the Health and Safety Executive is undertaking of medical waste management procedures. [20767]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 14 March 1996]: None. This is primarily a matter for other enforcing authorities.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sites currently under investigation by the Health and Safety Executive where unauthorised medical waste has been tipped. [20765]

Sir Paul Beresford [holding answer 14 March 1996]: The Health and Safety Executive has no enforcement responsibility in respect of the unauthorised tipping of medical waste.

Water Supplies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of gallons of water (a) supplied by pipeline from Wales and (b) extracted from waterways controlled by regulating reservoirs in Wales and used by companies supplying water in England. [20012]

Mr. Clappison: In 1995 an average of 550 megalitres or 121 million gallons per day were supplied by pipeline and aqueduct from Wales to England. The corresponding figures for abstractions from regulated rivers was 942 megalitres or 207 million gallons per day. However, the data for regulated rivers includes some water taken from the river Severn which was not derived from Wales.

Health and Safety Inspections Leaflet

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, column 364, if he will publish the commission's report when the survey of how the procedures are working in practice is complete. [20850]

Sir Paul Beresford: Yes.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when a reply will be sent to the hon. Member's letter of 8 February, ref. G/66P50 3515/96. [21228]

Mr. Clappison: A reply was sent to the hon. Member on 14 March 1996.

Environment Council

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 4 March. [21695]

Mr. Gummer: Together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, I represented the UK at the Environment Council in Brussels on 4 March.

The Council discussed the Commission's proposed amendment to the leghold traps regulation. In response to UK representations, the Commission was invited to produce a fixed timetable as soon as possible for concluding negotiations that they are conducting with the fur producer countries. The Council also accepted my proposal that the import ban on furs obtained from leghold traps should come into force on 1 January 1997 unless the Community's final attempts at a negotiated agreement with the producer states on the introduction of alternative humane traps succeeds.

Council conclusions were agreed on the Commission's communication on the wise use and conservation of wetlands. During the open debate, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales welcomed the conclusions and advised the Council of the extensive action already taken by the United Kingdom to conserve wetlands which are well protected by national and European legislation. My right hon. Friend also provided the Council with a comprehensive report on the latest state of play in respect of the Sea Empress incident, paying particular tribute to all those who had been involved in the clean-up, and expressing the hope that the Commission would respond favourably to his request for financial assistance.

Council conclusions were agreed on the forthcoming 1996 session of the United Nations Commission on Sustainable Development and on the Community strategy for the protection of the ozone layer. I supported common positions which were agreed on the amendments to the waste shipments regulation and on the labelling of dangerous substances directive—67/548. The Council also agreed a Community negotiating mandate for a protocol to the Barcelona convention on the shipment of hazardous waste and on the Community negotiating mandate for an amendment to the Paris Commission to allow the use of hexachloroethane in certain limited circumstances.

The Council discussed the annexes to the proposed biocides directive and, for the first time, considered the Commission proposal to control emissions from off-road vehicles and the Commission communication on CO2 emissions from cars. These will all be discussed further at the June Environment Council. There were brief presentations from the Commission on the recently published communication on EC water policy and on the review of the fifth action programme.

I also attended a joint meeting with Environment Ministers of central and eastern Europe as part of the structured dialogue process. This showed continued enthusiasm for the environment for Europe process and indicated that most of the central and eastern countries were making good progress on the approximation of EC environmental legislation.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action has been taken to implement the recommendation of the Select Committee on the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill that an interdepartmental working party be convened to consider the problem of perceived blight. [21694]

Sir Paul Beresford: An interdepartmental working group has been established under the chairmanship of an official from my Department. The terms of reference of the group are as follows:

To review the scope, cause and effects of blight arising during the various stage of major infrastructure projects and to consider whether any practical changes can be made to the existing arrangements for property purchase and compensation, bearing in mind the concerns of the House of Commons Select Committee on the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill about those whose properties decline in value because of the perception of potential purchasers rather than because of any physical effects. In meeting this remit the working party will consider in particular:

—whether it is possible to define "generalised blight" in a way which would meet the concerns of the Select Committee without increasing or extending the blighting effects of major proposals;

—the extent and duration of the effects of blight on property values both in the shorter and longer term and the interaction with other local and national valuation effects;

—the scope for minimising blight by adopting a different approach to the provision of infrastructure and the selection of sites and the effect of such an approach on the existing arrangements for public consultation and participation in planning decisions;

—any relevant overseas experience;

—the likely costs of any new arrangements and their effect on the provision of infrastructure;

—any wider effects of any new arrangements on property values generally, including a comparison with the values of properties affected by other development proposals;

—if any remedy for those affected by "generalised blight" is considered appropriate, the practical application of such a remedy including the basis on which it might be determined, the eligibility of property owners, the geographical coverage in relation to the development proposals and the point at which it would be offered; and —any implications for the existing principles of the land compensation code or for the current arrangements for discretionary purchase.

In carrying though this work, the working party will also have regard to the principles of good administration.

Environmental Protection Advisory Committees

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the appointees to date to each of the new regional environmental protection advisory committees indicating the criteria by which they were selected. [21091]

Mr. Clappison: My right hon. Friend has appointed the chairmen of six of the seven regional committees in England, as follows:

Brian Alexander: North West

Penny Perry: Midlands

Betty Goble: Anglian

John Ferguson: Thames

Robert Crossett: Southern

Dennis Mitchell: South West

Many nominations for these posts were received in response to our public invitation and candidates were assessed according to their experience and knowledge in relation to the committees' functions and regions and their ability to lead these high profile committees.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has appointed Graham Court as chairman of the committee in Wales.

Further appointments, of individual members to each committee, are matters for the agency itself in accordance with the membership schemes recently approved by my right hon. Friend.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bosnia (Orsac Training Camp)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken in respect of the training camp set up at Orsac, Bosnia; and if he will make a statement. [20744]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: It is our understanding that the training camp at Orsac is no longer in operation.

Iran (Baha'i Community)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Iranian Government in respect of Mr. Dhabihu'llah Mahrami, a member of the Baha'i community in Yazad, charged with apostasy from Islam; and if he will make a statement. [20798]

Mr. Hanley: The Iranian Government are aware of our concern about Mr. Mahrami's situation. We understand that the death sentence imposed by the Islamic revolutionary court in Yazd has been overruled by the supreme court and that legal proceedings are continuing. We and our European partners will continue to monitor developments closely.

Intergovernmental Conference (Disabled People)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to support proposals at the forthcoming intergovernmental conference to safeguard the needs of disabled people; and if he will make a statement. [20799]

Mr. David Davis: We are committed to safeguarding the needs of disabled people and have taken positive action in this area with the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. We believe that the best way of effectively dealing with the problem of discrimination against disabled people is through strong national legislation of this kind.

Hong Kong (Reserves and Bullion)

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the ownership of the foreign reserves and bullion held by the Government of Hong Kong after the transfer of sovereignty to the People's Republic of China; and if he will make a statement. [20826]

Mr. Hanley: Hong Kong's financial reserves will in their entirety become those of the Hong Kong special administrative region.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of (a) the current value of the bullion and foreign reserves held by the Government of Hong Kong and (b) its value when the sovereignty of Hong Kong will be transferred to the People's Republic of China; and if he will make a statement. [20894]

Mr. Hanley: As at the end of December 1995, the value of the bullion and foreign exchange reserves of the Hong Kong exchange fund was US$57.1 billion. It is not possible to forecast the precise value of the reserves on the transfer of sovereignty, but we have every confidence that Hong Kong will maintain one of the highest levels of reserves in the world, especially in relation to the size of its population.

Bosnia

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the agency for intelligence and documentation set up by the Republic of Bosnia's Interior Ministry and of its compliance with the terms of the Dayton agreement. [20743]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: None.

European Parliament

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what buildings are currently rented by the European Parliament; and what buildings are being built for it. [20987]

Mr. David Davis: The European Parliament currently rents the following buildings:

in Luxembourg:

BAK building

NHE building

Schuman building

Senningerberg building

Tower building

in Strasbourg:

palais de l'Europe

IPE O, IPE I, IPE II, IPE III

in Brussels:

Belliard I, Belliard II, Belliard III and Belliard IV

Eastman building

Remorqueur building

Remard building

Van Maerlant building

D 1, D 2 and D 3 buildings

A new building complex is under construction in Brussels. It should be completed by May 1997.

A second building is under construction in Strasbourg, and is due for completion by the end of 1997.

European Parliament

Mr. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the allowances payable to Members of the European Parliament in 1996. [20986]

Mr. Davis: The following allowances are available to MEPs in 1996:

Travel—within the EU, 0.76 ecu or £0.64 for every km up to 400km, and 0.38 ecu or 0.32 for every km thereafter. Outside the EU, the cost of the return fare by the most direct route.

Subsistence on official travel—within the EU 219 ecu or £184.05 per day. Half this amount, plus hotel costs, outside the EU.

General office expenses—3,099 ecu or £2,604.40 per month.

Secretarial assistance—8,937 ecu or £7,510.65 per month.

Morocco

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs that representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Moroccan Government over the sentence imposed on Kelthoum Ahmed Labid El-Ouanat from Western Sahara; and if he will make a statement. [21006]

Mr. Hanley: The Guardian article of 9 March drew our attention to this case. We have now raised it with the Ministry of Human Rights in Morocco.

Competitive Tendering (Contracts)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by his Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21029]

Mr. Hanley: The number of contracts competitively tendered and their value for each of the last three years is not centrally available.

Council of Minsters (Decisions)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out each article of the consolidated "Treaties of the European Communities and Union"—cm 3151—which provide for decisions of its

Council of Ministers to be determined by unanimity or common accord, stating the purpose of each and the category of the power so bestowed relating to (a) appointment of persons, (b) the execution of principal duties or obligations laid down in the treaties, (c) decisions concerning future use of qualified majority or other forms of voting for specific purposes, (d) requirements for unanimity to prevent action by others, (e) approval of conventions under treaty powers and (f) other. [21157]

Mr. David Davis: I refer the hon. Member to the European Commission report to the intergovernmental conference study group on the operation of the treaty on European union which was deposited in the House on 12 June. 1995. Annex 7 of the report contains a list of treaty articles subject to unanimity. Unanimity is generally reserved to areas of particular sensitivity. It is not objectively possible to classify articles subject to unanimity on the basis requested by the hon. Member.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what dates and at what locations the Council of Ministers of the European Communities decided under the terms of article 236 of its treaty to convene intergovernmental conferences on (a) economic and monetary union and (b) political union. [21158]

Mr. Davis: The European Council meeting in Strasbourg in December 1989 convened an intergovernmental conference on economic and monetary union. The June 1990 European Council in Dublin convened a second intergovernmental conference on political union.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in each of the last 10 years the judgment of the full European Court of Justice has been contrary in principle to that of the advocate general. [21024]

Mr. David Davis: The EC treaty lays on advocates general the duty to assist the European Court of Justice by making reasoned submissions on cases brought before the court, acting with complete impartiality and independence. The ECJ is not bound to follow an opinion. In any given case, it may agree or disagree with any of the legal arguments in the opinion. Notable examples of cases where the court has disagreed strongly with the Advocate General include the recent Graham ruling on invalidity benefit and the Faccini Dori, case, where the court ruled out the possibility of horizontal direct effect for directives. An attempt to make a comparison of the kind requested by the hon. Member would inevitable oversimplify reality. Judgments can of course be contrary to elements of an opinion without overturning it entirely.

Kashmir

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has (a) requested and (b) received about Indian security forces erecting a fence on land within the United Nations line of control in Kashmir; and if he will make a statement. [21518]

Mr. Hanley: We are aware of recent press reports that the Government of India are erecting fending in the vicinity of the line of control. We have not requested information about this. We remain concerned about the situation in Kashmir and continue to urge restraint by all concerned.

CSV Media

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the sources from within the European Commission from which CSV Media receives financial support, indicating in each case the level of funding. [20510]

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 12 March 1996]: CSV Media received the following funding from the European Commission for 1995–96:

£752,247: European social fund

£50,000: European Commission campaign on race

£145,000: Play Safe in Europe campaign

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Responsibility (Bristol)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the duties of the hon. Member for Monmouth (Mr. Evans) in respect of the city of Bristol. [20601]

The Prime Minister: My hon. Friend the Member for Monmouth is helping to promote local regeneration in his role as sponsor Minister for Bristol.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what has been the total cost of answering questions to the Prime Minister in each Session since 1989–90; [21175]

(2) what was the cost of answering (a) an oral and (b) a written parliamentary question to the Prime Minister from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each parliamentary Session since 1989–90. [21455]

The Prime Minister: The information as requested is not available.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Hall: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a list of Ministers who have requested prior assent from the Prime Minister under "Questions of Procedure for Ministers", paragraph 74, for payment from public funds to meet the expenses of spouses accompanying Ministers on overseas visits; and if he will indicate which requests were granted and which were refused for each year since 1990. [17494]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 1 March 1996]: Complete records of such requests prior to 1995 have not been retained. The following Ministers were accompanied by their spouses on overseas visits at public expense in accordance with "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" from 1995 onwards.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Employee Fraud

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what data-matching exercises the Benefits Agency has carried out on its own employees; and how many employees have subsequently been discovered to be involved in (a) breaches of confidence and (b) illegal benefit claims. [19488]

Mr. Heald: In 1994, a limited clerical exercise involving three offices was undertaken to check staff national insurance numbers against records held in the departmental central index. The aim was to protect the interests of staff by checking that their national insurance number was not being used by other persons for fraudulent purposes. The exercise complied fully with Data Protection Act 1984 requirements, including appropriate authorisation, registration and the handling of data.

The appropriate trade union side was kept informed.

No cases of benefit fraud nor any breaches of confidence were found.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people who have been examined for the all-work test of incapacity have been found capable of work (a) in total and (b) during each month since April 1995, for each of the 11 medical services centres. [20180]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. National figures for the number of claimants disallowed following examination are in the table.

	Number
April 1995	10
May 1995	28
June 1995	1,087
July 1995	3,680
August 1995	5,015
September 1995	5,987
October 1995	7,281
November 1995	8,540
December 1995	5,716
January 1996	9,966
Total	47,310

These figures do not include clerically processed cases, credits-only cases or severe disablement allowance cases.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many IB50 all-work questionnaires have been issued by his Department in each of the months since April 1995; how many have been returned in the time allowed; and how many people failed to return the questionnaire without good cause in each of the 11 medical services centres. [20174]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the tables:

IB50 Questionnaires issued

	Number
April 1995	59,382
May 1995	140,929
June 1995	114,244
July 1995	87,020
August 1995	77,729
September 1995	93,976
October 1995	115,600
November 1995	124,295
December 1995	96,639
January 1996	156,319
Total	1,066,133

Claims disallowed because of failure to return questionnaire.

	Number
April 1995	0
May 1995	9
June 1995	724
July 1995	855
August 1995	630
September 1995	442
October 1995	608
November 1995	717
December 1995	655
January 1996	1,269
Total	5,909

Figures do not include clerically processed cases, credits-only cases or severe disablement allowance cases.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals (a) have been lodged to date against a decision that the claimant is capable of work and (b) have been heard; how many and what percentage were found in the claimant's favour; and how many claimant were represented. [20176]

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available as at the end of January 1996, is in the table:

	Number
Appeals lodged against AWT decision	26,506
Appeals heard	3,275
Appeals found in favour of claimant.	1,494
Percentage of appeals heard found in claimant's favour	45.6

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the savings to his Department from the introduction of incapacity benefit. [20181]

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 26 January 1996, Official Report, column 274.

Supply Estimates

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 4 March 1996, Official Report, columns 808–82, if he will set out as much of the information on Supply estimates and supplementary estimates for the DSS votes as is available for 1995–96. [20769]

Mr. Burt: The table sets out the original 1995–96 estimate provision and the changes secured in the summer and spring supplementary estimates for each of the votes accounted for by the Department of Social Security. Outturns for each of the votes will be published in due course in the Department's annual appropriation accounts.

1995–96
Class XIII, Vote 1	Central Government Administered Social Security Benefits and Other Payments	33,232,636	—	—	1,151,000
Class XIII, Vote 2[1]	Housing Benefit, Council Tax Benefit, Payments into the NI Fund and Payment into the Social Fund, IRO Regulated Expenditure	12,236,830	—	—	Token IK
Class XIII, Vote 3[2]	Housing Benefit Administration and Council Tax Benefit Administration, Payments into the Social Fund IRO Discretionary Expenditure and other Grants	403,139	—	14,566	1,550
Class XIII, Vote 4[2]	DSS Administration and Miscellaneous Services	2,676,396	—	—	19,355

[1]Vote title changed to housing benefit subsidies, council tax benefit subsidies, payments into the national insurance fund and payments into the social fund in respect of regulated expenditure, in Spring supplementary estimate.
[2]This vote is subject to a cash limit, the figures quoted above represent the NET provision.

Age Allowance

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of converting the 25p per week age allowance to pensioners on their 80th birthday into an annual £13 lump sum payment; and if he will make a statement. [21020]

Mr. Heald: The cost to the national insurance fund of converting the 25p per week age allowance to pensioners on their 80th birthday into an annual £13 lump sum payment is estimated to be £2 million per annum.

If the lump sum payment is not treated as weekly income for the purposes of calculating entitlement to income-related benefits, it is estimated that there could be income-related benefit costs of £9 million per annum.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance he plans to issue in respect of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995; and what monitoring will be undertaken of its provisions. [21539]

Mr. Burt: A brief guide to the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 was issued in November 1995 and further information material on the provisions of the Act will follow. There will be statutory guidance related to the definition of disability. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment will be issuing a code of practice relating to the employment provisions in the Act. The National Disability Council is currently consulting on its proposals for a code of practice relating to the rights of access to goods, facilities, services and property, which will be published by the Secretary of State in due course. All these items will be published in time to allow employers and service providers to prepare themselves for the introduction of the new rights and duties.

The Government will monitor the effectiveness of the Act by a range of measures, including research. The National Disability Council is also under a specific duty to advise the Government on the operation of the Act, and can recommend changes if necessary.

Social Fund

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what gross budget will be set for the discretionary social fund in 1996–97. [21641]

Mr. Roger Evans: I am pleased to announce that the social fund gross discretionary budget for 1996–97 will be £419.5 million—£97 million will be allocated to grants, £321.5 million to loans and the remaining £1 million will be set aside as a contingency reserve. The new allocations represent an increase of £13.5 million, or 3.3 per cent. over the total gross budget for 1995–96.

This represents a prudent increase, especially at a time when it is essential that every aspect of public expenditure is looked at very carefully. I am pleased that we have once again sustained our record in increasing the social fund budget each year since it began.

The recycling of loans means that we are able to give more help to more people and the loans system is being widely used. For example, between 1 April 1995 and 29 February 1996, over 1.8 million non-repayable grants and interest-free loans were made.

The increase from April 1996 will allow even more people to be helped.

Details of individual district budget allocations have been placed in the Library.

Funeral Expenses

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average size of loans from the discretionary social fund for additional funeral expenses since June 1995. [19881]

Mr. Roger Evans [holding answer 12 March 1996]: The information is set out in the table:

Average size of applications (excluding Northern Ireland)

Application type	Average application for flowers/ wreath	Average application for funeral expenses	Average application for other expenses	Average size of all applications
Community care grant	32.20	499.42	50.00	136.95
Budgeting loan	38.83	383.87	80.94	188.05
Dual application	34.69	434.85	113.64	150.69
Crisis loan	40.49	250.17	50.00	98.23

Application type	Average application for flowers/ wreath	Average application for funeral expenses	Average application for other expenses	Average size of all applications
Sub-total loans + DAs	36.42	395.59	93.31	153.84
Total	34.96	420.10	86.47	148.66

1. Applications may result in an award of a different payment type. Dual applications are applications for both a community care grant and a budgeting loan.

2. The information covers applications in the period between 5 June and 1 August 1995. It includes help with flowers, wreaths, funeral directors fees and other expenses.

3. Funeral expenses covered by the regulated scheme were specifically excluded from the discretionary fund from 2 August 1995.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioners receive an income equal to or above the median income of all pensioners; what has been the change in this figure since 1979; and if he will give a regional breakdown. [20021]

Mr. Heald: The definition of median is the income value which divides a population, when ranked by income, into two equal-sized groups. Thus it is always the case that 50 per cent. of pensioners receive an income equal to or above the median income of all pensioners.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

33. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General what recent representations he has received on the operation of public interest immunity certificates. [19409]

The Attorney-General: As I have told the House, representations have been invited on the use of public interest immunity certificates and the consultation remains open until 1 May.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which it would be correct for a judge to allow a disclosure contrary to a PII claim. [17793]

The Attorney-General: A judge may order disclosure of any documents covered by a PII claim where he judges this to be in the overall public interest. Since Conway v. Rimmer, 1968, it has been for Ministers to advance a PII claim for documents falling with a PII class, and for the court to weigh the public interest in non-disclosure against the public interest in disclosure for the purpose of doing justice.

Following the decision of the House of Lords in ex parte Wiley, 1994, it is now open to a Minister to make voluntary disclosure of documents falling within a PII class if he concludes that this is the overall public interest. Where a Minister is not satisfied that disclosure should be made the court remains the ultimate decision-maker and must balance the competing public interests and rule on disclosure.

Departmental Accountability

34. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Attorney-General what new proposals he has to improve the accountability of his Department to Parliament. [19410]

The Attorney-General: I am accountable to Parliament for the work of each of my four Departments, namely the Crown Prosecution Service, the Serious Fraud Office, the Treasury Solicitor's Department and my own secretariat. The nature and extent of my future supervision of export control prosecutions by Customs and Excise is under careful consideration.

Serious Fraud Office

35. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to improve the resources available to the Serious Fraud Office. [19411]

The Solicitor-General: In accordance with the recommendations of the Davie report, the division of resources between the Serious Fraud Office and the Crown Prosecution Service is kept under review following the issue of new criteria for the allocation of cases between them.

Crown Prosecution Service

36. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received urging improvements in liaison between the police and the Crown Prosecution Service. [19412]

The Attorney-General: No formal representations have been received. The CPS and the police are working closely together on a number of initiatives, including co-ordinated training, greater use of information technology and a scheme involving CPS lawyers giving on-the-spot legal advice in busy police stations.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make it his policy to impose a ceiling on fees paid to lawyers working for the Crown Prosecution Service; and if he will make a statement. [19686]

The Attorney-General: Fees paid to barristers and solicitors in private practice who are instructed by the Crown Prosecution Service to advise or prosecute are negotiated, for the most part, on an individual case basis and have regard to the work actually and reasonably performed.

Mr. Shiji Lapite

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects the Director of Public Prosecutions to make a decision on whether to bring charges in the case of Mr. Shiji Lapite. [17743]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service has requested transcripts of the evidence given at the inquest into the death of Mr. Lapite together with copies of any documents produced to the jury. It is expected that that material will be delivered to the service within the next few days. That material, together with the evidence available prior to the inquest, will then be carefully considered and, subject to any further inquiries that may prove necessary, the Crown Prosecution Service will then decide whether or not to institute criminal proceedings.

Electro-shock Batons

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Attorney-General (1) if he will seek to prosecute companies, a list of which has been sent to him, as being involved in the production and export of electro-shock batons; [21564]

(2) if the inquires by the Ministry of Defence police and Strathclyde police into allegations made by two "Despatches" programmes about electro-shock batons are now complete; and if he will make a statement. [21565]

The Attorney-General: I have not received any such list. With regard to any prosecution in relation to the "Despatches" programme, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office, to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 13 March 1996, Official Report, column 603, and also to my answer to her of 31 January 1996, Official Report, column 771.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Executive Agencies

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions in each of the past five years Ministers in his Deaprtmetn have passed (a) hon. Members' letters and (b) hon. Members' questions to agencies for response; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total number of letters and questions received. [19421]

Sir John Wheeler: The number of hon. Members' letters to Ministers in the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments which were passed to agencies for response in each of the last five years are as follows:

1992: 44

It is not possible to give a percentage figure as all the necessary information is not held centrally.

Responses to individual questions is a matter of public record, but composite information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Hotel Accommodation (Grants)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many grant applications there were to the Northern Ireland tourist board for the provision of a new hotel accommodation in the borough of Ards in each of the last three years; and how many of these applications were refused. [20465]

Mr. Ancram: Since the beginning of 1993 the number of applications received by NITB for financial assistance to develop the provision of hotel accommodation in the borough of Ards is as follows:

1994: 1

1995: 1

Both applications were refused on the grounds that they failed to meet the qualifying criteria of the tourism development scheme.

Listed Buildings

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many buildings in each constituency in Northern Ireland are listed (a) grade I and (b) grade II; and what was the corresponding number in 1990. [20217]

Mr. Moss: Listed buildings in Northern Ireland are graded as grade A, B+ and B2 rather than grade I, II etc. The attached table gives the number of buildings currently listed as grade A and grade B+ in each constituency in Northern Ireland.

On 31 December 1990 the total number of buildings listed as grade A was 153 and the total number listed as grade B+ was 263. It is not however possible to provide a breakdown of these figures by constituency in the time available. I will therefore write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy in the Library when the information becomes available.

Constituency	Number of Grade A buildings	Number of Grade B+ buildings
Foyle	6	15
East Londonderry	7	27
North Antrim	7	19
East Antrim	9	6
Mid Ulster	14	38
Fermanagh and South Tyrone	21	69
Upper Bann	3	14
Newry and Armagh	37	56
South Down	13	36
Strangford	6	11
LaganValley	9	14
North Down	11	13
South Antrim	15	18
Belfast North	2	13
Belfast West	24	21
Belfast South	8	18
Belfast East	1	9
Totals	193	397

Anglo-Irish Secretariat

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by date and department the presentations made in 1995 by civil servants of the Northern Ireland civil service to the Anglo-Irish secretariat in Maryfield and the subjects so covered. [11683]

Mr. Ancram: To ensure that the Government's policies in relation to Northern Ireland are effectively communicated to the Irish side of the secretariat, Irish officials are frequently briefed on a wide range of subjects which come within the scope of the Anglo-Irish Agreement. Details of such briefings and presentations are not, however, available in the form requested.

Departmental Equipment and Furniture

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the cost and number of items of equipment and furniture that (a) have been stolen and (b) are otherwise unaccounted for from his Department and its agencies in each of the past five years, listing by name any such items valued at £5,000 or more, and showing information technology material separately. [19038]

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested in respect of the Northern Ireland Office, Northern Ireland Departments and their agencies is as follows:

Year	(a) items[1] stolen		(b) items unaccounted for		Items value at £5,000 or more	IT items[2] (included in previous figures)
	Number	Cost £	Number	Cost £
1990–91	38	20,597	—	—	Lorry	—
1991–92	83	16,454	336	6,557	—	—
1992–93	71	20,579	216	6,398	—	10 items totalling £5,260
1993–94	203	27,802	247	4,435	Van	3 items totalling £860
1994–95	282	24,861	107	3,970	—	10 items totalling £8,099

[1]Figures do not include DOE items valued at less than £500 as their inclusion would incur disproportionate costs.
[2]An IT Notebook valued at £2,500 was also stolen, but the year cannot be identified.

Intensive Care Facilities

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hospitals in Northern Ireland have intensive care units; how many beds there are in each of the units; and what is the annual cost per intensive care bed in each hospital. [20216]

Mr. Moss: The information in the table shows the number of intensive care beds by hospital which were available during the year 1994–95.

	Number
Royal Victoria hospital	11
Antrim hospital	8
Belfast city hospital	6
Craigavon area hospital	6
Royal Belfast hospital for sick children	6
Altnagelvin hospital	5
Ulster hospital	4
Erne hospital	3
Mater Infirmorum hospital	3
Coleraine hospital	2
Tyrone county hospital	2

The information requested about the annual costs of intensive care beds is not held centrally.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library a list of all overseas visits made by all Ministers of his Department since 1990, including (a) details of the places visited and brief reasons for the visit, (b) details of the size, composition and cost to public funds of the delegation and (c) the names of non-ministerial members of each delegation and the capacity in which each was present. [17487]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 1 March 1996]: The requested information for 1990 to 1994 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, a list of visits made during 1995 is available and is as follows:

Overseas visits made by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and other NIO Ministers in 1995

Non-ministerial members of the delegations have not been named as it is not normal policy to do so. They were in attendance to provide support for Ministers.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Production

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the world to be unable to feed its population, given present trends in population growth and food production. [21003]

Mrs. Browning: Given sensible free market policies, I see no reason why the world should not be able to continue to feed is population.

Arable Farming

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list at current and constant prices in respect of arable farming for each of the last 15 years for (i) wheat and (ii) barley the (a) cost of input with special reference to seeds, chemicals and fertiliser, (b) cost of contracting and machinery, (c) total variable costs ((a) + (b)), (d) average yield per acre, (e) average sale price per ton, ex farm at standard moisture, (f) average income per acre and (g) average margin before rent and overheads, interest and capital ((f) - (a) + (b)). [20912]

Mr. Baldry: The information is not readily available in the form requested. However current price estimates of the gross margin of wheat and barley production in England and Wales between 1986 and 1993 are contained in "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom 1993–94" which was published last March. Copies are available in the Library of the House. Updated information, including some revisions to previous years will be contained in the 1994–95 edition which will be published on 19 March 1996. The estimates are compiled from occasional farm surveys together with information from a range of sources on prices and quantities of inputs and outputs for the intervening years. The yield per hectare, price per tonne and costs are based on the results from the sample of farmers included in the survey; prices are not converted to a standard moisture basis. Estimates in constant prices are not available.

Oil Dispersants (Toxicity)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what tests and certification procedures have been carried out by his Department into the toxicity of those dispersants used on oil from the Sea Empress and their effect on the marine environment; [20808]

(2) what tests and certification procedures have been carried out by his Department into the toxicity of those dispersants used on oil spilt from the Sea Empress and their effect on human health. [20809]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 14 March 1996]: The Department is responsible for the testing and approval of all products used to disperse oil at sea. Following a recent review, it has been confirmed that dispersants should continue to be tested for their efficacy and toxicity using agreed scientific protocols. These tests ensure that the products work and are no more toxic to marine life than the oil itself. Use of dispersant products in Great Britain is also subject to legislation enforced by the Health and Safety Executive. A copy of the review was placed in the Library of both Houses on completion earlier this year.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which dispersants sprayed on oil from the Sea Empress have been banned by which (a) European and (b) North American countries. [20760]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 14 March 1996]: All dispersants are tested for efficacy and toxicity before they can be approved for use in UK waters by the Department. The Ministry holds no information on which dispersants have been approved or banned by European and North American countries. This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the proportion of each chemical which constitutes the dispersants known as (a) Finasol OSR 51, (b) Slickgone LTSW, (c) Slickgone NS, (d) Dispolene 345, (e) Correctsit 9500, (f) Annersperse 9538 and (g) Super 25. [20764]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 14 March 1996]: The chemical constituents of dispersants and the proportion in which individual chemicals occur in products are confidential to the manufacturer. I listed all active ingredients of dispersants sprayed on oil from the Sea Empress in a recent answer. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Ceredigian and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) on 4 March 1996, Official Report, column 83. The Department does not recognise Dispolene 345, Correctsit 9500 and Annersperse 9538 as dispersant products and has not approved products with these names.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when (a) Finasol OSR 51, (b) Slickgone LTSW, (c) Slickgone NS, (d) Dispolene 345, (e) Correctsit 9500, (f) Annersperse 9538 and (g) Super 25 were tested and approved for use on oil spills; and which department approved them. [20761]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 14 March 1996]: Dispolene 345, Correctsit 9500 and Annersperse 9538 are not approved dispersant products. All the remaining dispersants listed have been approved by the Department following successful completion of efficacy and toxicity tests.

The approval dates are as follows:

Finasol OSR 51: 1987

Slickgone LTSW: 1984

Slickgone NS: 1988

Super 25: 1990

Riding Stables

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations have been made to him on behalf of small-scale riding stables about problems arising from the cost of implementing regulations. [20215]

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply, in view of the Home Office's responsibilities for the Riding Establishments Acts.

The Home Office has received no recent representations from this sector.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

"Employers Guide to Stress"

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what costs her Department incurred in the production of the document "Employers Guide to Stress". [20548]

Mr. Forth: None.

Barnsley and Doncaster Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what funds her Department provided to Barnsley and Doncaster TEC in (a) 1994–95 and (b) 1995–96; and what amount is planned for 1996–97. [20721]

Mr. Paice: Information on Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council's budget for 1994–95 and 1995–96 was published in a written answer of 1 November 1995, Official Report, column 364, to the hon. Member. The budget for 1996–97 is at present being negotiated by officials from the Government office for Yorkshire and Humberside and representatives from the TEC.

Equal Opportunities Commission

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the budget for the Equal Opportunities Commission in each year since its inception (a) in cash, (b) in real terms and (c) as a percentage change on the previous year. [20739]

Mrs. Gillan: The information is set out in the following table:

Year	Grant in aid cash terms	Percentage change on previous year	Grant in aid 1994–95 prices	Percentage change on previous year
1976–77	850,430	0	3,220,000	0
1977–78	1,460,699	71.8	4,869,000	51.2
1978–79	1,644,650	12.6	4,924,000	1.1
1979–80	2,146,109	30.5	5,517,000	12
1980–81	2,520,270	17.4	5,478,000	–0.7
1981–82	2,911,000	15.5	5,764,000	5.2
1982–83	3,046,000	4.6	5,630,000	–2.3
1983–84	3,168,000	4	5,597,000	–0.6
1984–85	3,387,000	6.9	5,702,000	1.9
1985–86	3,434,000	1.4	5,477,000	–4
1986–87	3,538,000	3	5,477,000	0
1987–88	3,716,000	5	5,457,000	–0.4
1988–89	3,810,000	2.5	5,248,000	–3.8
1989–90	3,894,000	2.2	5,012,000	–4.5
1990–91	4,579,000	17.6	5,458,000	8.9
1991–92	4,864,000	6.2	5,459,000	0.02
1992–93	5,282,000	8.6	5,692,000	4.3
1993–94	5,794,000	9.7	6,067,000	6.6
1994–95	5,949,000	2.7	6,114,000	0.8
1995–96	6,429,533	8.1	6,429,533	5.2

1. Between 29 December 1975 and 31 March 1976, while the commission was in the process of being established, its expenditure was met directly by the Home Office and other Government Departments.

2. The amount of grant in aid for 1995–96 includes the supplementary grant of £273,533 recently agreed by the Department to cover expenditure on information technology equipment.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the budget for the Equal Opportunities Commission for 1996–97; and what are the planned budgets for future years. [20740]

Mrs. Gillan: The grant in aid for the Equal Opportunities Commission for 1996–97 is £5,820,650. Grant in aid for each of the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99 is £5,792,150.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the future of the Equal Opportunities Commission. [20741]

Mrs. Gillan: The Government are fully committed to the work of the Equal Opportunities Commission. Many thousands of people have cause to thank the commission for its work over the last 20 years and its success in changing attitudes. I have recently paid tribute to that work.

The Government have no plans to seek changes to the legislation which defines the EOC's responsibilities and duties.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people are currently employed by the Equal Opportunities Commission. [20738]

Mrs. Gillan: There are currently 187 people employed by the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Nursery Voucher Scheme (Bedfordshire)

Sir Graham Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of four-year-olds not at present receiving nursery education in Bedfordshire who would do so with the introduction of nursery vouchers. [20747]

Mr. Robin Squire: The annual school census for January 1996 will give detailed information in the existing provision in maintained schools. The number of additional places created through the nursery voucher scheme in any local authority area will depend on the response of providers to parental demand. We are currently collecting data from every local education authority on its number of four-year-olds, including those in nursery education. I am confident that providers of all types, either alone or in partnership will satisfy parental demand over time.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what signing-on arrangements she plans to place on (a) existing postal claimants and (b) new claimants who reside more than six miles from an Employment Service office when they sign on for jobseeker's allowance; and if she will make a statement. [20785]

Mr. Forth: Most jobseekers will be required to attend a jobcentre every fortnight to sign a declaration that they have been available for employment, have been actively seeking employment and that their circumstances have not changed. Jobseekers will be allowed to provide such a signed declaration by post where:

- their journey between their home and the jobcentre in either direction would take over one hour using appropriate means of transport; or
- attendance would involve an absence from home over four hours; or
- they have a disability which reduces their mobility

They will be required to attend a jobcentre every 13 weeks for an interview with an Employment Service adviser.

Existing postal claimants who do not meet these new criteria will be required to attend the jobcentre fortnightly after their first quarterly review following the introduction of jobseeker's allowance. This conversion process should be completed within three months from 7 October.

Competitive Tendering (Contracts)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by her Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21038]

Mr. Robin Squire: Detailed information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost, although it is a fundamental principle of DFEE purchasing policy that contracts should generally be let through competitive tender.

Degree Level Examination (Cheating)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many person taking degree level qualifications in United Kingdom institutions have been found guilty of cheating in examinations in each year since 1979. [20899]

Mr. Forth: Degree-awarding institutions are autonomous bodies responsible for their own examination and assessment procedures. The information requested is not collected by the Department.

State Schools (Self-government)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to extend self-governing status to all state schools; and when she expects to make an announcement on her proposals. [21084]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government are committed to extending the benefits of self-government to all state schools. We are currently looking at the options for achieving this. We will announce our conclusions as soon as we are ready.

Zero-hours Contracts

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the current prevalence of zero-hours contracts; how many employees are estimated to be employed under such contracts; how many companies operate them; and what action she proposes to take in respect of such contracts. [20868]

Mr. Forth: The Department monitors developments in the labour market, including current working practices. Although there is no nationally representative information, the limited evidence available suggests the use of zero-hours contracts is not widespread. The Department believes it is for employers and employees to decide for themselves the form of work that best suits their particular circumstances.

Grant-maintained Status (Ballots)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in respect of which cases of schools holding ballots on grant-maintained status her Department has investigated complaints about the circumstances surrounding the conduct of the ballot; and if she will indicate for each (a) how many complaints were received, (b) the nature of the complaints, (c) the outcome of the investigation and (d) what action has been taken. [21083]

Mrs. Gillan: The following table shows such information as is readily available about the 60 investigations of ballots for grant-maintained status which have been completed to date.

School Inspections

Ms Estelle Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 602, what statistics her Department collates on the number of lay inspectors who have undertaken inspections in the last five years. [21134]

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and employment how many independent schools have had a full Office for Standards in Eduction inspection in each year since 1993–94; and how many she expects to take place in 1996–97 and 1997–98. [21156]

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the Office of Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Members.

Delegated Schools Budget

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will instigate a further consultation exercise on extending the delegated schools budgets beyond 85 per cent. of the potential schools budget. [21085]

Mr. Robin Squire: I have no immediate plans to do so.

Teachers' Pay and Conditions

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many local education authority maintained schools fall into each of the schoolteachers' pay and conditions groups 1 to 6; and in each case how many of the head teachers' salaries fall into each pay spine point in the scale in the last year for which figures are available. [21057]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table shows the head teachers, in the local education authority maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector in England and Wales, identified in the Teachers Pensions Agency database of teachers, records on a spine point of at least the minimum for the appropriate school group.

Youth Training

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is (a) the number and (b) the percentage of youth training trainees who currently have employed status. [21090]

Mr. Paice: As at December 1995, there were 284,500 on youth training in Great Britain. An estimated 54 per cent. had employed status.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people were on (a) youth training and youth credits and (b) modern apprenticeship schemes (i) on average for 1994–95 and (ii) at the last date for which figures are available. [21089]

Mr. Paice: On average in 1994–95, there were 278,000 people on youth training in Great Britain. In December 1995, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 284,500 people on YT in Great Britain.

As modern apprenticeship prototypes did not begin until September 1994, it is not possible to give an average figure for the full financial year 1994–95. However, on 7 April 1995 according to training and enterprise council estimates 1,393 people had started modern apprenticeships in the 17 prototype TECs in England.

In December 1995, the latest date for which figures are available, there were over 16,000 people on modern apprenticeships in Great Britain. However, the number is growing rapidly and there are currently estimated to be over 20,000 on modern apprenticeships.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what sums from public funds are currently controlled by (a) TECs and (b) local enterprise companies. [21088]

Mr. Paice: Training and enterprise council budgets on DFEE programmes for 1995–96 are £1,246 million for England. TECs also contract separately with other Government Departments such as the Department for Trade and Industry and the Department of the Environment. Funds controlled by TECs in Wales and LECs in Scotland are a matter for the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland.

Football Players (Transfer System)

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on (i) the new criteria for work permits for foreign football players (a) when they first enter the country, (b) after the first full 12 months and set number of appearances and (c) on moving to another United Kingdom football club and (ii) the likely effect on extra work permits of the EC ruling on foreign players; and if she will meet the Football Association and the Professional Footballers Association in the near future to discuss the new situation and the outcome of the Bosman decision. [21260]

Mrs. Gillan: The work permit criteria remain unchanged for foreign footballers when they first enter the country and where they are retained by their club after the first or successive season. Permits are normally issued only for current internationals. To qualify for extension of their work permits, footballers must normally play in approximately 75 per cent. of their club's first team games. The work permit criteria governing transfer to another club have been revised to allow players who are current internationals one work permit transfer to a new club regardless of the number of first team appearances they have made for their existing club. Thereafter, to qualify for a further permit they will again normally be expected to play in approximately 75 per cent. of first team games.

The Department consulted the football bodies about the revised criteria. The decision of the European Court of Justice in the Bosman case concerns transfer fees and rules operated by the sporting bodies. It does not affect the issue of work permits.

Field System Computer Package

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much was spent by (a) her Department and (b) training and enterprise councils to develop the field system computer package; and how many TECs are presently using the system. [20524]

Mr. Paice [holding answer 14 March 1996]: The Department for Education and Employment spent £12.414 million in developing the field system—TFS. A further £30.222 million was spent on computer equipment, installation and training. Training and enterprise councils did not contribute toward the cost of developing the system. In April 1993, the Department withdrew from supporting TFS, and TECs became fully responsible for meeting their own information technology needs. Up-to-date information on TECs' usage of the system is not available.

TRANSPORT

Global Maritime Distress and Safety System

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is in a position to announce the establishment of a UK A1 area under the provisions of the global maritime distress and safety system. [16340]

Mr. Norris: I am pleased to announce that the seas around the UK coastline will become an A1 area—that is, an area within automated very high frequency radiotelephone coverage of coast stations.

Between now and 1999, VHF digital selective calling—DSC—equipment will be installed in HM Coastguard's radio sites. Implementation will begin this year with stations in the English channel. The GMDSS system is being implemented in line with requirements in the safety of life at sea convention—SOLAS—and applies to passenger and merchant vessels of 300 gross tonnage and upwards, for both national and international voyages.

This decision means that, as implementation progresses, ship operators in the sea area around the UK coast will be able to press a simple distress button automatically to alert shore-based DSC stations as well as other ships. The system does not need voice activation or telegraphy and so will speed up the transmission of distress messages. In order to maintain services for smaller vessels not covered by the new system, HM Coastguard will maintain a listening watch on the present calling and safety channel, channel 16, for as long as necessary after 1 February 1999.

Oil Tankers

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many spillages from oil tankers have occurred (a) worldwide and (b) in European waters in the last 10 years; and how many spillages involved vessels flying flags of convenience. [17593]

Mr. Norris: Estimates from the International Tanker Owners Federation are that there were 366 oil spills from oil tankers, of 7 tonnes or more, worldwide between 1986 and 1995. Of these, 91 were in European waters. Complete information on the flag of the vessels involved is not available.

Milford Haven

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in which circumstances tankers operate in and out of Milford Haven without tugs. [17893]

Mr. Norris: It is normal practice for tankers to use the navigable channels at the entrance of Milford Haven without tugs.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he will take to ensure that a salvage tug is located at Milford Haven. [20909]

Mr. Norris: The Coastguard agency continues to keep the supply of emergency tugs under review. In deciding future deployment, we will take into account experience of the Government-funded provision of dedicated emergency tugs at Dover and Stornoway this winter, of liaison arrangements with tug operators, and of any relevant findings of the investigations into the Sea Empress incident.

Transport Policies and Programmes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what monitoring is undertaken by his Department of the total value of all the bids for (a) packages, (b) major road schemes and (c) bridge strengthening, as submitted by local highway authorities in their transport policies and programmes documents; and in what form this information is publicly available. [18161]

Mr. Norris: My Department keeps records under all headings of bids that local authorities make in their annual TPP submissions. All information kept on the local transport database is publicly available on request. Under the code of practice on access to Government information, a charge may be made where a significant amount of staff time is needed to process the data requested.

Airports

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each recommendation set out in the airports policy White Paper 1985 the actions his Department has taken to date. [18290]

Mr. Norris: My Department has submitted a note to the inspector of the current public inquiry into BAA plc's plans for a fifth terminal at Heathrow which addresses the developments in airports policy since the 1985 White Paper. I have placed a copy of this note in the Library of the House.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the major initiatives taken by his Department relating to aviation since the publication of the 1985 airports policy White Paper. [18442]

Mr. Norris: The Department has taken forward a wide range of aviation initiatives in respect of air traffic control, noise and emissions, provision of airport capacity, privatisation of Government and local authority-owned airports, and the liberalisatio of air services between the UK and other countries. Key achievements are summarised in the annual departmental reports since 1991, and prior to that in the transport section of the Government's expenditure plans. In respect of airports policy, I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I am giving today to her Question 18290.

Railway Property (Scotland)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the (a) area and (b) asset value of (i) operational and (ii) non-operational land owned by the British Rail Property Board and other British Railways Board subsidiaries in Scotland. [19303]

Mr. Watts: This is a matter for the British Railways Board but it informs me that the total area owned by British Rail in Scotland is approximately 1,670 acres, the great majority being non-operational land. British Rail cannot differentiate accurately between operational and non-operational land. British Rail's assets are not analysed geographically in the board's annual accounts.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the area of (a) operational land and (b) non-operational land owned by Railtrack plc in Scotland. [19304]

Mr. Watts: This is a matter for Railtrack but it informs me that the total area owned by Railtrack in Scotland is approximately 14,850 acres, of which the vast majority is operational land. Railtrack cannot differentiate accurately between operational and non-operational land.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated asset value of the railway network owned by Railtrack plc in Scotland; and what is the division in value of these assets between (a) lines in use by train services, (b) stations, (c) other operational property and (d) non-operational land and property. [19299]

Mr. Watts: Railtrack's assets are not analysed geographically in its balance sheet.

HGV Licences (Eyesight Tests)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will issue clear guidance to lorry drivers on EU policy in respect of lorry drivers' eye tests without the use of spectacles; and if he will place a copy of such guidance in the Library. [19664]

Mr. Norris: The regulations including provisions on new eyesight standards for drivers of group 2 vehicles—lorries and buses—will be laid shortly. Full guidance on interpretation and introduction will be issued before the regulations become effective and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Driving Tests

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he intends to take to inform those who passed their car driving test before 1 December 1990 that they will need to take a compulsory basic training course to ride motor cycles of 50 cc and over from 1 July onwards. [20784]

Mr. Norris: A press notice was issued last August 1995 when the proposal was first announced, and a further press notice was issued in December when the plans were confirmed. Guidance on the amended position regarding CBT has been included in a revised factsheet on motorcycles that is made generally available, and will also be included in the advice leaflet planned to accompany vehicle excise duty reminders. Further, the Department is working with the motor cycle retailing and training industries on a media campaign involving press articles, interviews and public information announcements in national and local media.

Northern Line Trains

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what compensation GEC will be required to pay for the late delivery of trains for the Northern line. [20612]

Mr. Norris: I understand that GEC Alsthom's contract with London Underground for the supply of new trains for the Northern line provides for full compensation in the event of late delivery of trains. The terms for payment of such compensation are commercially confidential.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are being taken by his Department to discourage the use of private cars in town and city centres; and if he will make a statement. [20652]

Mr. Norris: It is for local authorities to determine the traffic management strategy most appropriate to their area, having regard to local circumstances. Some measure of restraint, for instance parking controls or restrictions on vehicular access, is likely to feature in an effective strategy. The Government encourage people to travel by means other than the private car—cycling, walking and public transport—where that option is open to them.

Public Transport

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps are being taken by his Department to promote public transport in and around traffic congested towns and cities; and if he will make a statement; [20737]

(2) what provisions are being made by his Department to improve the quality of public transport; and if he will make a statement. [20728]

Mr. Norris: The Department's spending plans for 1996–97 provide extensive support for public transport. These plans include £1.6 billion for passenger rail services, nearly £1 billion for London Transport, some £79 million for local transport packages which focus on promotion of alternatives to the car and many of which include ambitious programmes of public transport priorities, and some £55 million for larger public transport schemes. Under my chairmanship, the bus working group, comprising representatives of bus operators, local authorities and bus users, has been considering ways to improve bus services. I announced on 8 January a number of practical steps to promote the use of the bus and a programme of further work, which is being actively pursued in co-operation with operators and local authorities. Finally, the Government are actively promoting the role of the private sector in the funding and operation of public transport, notably through rail privatisation, the aim of which is to improve the quality of rail services by giving the private sector the opportunity to bring about the further improvements to services that customers want.

Stretch Limousines

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what measures are in force to ensure that stretch limousines imported from the United States of America conform with all safety standards for use in the United Kingdom; [20573]

(2) when the construction specifications for stretch limousines were established; and what advice was sought in their preparation; [20580]

(3) what construction and use regulations apply to stretch limousines imported from the United States of America and operated in the United Kingdom. [20720]

Mr. Norris: There are no special regulations relating to stretch limousines imported from the United States of America: they have to comply, like other motor vehicles, with all applicable requirements of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986, as amended, and of the Road Vehicles Lighting Regulations 1989, as amended, which are subject to wide consultation with interested parties. All such vehicles have to be type approved unless they come into the UK as personal imports. Compliance with key safety and environmental standards is checked annually at MOT tests and also at the roadside by police.

Car Number Plates

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions his Department has had with the Association of Chief Police Officers on the visibility and legibility of the different print types used on car number plates. [20575]

Mr. Norris: The Association of Chief Police Officers was consulted by this Department recently on possible refinements in the character font for vehicle number plates to improve legibility. ACPO was also represented, along with this Department, on the British standards committee reviewing the standard for the physical characteristics—for example, visibility, strength, reflectivity—of the number plate.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what regulations govern the specifications of car number plates. [20574]

Mr. Norris: The relevant legislation is the Road Vehicles (Registration and Licensing) Regulations 1971.

Seat Belts

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the percentage of car occupants who he estimates currently wear seat belts in (a) front seats and (b) rear seats; and if he will make a statement. [20864]

Mr. Norris: The latest survey by the Transport Research Laboratory, in October 1995, showed that 91 per cent. of drivers, 92 per cent. of front seat passengers and 64 per cent. of rear seat passengers in cars were wearing seat belts.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes in the legislation regarding use of seat belts in respect of (a) those at present excluded and (b) enforcement of existing regulations; and if he will make a statement. [20865]

Mr. Norris: No changes are currently planned to the exemptions from seat belt wearing. Enforcement of the existing regulations is a matter for the police.

Charter Flights (Safety)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to check the airworthiness of all aircraft used in the holiday charter market; and if he will make a statement. [21116]

Mr. Norris: All international public transport aircraft are required to have a certificate of airworthiness issued by the aviation authority of their state of registration. Before permission is granted for a non-European Economic Area aircraft to fly to the United Kingdom, the Department of Transport seeks confirmation that such a certificate has been issued in respect of the aircraft. If there is any doubt about the safe operation of the aircraft, no permit will be issued until the Department is satisfied as to its safety. This may involve the Department asking the Civil Aviation Authority to conduct a physical check of the aircraft.

Buses (Safety)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what restrictions apply to passenger carrying buses operating on motorways in respect of (a) standing passengers and (b) type of entry and exit; and if he will make a statement. [20863]

Mr. Norris: The measures controlling standing passengers set out in my answer of 1 February, Official Report, column 844, apply to all bus and coach operations. There are no additional restrictions for motorways. Regulations governing the number, position and size of the entrance and exits are contained in the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986, as amended, and the Public Service Vehicles (Condition of Fitness, Equipment, Use and Certification) Regulations 1981.

Traffic and Economic Growth

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the relationship between economic growth and traffic growth; and what assessment he has made of changes in that relationship in the future. [21135]

Mr. Norris: Road traffic levels have in the past been driven largely by economic growth. Any significant change in that relationship would have to flow from major changes in present policies, lifestyles and industrial practices.

Competitive Tendering (Contracts)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by his Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21030]

Mr. Norris: The Department's normal practice is to secure the goods and services it requires through competitive tendering. Departmental expenditure on goods and services in each of the last three years is set out in the table.

Year	Expenditure £ million
1992–93	500.9
1993–94	490.1
1994–95	473.0

Details of the number of contracts awarded in the above years are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Road Accidents

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) deaths and (b) injuries resulting from road accidents have been recorded in each year of the last 10 years (i) nationally and (ii) in the Greater Manchester area; and how many of those affected were under the age of 16 years. [21419]

Mr. Norris: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Ferries (Safety)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to encourage ferry companies to install watertight internal doors on the vehicle decks on roll-on roll-off vessels in a similar manner to those being fitted in Norway; [20602]

(2) when roll-on roll-off ferries using British ports will meet the safety standards shortly to be universally applied to Norwegian ferries. [20163]

Mr. Norris: All ferry operators operating to and from the UK will be required to apply, within the agreed time scales, the survivability standard agreed with Norway and other maritime administrations last month at the Stockholm conference. The measures necessary to comply with the standard will depend on the characteristics of the individual ships.

Orimulsion

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the precautions to be taken to protect the Pembroke coastline against a spill of orimulsion from ships delivering to Pembroke power station. [20849]

Mr. Norris: Like all ships carrying oils in bulk, ships transporting orimulsion are required to be constructed and operated in compliance with the UK regulation giving effect to internationally accepted rules and standards on the prevention of pollution. Any additional conditions attached to the grant of planning permission in respect of the current applications for the construction of a jetty and for the conversion of Pembroke power station are matters for the local authority and the President of the Board of Trade respectively.

EU Driving Licence

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what EU symbols the new driving licence will incorporate; by whom and when this was agreed; and what parliamentary approval was sought. [21213]

Mr. Norris: Gold stars which encircle the letters indicating the member state appear on a blue panel in the top left hand corner of the proposed plastic photocard driving licence. The proposal for an amending directive which will allow member states the option of introducing licences in a common plastic format has not yet been adopted, but a common position was adopted at the Council of Transport Ministers of 7 and 8 December 1995. An explanatory memorandum on the proposal was submitted to the House of Commons Select Committee on European Legislation in July 1995, and was considered by the Committee on 18 October 1995.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Upper Waiting Hall Exhibition

Mr. Harris: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the coverage of Parliament by PA News in the Upper Waiting Hall. [21672]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 13 May to Friday 17 May 1996.

Advisory Committee on Works of Art

Mr. Jessel: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what changes have been made to the membership of the Advisory Committee on Works of Art. [21690]

Mr. Beith: I understand that Madam Speaker has appointed to the Advisory Committee on Works of Art the hon. Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson) in place of the right hon. Member for Horsham (Sir P. Hordern).

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Research Councils

Mr. Miller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was (a) the total amount of funding allocated by the Government to each of the research councils, indicating what proportion of that funding was allocated in respect of indirect costs, (b) the total amount of funding awarded by each of the research councils in respect of indirect costs for research projects supported by the councils and (c) the total number of research projects supported by the research councils in each of the financial years from 1990–91 to 1994–95; how many applications for funding to the research councils claimed for indirect costs and how many of these were supported; into what specific categories funding awarded for projects by each research council was divided; and how much was allocated to each category. [18807]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information is not all available in the form requested.

[1] The new research council system was set up from 1 April 1994.

From 1 August 1992, there was a shift in the dual support boundary which involved the redefinition of responsibilities—and the transfer of appropriate funding to the research councils—for meeting costs associated with research projects. The above figures therefore include the funds transferred to the research councils. This transfer of funds is known as the dual support transfer.

Research councils are now responsible for funding all the direct costs—other than the costs of permanent academic staff—associated with the projects that they fund and a contribution to the indirect costs or overheads. The institution receiving the research council grant is still responsible for meeting the costs of the maintenance of premises, the permanent academic staff, and central computing costs.

The new funding arrangements applied in full to new grants beginning on or after 1 August 1992. Grants that started before that date were subject to transitional arrangements: no additional direct costs were payable on these grants, but indirect costs were paid as for new grants.

No funding is specifically allocated to the research councils in respect of indirect costs.

(b) The total amount of funding awarded by each of the research councils in respect of indirect costs for research projects from 1990–91 to 1994–95.

Research councils contribute to indirect costs through a standard percentage addition—40 per cent.—to any direct staff costs. All awards to higher education institutions with staff costs will therefore automatically be awarded indirect costs.

(c) The total number of research projects in higher education institutions supported by the research councils from 1990–91 to 1994–95.

The information available gives the number of new awards in each academic year.

Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council—BBSRC

For 1990–91 to 1993–94, BBSRC data are compiled from Agricultural and Food Research Council—AFRC—data on responsive-mode awards and on all SERC award data relevant to the BBSRC portfolio. The AFRC and SERC data are therefore shown separately; the 1994–95 data are for BBSRC responsive-mode awards.

Burma (Trade Missions)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for future trade missions to Burma. [21066]

Mr. Nelson: Two DTI-supported trade missions were planned for 1996. The first took place from 26 February to 1 March. We intend to evaluate the results of this mission before deciding on supporting the second.

Companies (Financial Assistance)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial assistance has been given since 1980 by his Department to (a) MGC Technical Services Ltd., Plymouth, (b) Ivens Electronics Ltd., Plymouth, (c) Ridgewood Industries Ltd., Plymouth, (d) Ridgewood Electronics Ltd., Plymouth, (e) Ridgewood Engineering Ltd., Plymouth, (f) Ridgewood Holdings Ltd., Plymouth and (g) Avocet (UK) Ltd. by (i) type of grant and (ii) date. [19468]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 7 March 1996]: Two of the companies have received assistance under the Department's principal regional, enterprise and technology schemes since 1980:

Company	Scheme	Payment £	Year
MGC Technical Services Ltd.	Consultancy Initiative (CI)	4,521	1991
Ivens Electronics Ltd.	Regional Selective Assistance	50,000	1989
Ivens Electronics Ltd.	CI	5,185	1990

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the financial assistance that has been given since 1980 by his Department to (a) Queensbury International Ltd., Plymouth, (b) Pendennis Shipyard Ltd., Falmouth, (c) H. Beare and Sons Ltd., Newton Abbot, (d) Bredy Agricentre Ltd., Newton Abbot, (e) Cox and Sons (Wellington) Ltd., (f) Drilldown Ltd., (g) Brompton House plc and (h) Graffiti Management Ltd., by (i) type of grant and (ii) date. [19470]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 7 March 1996]: Two of the companies have received assistance under the Department's principal regional, enterprise and technology schemes since 1980:

Company	Scheme	Payment £	Year
Queensbury International Ltd.	Consultancy Initiative	3,284	1993
Pendennis Shipyard Ltd.	Regional Selective Assistance	350,000	1993 and 1995

In addition, a loan to Queensbury International Ltd. was guaranteed under the loan guarantee scheme in 1994.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial assistance has been given since 1980 by his Department to (a) Country Farm Inns Ltd., (b) CFI Ltd., (c) Dellcourts Ltd. Totnes, (d) Sandy Beach Freehold Ltd., (e) Porthcurno Management Co. Ltd., (f) KJH Consultants Ltd. and (g) South West Farm Processors Ltd. by (i) type of grant and (ii) date. [19469]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 7 March 1996]: Only one of these companies—South West Farm Processors Ltd.—received assistance under the Department's principal regional, enterprise and technology schemes since 1980: £1,800 under the consultancy initiative in 1989 and £100,000 regional selective assistance in 1992.

A loan to Porthcurno Management Company Ltd. was guaranteed under the loan guarantee scheme in 1993.

TREASURY

Taxation

Mr. Hall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all tax threshold rates and personal allowances for each year since 1976–77 (i) at 1976 constant prices and (ii) at 1996 constant prices. [19813]

Mr. Jack: Available information is given in the table. As the retail price index is not yet available for calendar year 1996, earnings tax thresholds have been given at 1995 constant prices.

Income Tax

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 26 February 1996, Official Report, column 372, what would be the estimated full-year costs at 1996–97 income levels of introducing a single positive rate of income tax at 20 per cent., assuming transferable personal allowances of £5,000 per person and the abolition of all other tax expenditures, exemptions and reliefs now allowable against income tax. [20334]

Mr. Jack: The estimated full-year cost of introducing a single 20 per cent. rate of income tax at 1996–97 income levels would be about £12 billion. This assumes a personal allowance of £5,000 transferable between spouses and the abolition of all other income tax allowances, and mortgage interest relief, tax relief on employee's contributions to occupational and personal pension schemes, reliefs for TESSAs, PEPs and profit-related pay, national savings certificates, employee share schemes and charitable giving.

This estimate does not take into account the substantial behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of such a change nor do they allow for any subsequent changes to the tax system, such as changes to tax relief on employer's contributions to pension schemes or relief for investment income in pension funds.

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of all tax expenditures, reliefs, exemptions and allowances allowable against income tax excluding personal allowances (a) in 1979, (b) 1983, (c) 1987, (d) 1992 and (e) in the latest year for which figures are available. [20343]

Mr. Jack: The available historical information about the costs of income tax allowances and reliefs have been published in Inland Revenue Statistics. Table 1.6 of Inland Revenue Statistics 1995 contains figures for the latest years. Copies can be found in the Library.

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the total revenue that would be raised from personal income tax for the year 1996–97 if there were a flat rate of 20 per cent., no deductible allowances, but the first £10,000 of income was tax free. [20825]

Mr. Jack: Available information was given in my answer to the hon. Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 7 February 1996, Official Report, column 186.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of income tax is paid by the top 5 per cent. of income tax payers; and what was the figure in 1979. [20731]

Mr. Jack: It is estimated that in 1996–97 the top 5 per cent. of income tax payers will pay 34 per cent. of the total income tax liability compared with 24 per cent. in 1978–79.

Government Grants

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines there are on income tax liability for Government grants made to individuals to meet the costs of non-statutory services. [19136]

Mr. Jack: The income tax liability on any particular Government grant would depend on the nature of the grant and the circumstances of the individual. For example, a grant provided by Government which is not income or benefit from employment or profit from a trade or profession, would not be liable to income tax under schedule D or E.

Departmental Equipment and Furniture

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the cost and number of items of equipment and furniture that (a) have been stolen and (b) are otherwise unaccounted for from his Department and its agencies in each of the past five years, listing by name any such items valued at £5,000 or more, and showing information technology material separately. [19041]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Available information in respect of the Treasury and the Chancellor's four agencies is as follows, all values being approximate:

HM Treasury

Over the last five years 61 items have been recorded as stolen collectively valued at £31,000. The item valued over £5,000 is uninterruptable power supply, £9,000.

Paymaster Agency

No IT equipment was stolen in the last five years. Two other items were stolen in 1995–96, together valued at £520.

Royal Mint

No equipment stolen in the last five years.

Central Statistical Office

The total amount of equipment recorded as stolen is as follows:

1993–94: £3,590

No data exist for previous years. The only recorded loss over £5,000 occurred in 1995–96, this was a Panasonic Pentium laptop computer.

Paymaster Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if the staff of the Paymaster agency were consulted before the announcement of its privatisation; and if he will make a statement; [20610]

(2) what length of notice the Paymaster agency gave to customer organisations regarding its intended privatisation; and if he will make a statement; [20607]

(3) what will be the length of the terms of contract to the successful bidder for the Paymaster agency in the event of privatisation and if he will make a statement; [20600]

(4) what assessment he has made of the benefits of privatising the Paymaster agency; [20669]

(5) what steps he is taking to protect the pension entitlements of staff of the Paymaster agency after privatisation; what assessment he has made of efficiency gains from the privatisation; and if he will make a statement; [20665]

(6) what value he has set on the skills of the Paymaster agency staff for the purposes of privatisation; and if he will make a statement; [20611]

(7) what factors led him to set the proposed time scale for privatising the Paymaster agency; and if he will make a statement; [20609]

(8) what public consultation process has been arranged in respect of privatising the Paymaster agency; and if he will make a statement; [20606]

(9) which functions of the Paymaster agency are to be sold in the course of its privatisation; and if he will make a statement. [20654]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: A prior options review of all the activities of the Paymaster agency was announced on 4 December 1995, Official Report, columns 15–16. The review still in progress, and no decision for or against privatisation has yet been taken.

All interested parties were invited in that announcement to submit contributions to the Treasury by 26 February. On the same day the agency's staff were advised of the review and my officials wrote to the relevant trade unions, customer organisations and pensioner bodies to solicit comments within the same period. The response has been very good, and the review team is pursuing specific points where appropriate.

The review, which was envisaged for this period when agency status was first granted in 1993, is considering to what extent the functions performed by the Paymaster agency need to remain with the Government. If any do not, the costs and benefits of transfer to the private sector will be examined along with how this might best be achieved.

As my December statement made clear, I will be reporting back to the House on the outcome of this review in due course.

National Lottery

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on the public sector borrowing requirement in 1995–96 to date of cash flows associated with national lottery funds; and if he will make a statement. [20910]

Mr. Waldegrave: The table gives the relevant figures. The direct impact of the lottery, before allowing for the displacement of other indirect tax receipts, was to reduce the PSBR by £1.8 billion in the 11 months to February 1996.

The effect of the lottery on the PSBR will be largely unwound in due course, as the national lottery distribution fund runs down its surplus by increasing its grants to the good causes.

The direct effects of the lottery on the PSBR in the first 11 months of 1995–96 (£ million)

Lottery duty: 566
Income of the distribution fund: 1,407
Total general Government receipts: 1,973

Expenditure of the distribution fund: 128
Total general Government expenditure: 128
Public Sector Borrowing Requirement:–1,845

Uncertificated Securities Regulations

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the powers in the Uncertificated Securities Regulations 1995 will be delegated to the Securities and Investments Board. [21191]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury has now delegated to the Securities and Investments Board the relevant powers in the Uncertificated Securities Regulations 1995, SI 1995 No. 3272. This gives to the SIB the role of approving and supervising Crest as the current operator of the forthcoming paperless securities settlement system. Copies of the delegation instrument have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

SCOTLAND

Roads

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was spent on (a) road infrastructure in Scotland, (b) new roads and road improvements and (c) road maintenance in Scotland at outturn prices in each year between 1975 and 1995. [19302]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available in the requested format. The table details capital and current expenditure between 1975–76 to 1994–95:

1. Capital expenditure includes new roads and improvements on all roads; and structural maintenance on trunk roads. Current expenditure includes routine and winter maintenance on all roads; and road lighting and structural maintenance on local authority roads. Other expenditure includes administration, car parks, road safety, traffic management and surveys.
2. Minor changes in the classification of expenditure have occurred during the above period.
3. Expenditure for 1994–95 is provisional.

Cairngorm Funicular Railway

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received concerning the proposed railway development on Cairngorm; how many of these support the development; and how many oppose it. [19989]

Mr. Kynoch: To date, my right hon. Friend has received a total of 1,848 letters about the Cairngorm funicular railway. Of these, 81 support the proposal with 1,767 opposed to the development.

Lothian Scaffolding Services Ltd.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what factors led to the delay by the procurator fiscal after court proceedings were initiated against Lothian Scaffolding Services Ltd.; and what assessment he has made as to whether the procurator fiscal was in possession of all relevant information before that date; [20019]

(2) what factors governed the length of the interval between the completion of police scientific evidence of material seized from Lothian Scaffolding Services Ltd. and the service of an indictment on Mr. Gilbert Mackie; [20228]

(3) what is the cost to public funds of the police investigation, storage charges and jury trial arising from allegations concerning Lothian Scaffolding Services Ltd.; and if he will make a statement; [20020]

(4) what consideration was given to evidence provided by Lothian Scaffolding Services Ltd. about the ownership of material before it was seized by the police in 1991; [20034]

(5) what factors governed the length of the interval between the procurator fiscal receiving the police report on Lothian Scaffolding Services Ltd. and his decision to proceed with a prosecution. [20230]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am advised by the Lord Advocate that the procurator fiscal at Haddington received a report in this case on 20 May 1993. A decision was taken to precognosce the case prior to placing the accused on petition. This was a complex case involving numerous witnesses. During the course of precognition, it became apparent that further forensic examination, in addition to that already conducted by the police, would be required. This examination was carried out at the university of Edinburgh.

The investigation involved considering in detail evidence about ownership of the property in question, including documentary evidence produced to the police on the accused's behalf.

Once the case had been precognosced, it was submitted for Crown counsel's instructions. Crown counsel considered there to be sufficient evidence and instructed that proceedings should be taken on indictment. The accused, Gilbert Mackie, was placed on petition on 20 September 1994. The case was initially indicted for a sitting of the sheriff court on 15 March 1995, but was adjourned on the motion of the accused. The case was re-indicted for trial on 19 September 1995 but was adjourned on this occasion because the Crown had not received a list of defence witnesses. This list was provided in November 1995 and the case was re-indicted for trial on 12 February 1996.

The other information sought about the cost to public funds of the case is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what steps were taken to ensure that materials taken from Lothian Scaffolding Services Ltd. on and after 12 April 1991 were stored in a satisfactory and secure environment; [20033]

(2) if he will make a statement on the decision taken by the police to make arrangements with companies which had claimed to be the legal owners of material seized from Lothian Scaffolding Services Ltd. in 1991, to remove and store that material; [20035]

(3) if he will make a statement on the change in the condition of timber and other materials stored on behalf of the police pending court proceedings against Lothian Scaffolding Services Ltd.; and if it is in a satisfactory condition for (a) production at a criminal trial and (b) further use by its rightful owner; [20018]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am advised by the Lord Advocate that storage of the material taken from Lothian Scaffolding Services Ltd. pursuant to the police inquiry was arranged with a haulage contractor. The equipment has been stored out of doors since 1991. The storage arrangements were as satisfactory as circumstances would allow, having regard to the nature of the equipment and the fact that scaffolding equipment is exposed to weather and adverse elements throughout its normal usage.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make a statement on the length of the interval between notification by the police that certain items would be returned to Lothian Scaffolding Services Ltd. and the actual delivery; [20017]

(2) if (a) the Crown Office and (b) the police have a full list of material taken by the police from Lothian Scaffolding Services Ltd. on and after 12 April 1991; and if he will make a statement. [20032]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am advised by the Lord Advocate that the Crown Office has a list of material seized by the police following identification of the material by others as being their property. This material has not been returned because ownership is disputed. If this dispute cannot be resolved, civil court proceedings may be required. Further inquiries are being made as to whether the police seized other material which was not the subject of charges. This additional information is not available and I will reply further as soon as possible.

Derelict Land (Glasgow)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what public funds have been spent cleaning up derelict land in the city of Glasgow (a) in 1994–95 and (b) in 1995–96. [21093]

Mr. Kynoch: The main source of public funds for the treatment of derelict land in Glasgow is the local enterprise company, the Glasgow development agency. The expenditure of local enterprise companies is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and I have asked the chairman of that organisation to write to the hon. Member.

Police

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when police authority establishment figures were last revised; and if he will make a statement. [21100]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statutory controls by police authorities and the Secretary of State over the authorised regular police establishments of forces were removed on 13 December 1995. The number of police officers in each force is now determined by individual chief constables.

Responsibility for the number of police civilians in each force will be determined by individual chief constables from 1 April 1996 when the statutory controls by police authorities and the Secretary of State over authorised civilian establishments are removed.

Police establishment figures were last revised for each force on the dates set out in the table.

Force	Month and year police establishment figures last revised	Month and year civilian establishment figures last revised
Central Scotland	November 1994	April 1994
Dumfries and Galloway	August 1991	March 1993
Fife	July 1990	May 1994
Grampian	August 1991	March 1995

Force	Month and year police establishment figures last revised	Month and year civilian establishment figures last revised
Lothian and Borders	January 1994	April 1994
Northern	August 1995	August 1995
Strathclyde	August 1995	December 1995
Tayside	August 1995	October 1994

Glasgow Development Agency

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was Glasgow development agency's budget in 1995, in current prices; and what is the budget for 1996. [21094]

Mr. Kynoch: The allocation of local enterprise company budgets is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Reconviction Rates

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the reconviction rates two years and four years after release for (a) adults, (b) 15 to 17-year-olds and (c) 18 to 21-year-olds, breaking down the figures by gender. [21018]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Population Statistics (Hawick)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the level of population in the Hawick area of Roxburghshire in (a) the 1991 census population and (b) each earlier census in the last years. [19852]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table. Hawick locality covers the urban area and is the nearest equivalent to the small burgh that existed before 1974.

	Resident population Hawick small burgh	Hawick locality
1961	16,324	—
1971	16,530	16,726
1991	—	15,812

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will estimate the recent trends in population in the Hawick area of Roxburghshire since the 1991 census; and what assessment he has made of the scale of these changes relative to corresponding changes in other towns in the Borders region; [19853]

(2) what assessment he has made of the degree of statistical variation in respect of recent changes in level of population in the Hawick area of Roxburghshire; [19855]

(3) what assessment he has made of the factors underlying the recent changes in the level of population in the Hawick area of Roxburghshire. [19856]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In periods between censuses, population estimates are normally prepared only for local authority areas because no source provides reliable estimates of migration at small area levels. The Registrar General estimates that between mid-1991 and mid-1994, the population of Roxburgh district as a whole fell by 90 from 35,320 to 35,230. The factors underlying this change are a small set migration gain offset by an excess of deaths over births. Complete figures for Borders region and its four districts are given in the table, from which it can be seen that recent growth has mainly been in Ettrick and Lauderdale district.

Borders region: Components of population change by district; 1991–94

	Estimated population 30 June 1991	Births	Deaths	Natural change	Estimated net civilian migration	Estimated population 30 June 1994	Population change
							Number	Percentage
Borders Region	104,100	3,582	4,225	–643	2,243	105,700	1,600	1.5
Berwickshire	19,120	662	733	–71	371	19,420	300	1.6
Ettrick and Lauderdale	34,390	1,232	1,364	–132	1,232	35,490	1,100	3.2
Roxburgh	35,320	1,174	1,522	–348	258	35,230	–90	–0.3
Tweedale	15,270	514	606	–92	382	15,560	290	1.9

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now conduct sample surveys of recent population levels in the Hawick area of Roxburghshire. [19854]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Housing Finance

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department first received reports of an adverse impact on the bids of local authorities bidding for new town housing caused by the changes in the handling of capital receipts from local authorities last year. [21060]

Mr. Kynoch: West Lothian district council wrote to the Department on 6 December 1995. Its views, with those expressed by other parties, were carefully considered by my right hon. Friend and his decision as conveyed to the local authorities on 15 February.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what considerations led his Department not to exclude the bids lodged by local authorities involved in the bidding process for the housing stock of Scotland's development corporations from the effects of his changes in the handling of capital receipts by local authorities. [21063]

Mr. Kynoch: The Government consider it important that the overall level of local authority debt in Scotland should be reduced. My right hon. Friend's decision ensures that a proportion of any receipts from ex-new town stock sold by a local authority under the right-to-buy scheme will reduce that authority's debt.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what delay has been caused in the bidding process for the housing stock of Scotland's development corporations by the changes in the Scottish Office rules on the handling of capital receipts by Scottish local authorities; and when his Department decided not to exempt local authorities in the bidding process for the housing stock of Scotland's development corporations from these changes in capital receipts. [21062]

Mr. Kynoch: The transfer of the housing stocks of the development corporations is to be completed before wind-up on 31 December 1996. The decision on the treatment of local authority capital receipts will alter the time scale of the interim stages. Letters conveying my right to hon. Friend's decision not to exempt local authorities involved in the bidding process from the revised capital receipt rules were issued on 15 February 1996.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to allow the relevant existing local authorities and their successor councils to be included on the ballots for the housing stock of Irvine, Cumbernauld and Livingston development corporations. [21241]

Mr. Kynoch: The Government's policy is to admit local authorities to the ballots provided that their final bids are considered to be value for money.

Exel Logistics

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will intervene to stop the threatened job losses at Exel Logistics in Falkirk. [21154]

Mr. Kynoch: I understand that this company, which offers transport services to industry and the retail trade from 14 depots in the UK, intends to rationalise its entire UK operations. This is a matter for the commercial judgment of management in the company. The company's announcement to its work force was accompanied by the offer of counselling and of a transfer to the company's headquarters. Forth Valley Enterprise will offer to all affected by the announcement its range of retraining and counselling services.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what ways the eligibility, financial and operating rules which apply to LECs in Scotland differ from those outlined in the 1996–97 technical operating agreement for (a) youth training/youth credits and (b) training for work; and if he will make a statement. [21026]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The rules which govern the delivery by local enterprise companies in Scotland of the principal Government-funded training and enterprise programmes for 1996–97 are set out in an operating agreement between Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and their respective networks of local enterprise companies which follows closely that for training and enterprise councils.

Renfrewshire Healthcare Trust

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what factors led Renfewshire Healthcare NHS trust to reduce nursing costs; and if contracts with purchasers of the Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust are dependent on reducing costs. [21174]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The review of nursing management and organisational structures within the Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust was driven by the objective of improving patient care and providing nursing services which would best meet the health care needs of the people of Renfrewshire for the future.

All NHS trusts and health boards in Scotland are required to identify efficiency savings to release resources for re-investment in direct patient care. It is for the trusts and boards to determine how this is to be achieved.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what considerations led Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust to remove the position of ward sister and charge nurse from hospitals in its responsibility. [21173]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust has reviewed its nursing management and organisational structure and is embarking on a two-year implementation programme. The revised staffing structure will change the current configuration of nurse grades and increase the number of nurses involved in direct patient care.

It is for the trust to decide on the implementation of the revised structure, but I welcome this initiative if it improves the quality fo patient care and offers an opportunity for nurses in the trust to develop further their skills and expertise.

Surgery Cancellations

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a breakdown by health board of (a) the number of operations cancelled for non-medical reasons on or after the day of admission and (b) the number of patients not re-admitted within one month after a cancellation for each quarter since records began. [21444]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally.

Departmental Equipment and Furniture

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the cost and number of items of equipment and furniture that (a) have been stolen and (b) are otherwise unaccounted for from his Department and its agencies in each of the past five years, listing by name any such items valued at £5,000 or more, and showing information technology material separately. [19039]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 March 1996]: A variety of items are periodically reported missing. The following items valued at £5,000 or more have been formally recorded since 1991 as losses to the Scottish Office, including those attributable to theft.

Year	Item	Approximate value
1992	Car	£8,000
1995	Van	£13,000

DEFENCE

Art Thefts

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to co-ordinate art theft investigations conducted by MOD police and the special investigations branches of the various armed services police. [20834]

Mr. Soames: The chief constable MoD police and provost/marshals of the service policing organisations meet as the Defence Police Chiefs Forum to discuss and plan the joint investigation of such matters.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many MoD police officers are trained in art theft detection techniques. [20831]

Mr. Soames: I am unaware of specific courses in art theft detection techniques. All Ministry of Defence police CID officers attend Home Office detective training and specialisation courses. Furthermore, all police agencies pool their expertise to combat specific areas of concern.

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the works of art belonging to the departmental art collection which are considered missing or stolen; [20561]

(2) if he will list the works of art on loan from the Government art collection that are considered missing or stolen. [20565]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I am placing the information requested in the Library of the House.

Menwith Hill

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to public funds of the RAF's present responsibilities at Menwith Hill. [20625]

Mr. Soames: Most costs at RAF Menwith Hill to my Department are reimbursed by the US Government. The principal cost for which my Department receives no reimbursement is for the Ministry of Defence police overtime occasioned by activities of protesters, which amounted to approximately £100,000 in 1994–95.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who owns the 23 radomes and signals interpretation equipment at Menwith Hill. [20623]

Mr. Soames: The radomes and most of the equipment at RAF Menwith Hill are owned by the United States Government.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many residents at Menwith Hill station are entitled to vote in British elections. [20633]

Mr. Soames: None.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) British and (b) United States personnel work at, or for, both Forest Moor royal naval communications base and RAF Menwith Hill. [20645]

Mr. Soames: There are currently 600 UK employees and 1,200 United States personnel employed at RAF Menwith Hill, and 132 UK employees and no United States personnel employed at Forest Moor royal naval communications base. No personnel work for both bases.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the squadron leader in charge is resident at Menwith Hill. [20632]

Mr. Soames: No.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the squadron leader in charge at Menwith Hill is security cleared for access to intercepted data. [20628]

Mr. Soames: It is not our policy to comment on specific security arrangements.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are currently employed at Menwith Hill; and of these how many are US personnel. [20626]

Mr. Soames: There are currently 1,800 personnel employed at RAF Menwith Hill, of whom 1,200 are United States personnel.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much the United States Government reimburses the British Government for the salaries of his Department's staff at Menwith Hill. [20624]

Mr. Soames: Approximately £5.4 million per annum.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many employees at Menwith Hill are security cleared for access to intercepted data. [20630]

Mr. Soames: It is not our policy to comment on specific security arrangements.

Armed Forces Bases

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which US National Security Agency bases in Britain have RAF status. [20644]

Mr. Soames: All bases made available by the Ministry of Defence for the use of United States visiting forces have RAF status.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which RAF bases in the United Kingdom have no (a) runways, (b) jets and (c) other aeroplanes; how many United States personnel are stationed at each; and how much each base cost in the last year for which figures are available. [20642]

Mr. Soames: The information given in the following table covers all RAF bases in the UK where US personnel are present and which do not have an operational runway or aircraft:

RAF base	Approximate number of US personnel
RAF Croughton/RAF Barford St. John	580
RAF Daws Hill/RAF High Wycombe/RAF West Ruislip	570
RAF Digby	12
RAF Edzell	530
RAF Hythe	5
RAF Menwith Hill	1,200
RAF Molesworth/RAF Alconbury	1,100
RAF Northwood	30
RAF Oakhangar	30
RAF Spadeadam	5
RAF Uxbridge	70

Arrangements that exist between the UK and US Governments provide for the reimbursement to the UK of most of the support costs associated with the US visiting forces. The exception is certain administrative and personnel costs. These are not separately recorded for each of the bases listed above but the total cost incurred in supporting the US visiting forces during 1994–95 was approximately £10.7 million.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis and by whom it is decided that a base is to be designated as an Army, Navy or Air Force base; and what guidelines are available to inform that decision. [20643]

Mr. Soames: There is no specific definition of the term "base". The decision as to which service is responsible for a particular Ministry of Defence site is made on the basis of who is the major occupier and who has responsibility for matters such as security and maintenance. Sites used by US visiting forces are designated as RAF stations.

Interception of Information

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the present arrangements between the British Government and other European Governments to allow the RAF to intercept electronic telecommunications from Europe; [20634]

(2) what procedures govern the sharing by the RAF of trade, commercial and other kinds of intercepted information with the United States National Security Agency. [20635]

Mr. Soames: It is not our practice to comment on such matters.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Morwenstowe interception station at Bude, in Cornwall, is classified as having RAF status. [20636]

Mr. Soames: No.

Armed Services Budget

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of gross domestic product is budgeted for the three armed services in the current financial year in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) France. [21050]

Mr. Soames: In calendar year 1995, the most recent period for which information is available, both the UK and France spent approximately 3.1 per cent. of gross domestic product on the armed services.

Nuclear Capability Budget

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current budget for Britain's nuclear capability; and if he will make a statement. [20855]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 6 March 1996, Official Report, column 232.

Franco-German-British Armaments Agency

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what measures he will take to ensure that the commercial interests of the British defence equipment industry are protected in programmes managed by the Franco-German-British Armaments Agency in Bonn; [21203]

(2) how many personnel of the Franco-German-British Armaments Agency in Bonn will be drawn from (a) the European Commission, (b) the Western European Union, (c) the French Government and armed forces, (d) the German Government and armed forces and (e) NATO; [21207]

(3) how many personnel from the Procurement Executive of his Department will be transferred to Bonn to work for the Franco-German-British Armaments Agency; and on what date their transfer will be effective; [21211]

(4) what proportion of the Franco-German-British Armaments Agency's budget in its first year of operation will be derived from (a) the British Government, (b) the French Government, (c) the German Government, (d) the European Union, (e) the Western European Union and (f) NATO; [21205]

(5) what is the name, rank, nationality and style of the first head of the Franco-German-British Armaments Agency in Bonn; [21204]

(6) what measures he will take to ensure the maximum export potential for tri-national defence equipment programmes managed by the Franco-German-British Armaments Agency in Bonn; [21202]

(7) if he will require the Franco-German-British Armaments Agency in Bonn to submit annual financial accounts to the British Parliament; [21206]

(8) what local overseas allowance personnel from his Department serving on the Franco-German-British Armaments Agency in Bonn will be eligible for; and what will be the total annual cost of this allowance. [21210]

Mr. Arbuthnot: As I announced on 13 March 1996, Official Report, columns 648–49, discussions with France and Germany on participation in the Franco-German Armaments Agency will commence following completion of work on the tender documents for the armoured utility vehicle. The agency's policy, staffing, and operating procedures remain to be determined in these discussions, as do the detailed management arrangements for any collaborative projects involved.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the multi-role armoured vehicle programme for the British Army will be managed by the Franco-German-British Armaments Agency in Bonn. [21209]

Mr. Arbuthnot: It is not yet possible to determine in detail how the collaborative multi-role armoured vehicle programme will be managed under the auspices of the armaments co-operative structure.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the British industrial work loads and contract values of a multi-role armoured vehicle (a) procured solely from British manufacturers and (b) procured on a Franco-German-British basis. [21208]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The implications for British industry were taken into account in our decision to join the current competition which is planned to lead to a collaborative programme for a multi-role armoured utility vehicle. Industries of all three countries will take part on an equal basis, providing British industry with an opportunity to carry out a share of a substantial programme to meet the requirements of France, Germany and the UK for armoured vehicles. A competition to meet only the British requirement would not have been restricted to British manufacturers alone. The value of any contracts will depend on the outcome of competition.

Ship Maintenance and Refitting Costs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have been the total (a) maintenance costs and (b) refitting costs for (i) HMS Fearless and (ii) HMS Intrepid since the ships were last removed from operational capability. [21065]

Mr. Arbuthnot: HMS Fearless was last at sea operationally in June 1995. The cost of her recent maintenance period was some £32 million. HMS Intrepid has been maintained in a state of extended readiness since 1989; by the end of her ongoing maintenance period maintenance costs during this time will total some £33 million.

Contracts (Transfer)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts were transferred from MGC Technical Services Ltd. to (a) Ridgewood Industries Ltd., (b) Ridgewood Engineering Ltd., (c) Ridgewood Electronics Ltd. and (d) Ridgewood Holdings Ltd.; on what date they occurred; and what was the value of these contracts. [21179]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The central records of contracts held by the Ministry of Defence Procurement Executive do not show any contracts placed on the Ridgewood Engineering, Electronics or Holdings companies during the past five years. While this Department had numerous contracts with both MGC Technical Services Ltd. and Ridgewood Industries Ltd. up to 1992, MOD can trace no record of any transfer of prime contracts from MGC Technical Services Ltd. to Ridgewood Industries Ltd. Research of earlier records could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations his Department received from hon. Members about the transfer of contracts from Ridgewood Industries Ltd. to Avocet Ltd.; and on what date they were received; [21178]

(2) what contracts were transferred from Ridgewood Industries Ltd. to Avocet Ltd.; on what date they occurred; and what was the value of these contracts. [21180]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The central records held by the Ministry of Defence Procurement Executive do not indicate that there has been any request to transfer any contracts from Ridgewood Industries Ltd. to Avocet Ltd. during the last five years and consequently no record of any representations has been traced. Research of earlier records could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

There is no record of any prime contracts between this Ministry and Avocet Ltd. in the past five years.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations his Department received from hon. Members about the transfer of contracts from MGC Technical Services Ltd. to (a) Ridgewood Industries Ltd. (b) Ridgewood Engineering Ltd. (c) Ridgewood Electronics Ltd. and (d) Ridgewood Holdings Ltd.; and on what date they were received. [21181]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I am not aware of any recent such representations from hon. Members. A search of records of earlier years could not be completed except at disproportionate cost.

Aircraft Crashes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 January, Official Report, columns 739–40, if he will list the dates and types of aircraft his Department has lost through crashes since 11 January; and what were the causes of these accidents. [21021]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is given in the table.

1996
23 January	Jaguar GR1B	Under investigation by board of inquiry
13 February	Hawk T1	Under investigation by board of inquiry
13 February	Sea Harrier FA2	Under investigation by board of inquiry
19 February	Harrier GR7	Under investigation by board of inquiry
23 February	Harrier T4N	Under investigation by board of inquiry
26 February	Tornado GR1	Under investigation by board of inquiry

Service Family Quarters (Rents)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 5 March, Official Report, column 117, what additional financial assistance he will give to service personnel to compensate for the rises in rents on service family quarters. [21188]

Mr. Soames: We do not propose to introduce any additional financial assistance to compensate for the rises in service accommodation charges.

In recommending increases to pay and family quarter charges this year, the Armed Forces Pay Review Body—while continuing to follow the principle that charges levied on service personnel should compare fairly with the costs civilians have to incur for comparative housing—have also sought to ensure that no personnel will experience a net decrease in pay.

Nimrod Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, columns 508–09, when the Nimrod R aircraft first entered service with the Royal Air Force. [21648]

Mr. Soames: The Nimrod R's in-service date was July 1974.

Heavy Vehicles (Train Transportation)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, which vehicles returning from Bosnia were loaded on to trains at Marchwood on 28 December for transportation to Ashworth; when they were unloaded at Ashworth; what facilities exist for unloading heavy vehicles at Ashworth; and if he will make a statement. [20750]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 14 March 1996]: This is a matter for the Defence Transport and Movements Executive under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Hodson to Dr. David Clark, dated 18 March 1996:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence, about vehicle movements from Marchwood, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Transport and Movements Executive Agency.

First, I must apologise for the delay in answering your question but some considerable investigation was necessary, as we could not identify the movement you refer to as taking place on 28 December. Furthermore, I believe you were intending to quote Ashchurch, instead of Ashworth.

The nearest instance that we can identify is the return of some light "A" vehicles which arrived in Marchwood Military Port (MMP) on 4 January. These included vehicles which could not be driven under their own power. They were loaded to rail to remove them from the immediate working area of the port side as MMP was at that time subject to intense activity arising from the deployment of I-FOR.

Arrangements were then made with Railfreight Distribution (RfD) to move the train from Marchwood to Ashchurch in early January. Carrying out the "can consignee accept" procedure with Ashchurch, RfD/MMP were informed that the facilities at Ashchurch were not suitable. The only alternative was to move the vehicles by road and this was arranged.

You will appreciate that in a very busy port, identifying specific vehicles and movements, in retrospect, is not easy. I hope that we have managed to pin down the one to which you were referring.

Fast Jet Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the number of operational fast jet aircraft in the RAF, (b) the number of operational fast jet aircraft pilots in the RAF, (c) the aggregate number of flying hours for operational fast jet aircraft in the RAF and (d) the aggregate number of flying hours at low level for operational fast jet aircraft in the RAF for (i) 1990 and (ii) 1995. [19957]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many recipients of national lottery awards have made representations about the difficulty in raising the required matching amount. [20549]

Mr. Sproat: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which projects in the county of Gwynedd have benefited from lottery funding; what sums they have received; and if she will make a statement. [20742]

Mr. Sproat: To date, 36 awards totalling £6.6 million have been made to projects in Gwynedd. They are:

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which projects in (a) Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Northern Ireland and (d) the English lottery regions have benefited from lottery funding; and what sums they have received. [20802]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To date, Wales has received £126.6 million towards 485 projects. Some 633 projects in Scotland have received a total of £128.4 million. Over £27.7 million has been awarded to 348 projects in Northern Ireland and England has received £957.9 million towards 3,562 projects.

Reports on the distribution of national lottery proceeds are placed in the Library of the House on a monthly basis. The reports include the information requested. The March edition will be placed in the Library of the House in early April.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what the total value of national lottery awards has been; and how much has been awarded by (a) the sports councils, (b) the Arts Council, (c) the National Heritage Memorial Fund, (d) the Millennium Commission and (e) the National Lottery Charities Board in each of the national lottery regions. [20780]

Mrs. Bottomley: To date, over £1.3 billion has been awarded to 5,312 projects throughout the UK. A breakdown is contained in the following table.

Ariane Programme

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for national Heritage what representations she has received on the European Commission's Ariane programme; and if she will publish them. [20258]

Mr. Sproat: My Department has received a number of letters concerning the proposed Ariane programme. The Department has no present plans to publish them.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement about the promotion of a wider knowledge of (a) the Welsh language and (b) other languages in the European Union under the European Commission's Ariane programme. [20261]

Mr. Sproat: One of the aims of the Ariane programme—which is still under discussion and not yet finalised—is to support the translation of literary works into and out of one Community language to another with a priority being given to lesser-used ones, including Welsh.

Riding Stables

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations have been made to her over the past two years about the effect on tourism of financial difficulties facing small-scale riding stables. [20213]

Mr. Sproat: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received one, direct, letter about the importance of riding stables to tourism and the financial burdens such businesses face. My hon. Friend the Paymaster General has forwarded a further letter on this issue for reply by my Department. In addition, I have also received a number of oral representations on the subject.

The Government are very conscious of the needs of small businesses and the valuable contribution that they make to the economy. On 11 March, the Prime Minister announced a package of measures to help reduce burdens on small firms. My Department is also pursuing sponsorship initiatives which will assist small firms in the tourism industry in particular.

Royal Palaces Estate

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the residential accommodation available within the unoccupied palaces and its occupants. [19436]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 8 March 1996]: The information is as follows:

Broadcasting Licences

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations she has received from the Association of Independent Radio Companies on relaxing the Broadcasting (Restrictions on the Holding of Licences) Order 1991. [20587]

Mr. Sproat: The Association of Independent Radio Companies has made several representations on this subject, in writing and at meetings. Following debate on Report on the Broadcasting Bill in the House of Lords on 5 March, columns 258 to 263, the Government are considering with the Radio Authority whether the current arrangements can be improved.

HEALTH

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued on the use of (a) agnio-tensin-converting enzyme inhibitors, (b) aspirin, (c) beta-blockers and (d) cholesterol lowering agents in the treatment of coronary heart disease; and if he will make a statement. [19562]

Mr. Horam: Guidance is contained in "Assessing the Options: CHD/Stroke", published by my Department in 1995. Advice on cholesterol lowering agents is covered in the effective health care bulletin on "Cholesterol Screening and Treatment", published in June 1993 by the NHS centre for reviews and dissemination. Copies of both of these documents will be placed in the Library.

Information on these subjects is also contained in the health care needs assessment on coronary heart disease which was commissioned by the Department of Health and published in 1994 by the Wessex Institute of Public Health and Radcliffe Medical Press.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations were performed in each of the last three years for (a) percutaneous transluminal coronary angioplasty and (b) coronary artery bypass grafting by (i) age and (ii) sex of patient and by (1) NHS trust, (2) district and (3) region. [19563]

Mr. Horam: The information requested will be placed in the Library.

Personal Health Data

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what safeguards will be put in place to prevent identifiable personal health data held on the NHS-wide clearing system which are provided by patients and health professionals for the purpose of medical treatment and care from being marketed outside the NHS; [20211]

(2) which company has become the operator of the NHS-wide clearing system and what rights the contract gives that company to market identifiable personal health data, provided by patients and health professionals for the purpose of medical treatment and care (a) inside the NHS and (b) outside the NHS. [20212]

Mr. Horam: The contract for operating the NHS-wide clearing system has been awarded to AT and T Istel. The contract gives no right to the company to market identifiable personal health data. Services providing analyses of such data will be provided only to NHS organisations which are the registered data users.

The contract will prevent AT and T Istel from marketing personal health data, and security policy and safeguards will prevent any release of such data to third parties.

Dentists and Pharmacists (Premises)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 288, what schemes within the NHS allow (a) dentists and (b) pharmacists to bid for money to fund the improvement of their premises. [20322]

Mr. Malone: No central funding is available for improvements to dentists' and pharmacists' premises. National health services fees cover remuneration and expenses including the cost of improvements.

Community Care

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many households are estimated to be eligible for direct payments for community care on eligibility criteria (a) if restricted to physically disabled recipients aged under 65 years, (b) if restricted to physically or mentally disabled recipients with no age limit and (c) as listed in paragraph 15 of the consultants paper on the Community Care (Direct Payments) Bill. [20455]

Mr. Bowis: It is not possible to estimate accurately how many households will be eligible for direct payments. The number of households receiving home help and home care services provides an indication, but it cannot give a complete picture as direct payments will also be available in lieu of other non-residential community care services.

In 1994, local authorities provided home help and home care services to 538,900 households in England. Households may, of course, include more than once client. The oldest client was aged 65 or over in 478,600 households—89 per cent. of the total. Out of the total of 54,500 households receiving home help and home care services where the oldest client was between the ages of 18 and 64, 32,500 households were receiving services for clients with physical and/or sensory disabilities, and 4,110 were receiving such services for clients with learning disabilities. Figures are not available by client group for those aged 65 or over, but a substantial proportion of clients in the 478,600 households are likely to be people with physical or learning disabilities.

Fraud

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to eliminate the fraudulent obtaining of the free provision of dental services, optical treatment and prescription. [20359]

Mr. Malone: The Government are determined to eliminate fraud in the national health service wherever it occurs.

From April 1995, amended prescription forms have asked patients to sign a declaration indicating the charge paid or the reason for exemption.

The Department of Health has set up a prescription fraud unit at the Prescription Pricing Authority which will operate from 1 April 1996. The unit will provide an expert service for health authorities in the prevention, detection and prosecution of prescription-related fraud.

Declarations by patients have been changed to clarify the basis of exemption or remission from dental charges from 1 April 1996 and will be used for post-payment checks on claims for remission of charges during 1996–97.

Health authorities are asked to undertake post-payment checks on patient eligibility for NHS sight tests and spectacle vouchers.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of fraud took place in (a) his Department and (b) the NHS in each of the last five years; and what sums of money were involved. [21540]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 26 October 1995 at column 784, for the available information relating to the Department of Health.

National health service losses from fraud are not separately identified from other losses recorded in returns to the Department. The Audit Commission has identified cases of detected fraud in the NHS as follows:

Year	Number of cases	Sums involved (£ million)
1991–92	300	4.5
1992–93	332	0.4
1993–94	328	1.0
1994–95	350	0.75

These figures represent on average slightly less than 1p for every £100 spent in the NHS.

Communicable Diseases

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of cases of (a) diphtheria, (b) syphilis, (c) tuberculosis, (d) cholera and (e) malaria in each of the past four years and in the current year to date; and if he will make a statement. [20658]

Mr. Horam: Notification—as opposed to number of cases—in England and Wales are as follows:

	1992	1993	1994	1995 Provisional	1996 First nine weeks highly provisional
Diphtheria	8	6	9	12	2
Tuberculosis, excluding chemoprophylaxis	5,799	5,921	5,591	5,608	964
Cholera	25	23	30	32	3
Malaria	1,189	1,198	1,139	1,300	151

Figures are notifications, not confirmed cases.

Syphilis is not a notifiable disease and the figures given are from the Department of Health's statistics division's KC60 returns and relate to the number of new cases seen in England. Figures for 1995 are not yet available.

Rabies

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of rabies have been reported in the United Kingdom in the last 10 years. [20576]

Mr. Horam: There have been three reported cases of rabies in the United Kingdom since 1986: one in each of the years 1986, 1987 and 1988. All were in people who were infected abroad.

Mental Health

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the total number of people with mental health problems requiring 24-hour care in each of the last five years. [20857]

Mr. Bowis: For working purposes in producing the report "24-hour nursed care for people with severe and enduring mental illness", the average prevalence for people requiring such care was estimated at one per 10,000 members of the national population, although there will be significant variations between districts.

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his oral statement of 20 February, Official Report, column 175, if he will make a statement on the provision of crisis accommodation for mentally-ill people; for whom it is intended; how it will be staffed; and which authority will provide it. [21007]

Mr. Bowis: The provision of crisis accommodation forms one part of a spectrum of care for those who are unable to cope, and should be purchased by every health authority. It could be provided by a range of statutory or independent providers, in a variety of settings, which would include hostels or supported housing.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients aged 16 to 64 years have been readmitted to the care of a psychiatric specialist within 90 days of discharge in each of the last five years (a) by health authority, (b) by regional health authority and (c) nationally. [20881]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

NHS Executive (Posts)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many advertisements for NHS executive staff posts in 1995 received no applicants. [20916]

Mr. Horam: There were no advertisements for posts in the national health service executive in 1995 for which there were no applicants.

Emergency and Intensive Care (Leeds)

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his oral statement of 6 March, Official Report, column 356, how much money will be made available for additional beds in Leeds hospitals. [21255]

Mr. Horam: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in his statement of 6 March, this is a matter for local health authorities working with national health service trusts.

Medical and Dental Education and Research

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the publication date of the fourth report of the steering group on undergraduate medical and dental education and research; and if he will make a statement. [21702]

Mr. Dorrell: I am pleased to announce that the fourth report of the steering group on undergraduate medical and dental education and research is published today, and copies will be placed in the Library. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment and I welcome and endorse the report.

The steering group brings together all the main bodies involved in the management of undergraduate medical and dental education and research, and we are grateful to the representatives of these bodies who have served on the group.

Close co-operation between the national health service and the universities is essential for the successful management of medical and dental education and research. The report acknowledges and welcomes the close co-operation that already exists between the NHS and the universities and explores how this can be further developed. It includes a revision of the 10 key principles which help to define the shared goals of the two parties.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what quantity of each individual type of benzodiazepine was prescribed via community pharmacists in England and Wales in each of the last four years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [20621]

Mr. Malone: The available information for England will be placed in the Library. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Bed Closures (South Manchester)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has had from the South Manchester community health council in regard to the closure of 64 hospital beds, including four intensive care beds, in consequence of the accounting error made in the South Manchester University Hospitals NHS trust; what reply he is sending; if he will be instituting an independent public inquiry; and if he will make a statement. [20614]

Mr. Horam: We have received a letter from South Manchester community health council and will be replying shortly. An independent inquiry is already under way.

Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of his speech of 4 March to the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee. [20870]

Mr. Dorrell: My speech was delivered from notes and I regret that a full text is not available.

Rehabilitation Services (West Yorkshire)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action has been taken on the resolution contained in minute 71 of the proceedings of the meeting of the Yorkshire regional health authority held on 8 March 1994 with regard to (a) the overall development of rehabilitation services in West Yorkshire, (b) the establishment of a centre of excellence in rehabilitation at Pinderfields hospital, Wakefield and (c) the establishment of a chair in rehabilitation at Pinderfields hospital, Wakefield; and if he will make a statement. [20871]

Mr. Bowis: This is a matter for Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority for further details.

General Practitioners (Malpractice)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners were accused by patients of malpractice or incompetence; how many were disciplined following such accusations; and how many successfully appealed to industrial tribunals in the last 12 months for which he has figures. [20921]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Doctors and Nurses

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to increase the nursing student intake over the next 12 months; [21537]

(2) what estimate he has made of the annual requirement of (a) doctors and (b) nurses in each specialty. [21566]

Mr. Malone: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health takes advice from the medical work force standing advisory committee on the required student intake to medical schools. The Government have accepted the recommendations of the medical work force standing advisory committee to increase the medical student intake target by 500, or 11 per cent., to reach 4,970 by 2000.

Advice is also received from the specialist work force advisory group on the number of doctors needed in higher specialist training in each specialty, to ensure that there are sufficient trained candidates to fill consultant posts in the future. Following the specialist work force advisory group's recommendations, I recently announced additional funding of £5.7 million in 1996–97 to provide a significant increase in training opportunities for doctors wishing to become consultants, including the creation of at least 300 new higher specialist training posts.

With regard to the requirement for nurses, it is for local employees to determine the work force required to deliver the services they have been contracted to provide. This is set in the context of annual planning guidance issued by the NHS executive, which maintains a national overview. Planned commissions for nurse trainees are expected to rise by 14 per cent. in 1996–97.

Deregulation and Contracting Out Act

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 68, when he plans to publish his response to the consultation document. [21561]

Mr. Bowis: Responses to the consultation are being considered but I have decided not to take any decision on this until the Cullen inquiry has reported.

Transplant Surgery

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients received transplant surgery for each organ in each region for each year since 1991 and for 1996 to date. [21568]

Mr. Horam: The number of transplants carried out by organ and region for 1991 and 1995 and 1996 to date are shown in the table. The figures for 1995 and 1996 are provisional. For the years 1992, 1993 and 1994, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 31 October 1995, Official Report, column 207.

Childhood Cancer

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the findings of the National Radiological Protection Board, NRPB-R276, pages 100 and 109, in respect of the incidence of childhood cancer linked to natural background alpha radiation. [21533]

Mr. Horam: The report NRPB-R276 entitled "Risks of Leukaemia and other Cancers in Seascale from all Sources of Ionising Radiation", copies of which are available in the Library, calculates radiation doses and associated risks of cancer to children and young persons in Seascale village in west Cumbria. The calculations were based on a population of 1,348 children born and living in the village between 1945 and 1992 and followed to age 24 years, or 1992, whichever came sooner.

In this population, the total number of radiation-induced fatal leukaemias and non-Hodgkin's lymphomas arising from natural background radiation over this time period was calculated to be 0.28. High-LET—high energy—radiation was calculated to contribute about 0.12 cases. Leukaemia in children is now more successfully treated and estimates of fatality from leukaemias these days would be substantially lower than those calculated for the study population. The risk of fatal cancers in this population, other than leukaemia and NHL, was calculated to be 0.02 for high-LET radiation.

If my hon. Friend wishes to know more about this study, perhaps he would care to write to me.

Managers (Redundancy Payments)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what redundancy payments were made to general and senior managers and chief executives in (a) trusts and (b) health authorities in 1994–95 and 1995–96, indicating the number of payments and their values. [21563]

Mr. Malone: All redundant staff are entitled to either statutory or contractual redundancy compensation if they satisfy the relevant criteria. The specific information requested is not available centrally.

Education and Training Expenditure

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been spent on education and training by (a) health authorities and (b) trusts in each of the last three years. [21541]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the services (a) that have been market tested and (b) are planned to be market tested by NHS trusts and in each case the outcome. [21544]

Mr. Horam: A list of services market tested by one or more national health service trust and their outcome is as shown. It is based on information supplied to the NHS executive's market testing database and indicates the number of known contracts awarded in-house, or to another NHS contractor or to a non-NHS contractor. None of the planned future exercises notified to the NHS executive add to the list of services indicated.

Notes:

1. There is no standard definition of services or list of services within the NHS and those listed above relate to provider units' interpretation.

2. Service headings such as "Hotel Services" and "Facilities Management" include a wide and varying range of individual services, e.g., catering, portering, security, car parking. Again there is no set pattern of which services make up hotel services, etc., but relates to individual provider units' interpretation.

Pinderfields Hospitals NHS Trust

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct the chairman of Pinderfields Hospitals NHS trust to issue a statement outlining the reasons for the departure of the former chief executive of the trust. [21212]

Mr. Malone: This is a matter for Pinderfields Hospitals national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Roy Cusworth, chairman of the trust, for details.

Consultancy Service Index

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 68, what information his Department collates on the consultancy service index. [21560]

Mr. Bowis: Information is available on the overall number of names on the consultancy index, and on the number of checks sought by prospective employers.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the hospital closures which have been referred to his Department for decision in the last five years, indicating in each case the nature of the organisations objecting, the decision and the date. [21567]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my hon. Friend the Minister for Health gave to the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 17 May 1995, Official Report, column 279. A list of proposed closures referred to Ministers for the period January 1992 to December 1995 is in the Library and is updated quarterly. These proposals have, except where indicated, been referred following objections by community health councils, but other organisations may also have objected to the proposals.

WALES

Ministerial Visits

18. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many visits he has made to the Principality since becoming Secretary of State to discuss tourism. [19390]

Mr. Hague: Tourism is raised regularly on my visits to Wales, among a number of other issues, and I have recently met the chief executive of the Wales tourist board.

Family Doctors

19. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent measures he has taken to encourage patients to make the best use of their family doctors. [19393]

Mr. Richards: I launched a patient education campaign in Wales on Wednesday 28 February, together with representatives from the British Medical Association and community health councils in Wales. The campaign has the theme "doctor-patient partnership".

Advertisements in the national press will run throughout March to promote the partnership and encourage people to use GP services responsibly. This will be followed by a series of local campaigns run by health authorities.

Welsh Assembly

20. Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent representations he has received urging the establishment of a directly elected legislative assembly. [19394]

Mr. Hague: Since 1 September 1995 I have received two written representations in favour of the establishment of a directly elected legislative assembly, together with one which asked simply for an assembly, but did not mention legislative powers, and five which opposed the establishment of an assembly.

School Teachers and Governors

21. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action has been recently taken to provide support for teachers and school governors in Wales. [19395]

Mr. Richards: As part of the "Bright Future" programme in Wales the grant for education support and training—GEST—arrangements provide support and training for teachers and school governors. Taking all elements into account, the GEST programme will be worth £24.7 million in 1996–97.

Community Hospitals (Gwynedd)

22. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Gwynedd community health trust to discuss the provision of community hospitals in Gwynedd. [19396]

Mr. Richards: Neither my right hon. Friend or I have plans to meet the chairman, but Welsh Office officials are in regular contact with the trust to discuss the provision of community hospitals in Gwynedd.

Local Authorities (Maladministration)

23. Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the local government commissioner for Wales to discuss reports of maladministration by local authorities. [19397]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Commissioner for Local Administration in Wales—the local Government ombudsman—acts independently of central government and it would not be appropriate for my right hon. Friend to seek to become involved in his work.

Toxic Waste (Abercwmboi)

24. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he will take following the expert reports on the toxic waste at Abercwmboi in the Cynon valley. [19398]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This is an operational matter for the Welsh Development Agency. I will arrange for the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Member and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Male Unemployment

25. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of men unemployed in Wales at the latest available date; and what this is in percentage terms. [19399]

Mr. Hague: In February 1996, the seasonally adjusted number of males on the claimant unemployment count in Wales was 80,700, which is 11 per cent. of the male work force.

Intergovernmental Conference

26. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received about the impact on Wales of the forthcoming European Union intergovernmental conference; and if he will make a statement. [19402]

Mr. Hague: I have received two representations in the past year which relate circumstances in Wales to the intergovernmental conference. The conference will affect Wales in the same way as it affects the rest of the United Kingdom.

Inward Investment

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the most recent instances of major inward investment by companies into Wales. [19385]

Mr. Hague: Some welcome announcements have been made over the past few months. Among them are Ford's £340 million expansion at Bridgend; Newport Wafer-Fab's £230 million expansion near Newport and Halla's £17 million investment at Pentrebach. In the space of a few months, almost 2,500 new jobs and investment of over £600 million has been announced and I expect more to come soon.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the inward investment projects recorded for Wales by the Invest in Britain Bureau during 1995 were in the counties of (a) Gwynedd and (b) Dyfed. [20255]

Mr. Hague: Of the inward investment projects recorded with the Invest In Britain Bureau during the calendar year 1995, three will be located in Gwynedd and three in Dyfed.

Car Use (City Centres)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are being taken by his Department to discourage the use of private cars in town and city centres; and if he will make a statement. [20651]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for local authorities to determine the traffic management strategy most appropriate to their area, having regard to local circumstances. The Government's role is to set the framework, through the publication of advice and guidance, including advice on traffic restraint measures. The Government encourage people to travel by means other than the private car—cycling, walking and public transport—where that option is open to them.

Public Transport

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what plans his Department has to improve the quality of public transport in Wales; and if he will make a statement; [20661]

(2) what steps are being taken by his Department to promote public transport in and around traffic congested towns and cities; and if he will make a statement. [20653]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 5 February 1996, Official Report, column 55. Since then my right hon. Friend has published "A Working Countryside for Wales", a White Paper in which he announces that the rural transport innovation grant scheme will be reviewed to see if ways can be found to increase its effectiveness.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many buildings in Wales are listed (a) grade I and (b) grade II; and what was the corresponding number in 1985. [20647]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to Cadw: Welsh Historic Monuments under its chief executive, Mr. T. J. Cassidy. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. J. Cassidy to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 18 March 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the current number of listed buildings in Wales and the corresponding figure for 1985.

As you will recall from previous correspondence, Cadw is taking forward a national resurvey of historic buildings in Wales which we expect to be completed by 2005. As part of this programme the Agency's target for 1995–96 is that 60 community council areas shall be surveyed and I am pleased to tell you that this has been achieved.

The number of buildings listed on 1 January 1985 was:

Grade I: 228

Grade II*: 525

Grade II: 8,935

Churches[1]: 714

Total: 10,412

The Corresponding number at 1 January 1996 was:

Grade I: 302

Grade II*: 978

Grade II: 15,975

[1]Anglican churches in use in Wales were at one time separately graded (A, B or C as appropriate) but this practice has been discontinued. As they arise in our resurvey, ecclesiastical buildings are now regraded on the same basis as secular (I, II* or II) which is why this separate category is diminishing.

I attach a copy of Cadw's recent leaflet "What is Listing?", which I hope you will find helpful and I should be glad to provide any further information you need. I will continue to send you copies of new lists for communities in your constituency when they are published.

Homelessness

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will break down the number of people who were accepted as homeless in Gwynedd over the last five years by (a) sex and (b) age group; and if he will make a statement. [20646]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Wrexham-Bidston Railway Line

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with North West Regional Railways and Railtrack concerning the long-term future of the Wrexham-Bidston railway line; and if he will make a statement. [21130]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have no plans to meet North West Regional Railways, but I intend to meet the directors of Railtrack soon to discuss their investment plans for all lines in Wales.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next plans to travel on the Wrexham-Bidston railway line; and if he will make a statement. [21129]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend and I currently have no plans for travelling on the Wrexham-Bidston line.

Federation of Clwyd Headteachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the Federation of Clwyd Headteachers to discuss the Nursery Education and Grant-maintained Schools Bill; and if he will make a statement. [21133]

Mr. Richards: I have seen a copy of a letter issued by the federation which I consider to be misleading. I intend to write to all schools in Clwyd to set the record straight and will send a copy to the hon. Member. I see no need for a meeting at this time.

Nurses' Pay

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many trusts agreed to a 3 per cent. pay award for nursing staff for the full financial year 1995–96; and what proportion of trusts in Wales this represents. [20405]

Mr. Richards: Twenty-four of the 25 trusts which employ nursing staff agreed to a 3 per cent. pay award for 1995–96 which represent 96 per cent. of such trusts in Wales. Ambulance trusts do not employ nurses and are not included in the total.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many trusts in Wales have yet to settle the pay award for nursing staff for the full financial year 1995–96. [20406]

Mr. Richards: One.

Rural Affairs White Paper

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he plans to publish a White Paper on rural affairs; and if he will make a statement. [20620]

Mr. Hague: I published the Government's White Paper for rural Wales, "A Working Countryside for Wales", on Wednesday, 13 March 1996.

I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 12 March 1996, Official Report, column 560.

Rats

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received relating to recent changes in the level of the rat population in Wales; what estimate he has made of the estimated rat population in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [20615]

Mr. Hague: None. Annual figures on rat populations are not collected centrally. The 1993 national rodent survey of England and Wales, conducted by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Chartered Institute of Environmental Health estimated the percentages of properties with a rat presence at 7.6 per cent. for north Wales and 4.6 per cent. for south Wales. The average for England and Wales is 4.8 per cent.

Alcohol, Tobacco and Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to reduce deaths and serious illnesses caused by alcohol, tobacco and medicinal drugs. [20603]

Mr. Richards: Improving health, including the reduction of deaths and serious illnesses related to risky behaviour, is identified in "Caring for the Future" as a priority for action. It is for a number of different agencies to take action forward.

Welsh Language

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will consult the Welsh Language Board on the use of the Welsh language in proceedings of the Welsh Grand Committee at meetings in Wales. [20821]

Mr. Hague: This is for the Procedure Committee, but I understand that the views of the Welsh Language Board will be sought.

A55 (Mobile Snack Bars)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the provision of snack bar facilities in lay-by areas along the A55 in north Wales. [21068]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: North Wales police and local authorities expressed concern for safety of road users because of trading on lay-bys along this busy route and I subsequently announced on 23 January that the Highways Directorate will shortly initiate statutory procedures necessary to prohibit the practice.

Since the announcement, four informal representations have been made in favour of the prohibition and seven against.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what objections he has received to the proposal to introduce clearway orders to effect a trading ban in the A55 in north Wales in respect of mobile snack bars. [21067]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None, as the draft orders have yet to be published.

Emergency Medical Admissions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answers of 4 March 1996, Official Report, column 99 and 12 March 1996, Official Report, column 536, (1) what approval was (a) sought and (b) given from his Department for the inclusion of the undertaking in the emergency admissions action plan to discuss levels of community care with unitary authorities; [21160]

(2) what consent was (a) sought and (b) given from his Department prior to the inclusion in the emergency admissions action plan of the undertaking for his Department to oversee and ensure adequate consideration and liaison between trust commissions and general practitioners concerning proposed general practitioner out of hours schemes. [21161]

Mr. Hague: The NHS representatives who prepared the action plan proposed a number of recommendations, only some of which were addressed to my Department. It would have been surprising had the NHS team involved felt they had needed to ask my Department for permission to make recommendations that they felt could form part of an effective response to the demand for emergency admissions.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 4 March 1996, Official Report, column 99, if he will list the number and ranks of his departmental officials who took part in the emergency admissions action plan; and what part they took in the proceedings. [21159]

Mr. Hague: None of my permanent civil servants were directly involved in the development of the NHS action plan to address the issue of rising emergency admissions. Mr. David Cliffe, an NHS manager seconded to the Health Department, contributed to the work on developing a best practice guide to inform the contracting process.

Before embarking on the exercise, representatives of the NHS discussed the main issues involved and possible approaches with the Health Department's executive committee, which is chaired by Mr. Peter Gregory, director of the Health Department, and includes as members Dr. Deirdre Hine, chief medical officer, and Miss Marion Bull, chief nursing officer. The authors of the action plan met the executive committee on 29 February 1996 to present their report and its recommendations.

Community Initiative Funding

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to widen the access to community initiative funding in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales. [19392]

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend and I are always ready to put the case forward for EC funding for the whole of Wales, but this can be done only where the relevant conditions and criteria can be met.

Departmental Changes

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the changes which have taken place in respect of his (a) responsibilities, (b) budget and (c) staff numbers between 1979 and 1996. [21162]

Mr. Hague: The functions which have transferred from my Department since 1979 are:

1986: Small Firms Service to the Welsh Development Agency

1988: Artificial Limb and Appliance Centre to the Welsh Health Common Services Authority

1992: Office of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools in Wales established as a separate Government Department

1993: Orbital Prosthetist Service to the Welsh Health Common Services Authority

1993: Dental Services to the Dental Practice Board

1993: Divisional Medical Office to the Benefits Agency

In addition, NHS litigation work will transfer to the Welsh Health Common Services Authority on 1 April 1996.

The functions which my Department has gained since 1979 are:

1984: Regional development grant work

1992: Training, including responsibility for training and enterprise Councils

1993: Responsibility for the further and higher education funding councils.

Details of my Department's running costs and staff numbers are as follows:

	Running costs (£ million)	Permanent staff (April)
1979–80	17.8	2,599
1980–81	22.6	2,430
1981–82	24.7	2,363
1982–83	25.4	2,212
1983–84	31.5	2,177
1984–85	32.9	2,207
1985–86	32.8	2,279
1986–87	37.9	2,271
1987–88	39.2	2,278
1988–89	40.5	2,162
1989–90	45.7	2,203
1990–91	51.4	2,308
1991–92	58.1	2,326
1992–93	70.4	2,535
1993–94	76.5	2,430
1995–96	76.1	2,229

These figures are not comparable over time. For example, running costs in 1979–80 did not include superannuation charges, the training and enterprise councils management fee and various overhead costs including accommodation, which have added at least £22 million to the 1995–96 figure.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the NHS trusts in Wales concerning mergers of trusts; what representations he has received from trusts concerning proposed (a) mergers and (b) takeovers, and if he will make a statement. [21058]

Mr. Hague: None. It is for the trust and health authorities themselves in the first instance to agree proposals which can demonstrate improved patient care. I would consider such proposals if they were put to me.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the external financing limit for the (a) total and (b) individual borrowings of national health service trusts in Wales. [21061]

Mr. Hague: The total external financing limit in 1995–96 is £57.016 million. Information on long-term borrowing of individual NHS trusts in Wales in this financial year is shown in the following table:

NHS Trust	Amount £
Bridgend and District	4,020,000
Carmarthen and District	1,842,000
Ceredigion and Mid Wales	900,000
Clwydian Community Care	5,842,000

University Hospital of Wales Healthcare	5,414,000
University Dental Hospital	208,000
Velindre	3,260,000

Note:
There has also been a further issue of public dividend capital to East Glamorgan NHS trust of £9,315,240.

Surgery Cancellations

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a breakdown by district health authority of (a) the number of operations cancelled for non-medical reasons on or after the day of admission and (b) the number of patients not re-admitted within one month after a cancellation for each quarter since records began. [21441]

Mr. Richards: Information on the number of cancelled operations is not collected centrally. Information on the number of patients not re-admitted within one month after a cancellation is given in the following table. The data are collected from individual NHS trusts in Wales and figures may not, therefore, relate to residents of the health authority area in which the trust is situated.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Access to Government Information

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the operation of the code of practice on access to Government information during 1995. [22057]

Mr. Freeman: I have today announced the publication of the Government's report on the operation of the code of practice during 1995, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister on how many occasions in each of the past five years Ministers in his Department have passed (a) hon. Members' letters and (b) hon. Members' questions to agencies for response; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total number of letters and questions received. [19420]

Mr. Willetts: Records are not held centrally for letters received before July 1993, when computer records began. The table covers the number of hon. Members' letters passed to agencies for response and this figure as a percentage of the total number of letters from July 1993:

Recruitment and Assessment Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to protect the pension entitlement of staff of Recruitment and Assessment Services; what assessment he has made of efficiency gains from privatisation; and if he will make a statement. [20663]

Mr. Willetts: All those bidding to acquire Recruitment and Assessment Services will have to offer its staff a pension scheme certified by the Government Actuary as offering broadly comparable benefits to those available in the principal civil service pension scheme, or to offer sufficient compensation—such as a higher rate of pay—where benefits are not comparable. Bidders not fulfilling this requirement will be disqualified.

Further efficiency gains can be expected after privatisation. RAS will be free to pursue new business in the private and public sectors and so will be able to spread its overheads over a wider customer base.

HMSO (Privatisation)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what length of notice customer organisations of the HMSO agency were given regarding its proposed privatisation; and if he will make a statement. [20605]

Mr. Freeman: I announced a review of options for the future of HMSO, with a view to privatisation, on 27 September 1995 and confirmed the Government's intention to sell the business on 13 December. Customers have been aware of our proposals since then.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which functions of HMSO are to be sold in the course of its privatisation; and if he will make a statement. [20667]

Mr. Freeman: HMSO's business includes print, publishing and distribution, office supplies, business systems, office furniture and copiers. It has facilities across the UK to serve its almost exclusively public sector customers.

As I said in the House on 13 December last year, at column 989, the Government intend to privatise the whole of HMSO, apart from a small residual body carrying out statutory and quasi-statutory functions.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what factors underlay his decision on the time scale for privatising HMSO; and if he will make a statement. [20622]

Mr. Freeman: My aim is to complete the privatisation as soon as possible, subject to the need to ensure that the process is fully controlled and that all relevant concerns have been addressed.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consultations he held with staff of HMSO prior to the announcement of its privatisation; and if he will make a statement. [20662]

Mr. Freeman: I gave details of my contacts with HMSO staff and unions in my answer of 4 December 1995 to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, column 33. Since then, I have had a further meeting with national and local trade union representatives.

The Government are committed to ensuring that staff are treated fairly during the privatisation, and to ensuring that their legal rights are fully respected. I and my colleagues and officials will continue to keep HMSO staff informed, and are willing to hold further meetings as necessary.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has for a public consultation in respect of the privatisation of HMSO; and if he will make a statement. [20668]

Mr. Freeman: I and my officials are naturally willing to discuss matters with those with an interest in HMSO. In particular, we have already been in contact with customers and suppliers of HMSO, trade associations, unions and others with a direct interest in HMSO's privatisation.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to protect the pension entitlement of staff of HMSO after privatisation; what assessments he has made of efficiency gains from the privatisation; and if he will make a statement. [20666]

Mr. Freeman: All those bidding to acquire HMSO will have to offer its staff a pension scheme certified by the Government Actuary as offering broadly comparable benefits to those available in the principal civil service pension scheme. Bidders not fulfilling this requirement will be disqualified.

Privatisation should result in efficiency gains in several areas. Trading in wider markets will enable the privatised business to spread its overheads over a wider customer base, the stationery office will become free to borrow and invest without seeking prior Treasury approval, and it will be freely able to diversify as business opportunities become available. This is consistent with the experience of previous privatisations.

By contrast, if HMSO were to remain in the public sector, it would continue to be constrained by its shrinking market and the rigours of public expenditure controls. In these circumstances, further widespread job losses would be inevitable, resulting in an added burden to the taxpayer.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the market value of the skills of HMSO staff for the purposes of privatisation; and if he will make a statement. [20725]

Mr. Freeman: The skills of HMSO's staff contribute to its performance. HMSO's trading record, together with its prospects and the value of its physical assets, provide the basis for the benchmark valuation which will be constructed by my advisors. It is not possible to separate out a value for staff skills, nor is it desirable to make public the overall valuation, since that would damage the Government's negotiating position and their ability to secure the best deal.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what has been the total cost of answering questions to the Deputy Prime Minister; [21176]

(2) what was the cost of answering (a) an oral and (b) a written parliamentary question to the Deputy Prime Minister from (i) Opposition and (ii) Government Members in each parliamentary Session since 1989–90. [21456]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The information as requested is not available.

TRANSPORT

Newbury Bypass

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total cost since 29 February to the sheriffs of enforcing eviction orders against protestors camped on the route of the Newbury bypass; and how much of this cost is expected to be recovered from the protestors who have been evicted. [21270]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Rendel, dated 19 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary question about the costs incurred by the Sheriff in evicting protestors from the route of the Newbury Bypass.

No figures are yet available but the costs are not expected to be recovered from protestors. Costs orders awarded by the courts against defendants only cover the legal expense of bringing the action to court, not the Sheriff's costs.

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the levels of congestion which would apply to the A34 around Newbury by (a) 2005 and (b) 2015 if the current bypass project was not constructed. [20895]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Sir Peter Fry, dated 19 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the levels of congestion which would apply to the A34 around Newbury by (a) 2005 and (b) 2015 if the current by-pass project was not being constructed.

The existing Annual Average Daily Traffic (AADF) flows on the A34 Inner Relief Road in Newbury are approximately 50,000 vehicles per day and this already results in significant congestion during weekday peaks and at times during summer weekends. Within these periods the road operates close to its maximum capacity. Conditions for long distance through traffic are generally very poor and intolerable at times. The overall level of service is very low.

The levels of congestion that would arise in the future without the bypass would be very much worse. It is difficult to quantify just how bad conditions would become because the exact level of congestion would depend on many factors including the general growth in travel demand, changing driver behaviour and the capacity of the A34.

The ultimate carrying capacity of an urban road over a whole day depends on many factors. These include the urban nature of the road, the proportion of heavy vehicles, the effects of junctions and their capacities, the interaction of local and longer distance through traffic, the variation in traffic flows throughout the day and how traffic demand spreads from peak to off peak periods.

The capacity also depends on the interaction of these factors which is complex. It is therefore very difficult to state a precise daily flow which represents the maximum flow the A34 could carry. In theory there is some scope for traffic flows to increase above existing levels outside the peak periods. But in practice, this would require a significant change in driver behaviour for instance travelling in the relatively less busy parts of the day.

Any increase in flow would of course mean very much more serious congestion, for longer and longer periods than happens now, and a very poor level of service. In practice the very worst conditions that are experienced now would become a normal event; stop-start driving conditions through the town would extend over much of the working day. These conditions are likely to occur within the next five to ten years if there is significant growth in traffic levels.

In the long term, traffic flows and congestion levels are much more di2fficult to assess. Our traffic forecasts go as far as 2010, the design year for the bypass. These imply very serious congestion on the A34 if nothing is done. We have not attempted to forecast the flows beyond 2010. The table below shows flows on the A34 within Newbury without the Bypass.

Year	A34 Inner Relief Road
	Low growth	High growth
2005	61,000	70,000
2010	65,000	78,000

The flows given are Annual Average Daily Traffic for low and high growth.

I think it is also worth pointing out that congestion, as well as being a serious problem in terms of the delays and disruption to traffic, also leads to a significant environmental impact; heavy queuing traffic wastes fuel, causes greater air pollution and spoils the environment for the local community in Newbury.

Transport Research Laboratory

Mr. Whittindale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to complete the privatisation of the Transport Research Laboratory. [21765]

Mr. Norris: Negotiations with the preferred bidder, the Transport Research Foundation, are continuing. I expect the sale to be completed shortly.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has issued any further guidance to the franchising director. [21970]

Sir George Young: I have today written to the franchising director confirming that I am content for him to correct a minor error in the passenger service requirement for the InterCity east coast franchise. I am placing a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he has commissioned into the effects of rail privatisation on the number of passengers using the national rail network; and what was the cost of that research. [20779]

Mr. Watts: None.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the vehicles which are currently exempt from the emissions test of the MOT; [21251]

(2) when he plans that all vehicles over three years old will be subject to the MOT emissions test; and if he will make a statement. [21250]

Mr. Norris: The emissions test has been suspended simply in relation to a number of car models registered on or after 1 August 1992. Full details are contained in "Special Notice 2/96", issued to authorised testing stations by the Vehicle Inspectorate, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. This includes some or all relevant models from: Alfa Romeo, Aston Martin Lagonda, Caterham, Coleman Milne, Daihatsu, Fiat, Ford, HMC Sportscars, Isuzu, Jaguar, Lada, Lamborghini, Lancia, Mazda, Mercedes Benz, Nissan, Porshe, Renault, Rover, Saab, Subaru, Toyota, TVR, Vauxhall.

We intend very shortly to consult on the necessary amending regulations for reintroducing the test for all affected vehicles.

Sea Empress

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what directions were given (a) by him and (b) by officials of his Department to the harbourmaster dealing with the Sea Empress on the day on which the disaster first occurred; and if he will make a statement. [21580]

Mr. Norris: None.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the pilot on the Sea Empress had been subject to routine drug and alcohol testing before he boarded the vessel. [18584]

Mr. Norris: There is no statutory requirement for routine drug and alcohol testing of harbour pilots. The investigation into the incident by the marine accident investigation branch will consider whether alcohol or drugs had a bearing on the incidents.

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21515]

Mr. Norris: All civil servants in the Department work conditioned hours—that is, 36 hours per week net of lunch breaks in London and 37 hours elsewhere.

Staff in senior grades down to and including grade 6 are not entitled to compensation in respect of hours worked in excess of conditioned hours. The Department holds no records which would identify which individuals in these grades had worked more than their conditioned hours or how many hours had been worked.

Staff in grades up to grade 7 are entitled to take time in lieu or to claim overtime in respect of extra hours worked. No records exist in respect of those staff who have made arrangements with their line managers to take time in lieu. Where staff have claimed overtime payments, records are held by the Chessington Computer Centre. Although an analysis of records could be undertaken by the Chessington Computer Centre, this would be at disproportionate cost.

Airport Development

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 212, if he will make a statement on the action taken by the BAA to investigate the possibility of less environmentally damaging options for runway development. [21379]

Mr. Norris: I understand that BAA plc is currently engaged in the first phase of this work, focusing on the technical feasibility of a close parallel runway at Gatwick.

Institute of Advanced Motorists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to (a) publicise and (b) promote the Institute of Advanced Motorists. [21222]

Mr. Norris: I welcome the valuable contribution that organisations such as the Institute of Advanced Motorists make to improving road safety by raising awareness of driving standards. I would encourage all drivers to consider taking additional training throughout their driving careers.

Oil Spills

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that adequate compensation is paid to all those who can prove loss of property or financial loss as a result of oil spills at sea; [21234]

(2) what measures he has taken to ensure that companies which are affected indirectly from oil spills at sea are adequately compensated. [21235]

Mr. Norris: The 1969 international convention on civil liability for oil pollution damage and the 1971 international convention on the establishment of an international fund for compensation for oil pollution damage, implemented in the United Kingdom by the Merchant Shipping Act 1995, provide for compensation for pollution damage caused by spills from vessels carrying oil in bulk. The criteria for admissibility of these claims is described in the claims manual produced by the International Oil Pollution Compensation Fund. Copies of the claims manual have been placed in the Library of the House.

Eyesight Regulations

Sir Harold Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that drivers of vehicles entering the United Kingdom comply with United Kingdom eyesight regulations for driving. [21658]

Mr. Norris: Visitors to the United Kingdom are entitled by international convention to drive for up to one year on licences issued by their national authorities. For drivers from within the EU, minimum standards of medical fitness for driving, including eyesight requirements, are set in the first and second directives on driving licences, and implemented in national legislation. If it were to become clear that the eyesight standards of any visiting drivers were unacceptable in terms of road safety, we would take the matter up, in the first instance, with the relevant national authority.

Birmingham Northern Relief Road

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost to date of the public inquiry into the Birmingham northern relief road; what is the estimated total cost of the inquiry; and what is the estimated total cost of the Birmingham northern relief road scheme. [20776]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Clare Short, dated 19 March 1996:

You asked the Secretary of State for Transport about costs in respect of the Birmingham Northern Relief Road (BNRR).

The public inquiry into the scheme closed on 4 October last year. The total cost to the Highways Agency was about £1.2 million.

BNRR is a privately funded scheme and the total cost is a matter for Midland Expressway Ltd, the concessionaire.

Road Schemes

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of the first three tranches of shadow toll road contracts over the period of each contract; and what would have been the cost of building these roads had they been built under the old procedures. [20781]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Clare Short, dated 19 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the cost of public funds of the first three tranches of shadow toll road contracts over the period of each contract, compared with the cost of building them under the old procedures.

As part of the process of evaluating bids for a DBFO contract, we compare those bids with an analysis of the costs of procuring the new construction and maintenance by more conventional means. This enables us to satisfy ourselves that the proposed DBFO represents genuine value for money.

Railway Timetabling

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the proposal to invite the train operators to take lead responsibility for compiling the railway timetable. [20902]

Mr. Watts: No such proposal has been received.

North West Regional Railways

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects North West Regional Railways to be franchised. [21000]

Mr. Watts: I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 5 December 1995, Official Report, column 189.

Vessels (Pilots)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which types of vessels are required to have a pilot on board when navigating in United Kingdom coastal waters. [20523]

Mr. Norris: Pilotage is compulsory only in the waters of statutory harbour authorities. Section 7 of the Pilotage Act 1987 provides for such an authority to direct that pilotage shall be compulsory if it considers that, in the interests of safety, it should do so. A pilotage direction may apply to all vessels over 20 m in length or to all ships of specified descriptions, and may relate to part or all of the harbour. Section 8 provides for pilotage exemption certificates to be granted to suitably qualified masters and first mates. There are three harbours where these are not available by virtue of an order under section 8(3)—Aberdeen, Forth and Sullom Voe.

TREASURY

Taxation

Mr. Hall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people pay tax at each rate as a percentage of (i) those in work and (ii) the total available for work; and how many of those in work pay no tax on income. [19814]

Mr. Jack: The latest estimate is that 25.8 million individuals will pay income tax in 1996–97. Of these, 6.3 million will be lower rate taxpayers, 17.3 million basic rate taxpayers and 2.2 million higher rate taxpayers.

The summer 1995 labour force survey shows that, in the UK, 28.8 million people are available for working, including 26.3 million who are in employment.

It is inappropriate to calculate the number of taxpayers as a percentage of the working population because the taxpayer population includes individuals who are not in employment but pay tax on pensions and investment income.

Low Pay

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the number of people, by gender and region, who earn less than £58 per week, who are aged (a) 16 to 24 years, (b) 25 to 49 years and (c) 50 to 64 years. [20783]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Information at this level of detail is not readily available. Summary data from the labour force survey (spring 1995) are shown in the table.

Government Bonds

Mr. Renton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current different of yield between long United Kingdom bonds and long German bonds; and how much interest would be saved annually if these United Kingdom bonds had the same yield as their German equivalent. [21555]

Mrs Angela Knight: On 15 March 1996, the standardised yield differential between 10-year UK and German Government bonds was 1.7 per cent. The average differential for the first 11 months of this financial year has been 1.5 per cent. For every £1 billion borrowed, the current yield differential would save £17.3 million per year until the bonds mature. The Government aim to issue around £31.5 billion of bonds including redemptions in 1995–96.

Vat on Fuel (NHS)

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official

Report, columns 552-53, what estimates he has made of VAT receipts in respect of expenditure on fuel from the NHS in each year 1979 to 1995. [21398]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: All supplies of fuel and power were zero-rated before 1 July 1990. Estimates of VAT receipts in respect of expenditure on fuel and power by the NHS are given for each year from 1990 to 1994. Figures are not yet available on which to base an estimate for 1995.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Executive Agencies

Mr. Cummings: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions in each of the past five years Ministers in his Department have passed (a) hon. Members' letters and (b) hon. Members' questions to agencies for response; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total number of letters and questions received. [19419]

Company Board Members (Termination Settlements)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what statutory provisions govern challenges by shareholders to a termination settlement for a board member of a publicly quoted company; [20897]

(2) if he will introduce legislation to require that the terms of termination agreements for board members of publicly quoted companies are made available to (a) all board members and (b) all shareholders; [20900]

(3) what statutory provisions govern the termination agreements of board members of publicly quoted companies and the rights of all members of the board to be aware of the terms of such agreements. [20896]

Mr. Oppenheim: Sections 312 to 316 of the Companies Act 1985 make various provisions in respect of compensation payments to directors for loss of office. They apply only in cases where the director does not have a contract with the company; they do not cover bona fide payments by way of damages for breach of contract or by way of pension in respect of past service. Under section 312 of the Act it is unlawful for a company to make a compensation payment without particulars of the proposed payment, including the amount, being disclosed to members of the company and approved by the company. Section 313 makes such payments unlawful when made in connection with the transfer of the whole or part of the undertaking or property of a company and when made by third parties, unless particulars have been disclosed to shareholders and approved by the company. Section 314 provides that where such a payment is to be made to a director of a company in connection with the transfer of all or any shares of the company resulting from an offer to shareholders, it is the duty of the director to take all reasonable steps to include particulars of the proposed payment with any notice of the offer given to shareholders.

Under section 318 of the Companies Act 1985, where a director has a written contract of service the company must make available a copy of the contract for inspection by any member of the company without charge. Where the contract is not in writing, the company must make available for inspection a written memorandum setting out the terms of the contract. However, these requirements do not apply where the unexpired portion of the term for which the contract is to be in force is less than 12 months, or where the contract can, within the next ensuing 12 months, be terminated by the company without payment of compensation.

I have no plans to introduce further legislation on these subjects.

Export Licensing

Sir David Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to publish a consultation paper including proposals for (a) the content of new legislation in place of the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939 and (b) an export licensing system as recommended by Sir Richard Scott. [21298]

Mr. Lang: I have agreed to publish a consultation paper covering export control legislation and licensing procedures. The aim is to issue the paper by this summer.

Sir David Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to make available for public inspection applications for military equipment export licences in advance of the licence application being considered; and if he will make a statement. [21545]

Mr. Lang: As a response to the recommendations of Sir Richard Scott in his report, I have agreed to publish a consultation paper covering export control legislation and licensing procedures. This will cover consideration of the extent to which details of licence applications should be published. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has agreed to a review of the convention by which replies to parliamentary questions on arms sales are refused, and an information paper on this has already been placed in the Library of the House.

Fur Trade

Mr. Heppell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the number of retail businesses involved in the fur trade in each of the last five years. [21372]

Mr. Oppenheim: None.

Public Sector Research Establishments

Mr. Connarty: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his policy towards public sector research establishments. [21259]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government set out their policy towards public sector research establishments in their response to the "Multi-departmental Scrutiny of Public Sector Research Establishments", published in September 1995, Cm 2991.

This initiated a programme of prior options reviews of establishments, to allow Ministers collectively to take a strategic view of the UK's public sector research establishments. Each review is addressing the relationship of the establishment concerned to others in similar or related fields and will consider, among other things, the potential for privatisation or rationalisation.

The results of these reviews will be considered by Ministers collectively, with the aim of completing the major part of the work by the end of 1996.

Inward Investment

Mr. Renton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the most recent figures for inward investment into the United Kingdom over the past five years from (a) within the European Union and (b) outside the European Union; and how many jobs this investment (i) created and (ii) maintained. [21554]

Mr. Oppenheim: According to figures notified to my Department's Invest in Britain Bureau for the financial years 1990–91 to 1994–95, the number of projects, new and safeguarded jobs from within and outside the European Union are as follows:

	Number of projects	Jobs new	Jobs safeguarded
EU
1990–91	127	5,141	18,061
1991–92	136	5,772	14,212
1993–93	108	4,550	20,727
1993–94	127	5,031	43,492
1994–95[1]	103	6,930	15,094
Total	601	27,374	111,586
Non EU
1990–91	237	18,679	42,839
1991–92	217	16,801	16,891
1992–93	225	13,272	23,098
1993–94	306	25,610	26,262
1994–95	352	31,421	38,764
Total	1,337	105,783	147,854

[1] Figures do not include Austria, Finland and Sweden who joined the European Union in January 1995.

All the figures are based on numbers of projects notified to the Invest in Britain Bureau at the time of the decision to invest. Companies are under no obligation to notify their investment decisions and the figures take no account of subsequent developments.

PRIME MINISTER

Far East (Visit)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his recent official visit to the far east. [19934]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bridlington (Mr. Townsend) on 7 March, Official Report, columns 315–16.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 19 March. [20054]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 19 March. [20055]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

House Staff (Justices of the Peace)

Mr. Sims: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, what arrangements exist to give employees of the House of Commons who are appointed justices of the peace leave of absence to carry out their judicial training and duties. [21424]

Mr. Beith: Under the House of Commons Administration Act 1978, conditions of service of staff of the Commission are kept broadly in line with those in the home civil service. In line with this principle, such staff are allowed reasonable time off for attendance required by statutory bodies within section 29 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978. This allows staff who are appointed justices of the peace leave of absence to carry out their judicial training and duties.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Human Rights Abuses

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals the United Kingdom will put forward to ensure that the 52nd session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights takes consistent action on countries which commit human rights abuses. [21069]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We support a consistent approach by the UN Commission on Human Rights, but it is not always possible to achieve the necessary majorities. Together with our EU partners, we will deliver a statement to the Commission commenting on human rights practices in over 40 countries. The EU will also table several resolutions on human rights practices in countries with exceptional bad records. We will be active in encouraging fellow members of the commission to support them.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what considerations underlie the United Kingdom's objection to clauses in the draft declaration on human rights defenders allowing third parties to take court action against violators of human rights. [21070]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We support the concept of non-governmental organisations acting as legal representatives of those alleged to be victims of human rights violations, and are happy to work with such organisations for the achievement of an acceptable outcome. However, we and others are opposed to the notion of individuals being entitled to bring actions in the courts relating to claims in which they themselves have no direct interest.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government (a) participation in and (b) policy towards the working group on the draft optional protocol to the convention against torture and other cruel, inhuman, or degrading treatment or punishment; and what proposals he has to move the initiative forward at the 52nd session of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. [21071]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have participated actively at each session of the working group. We aim to negotiate, as rapidly as possible, a protocol to the torture convention, which will create a new UN body to visit and report on places of detention in the territories of states parties. At the forthcoming session of the Commission on Human Rights, we shall endeavour to ensure that the mandate of the working group is extended to enable it to continue this work.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals the United Kingdom has to ensure that the United Kingdom Commission on Human Rights implements the Beijing declaration and platform for action on women. [21072]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We are fully committed to following up the recommendations of the Beijing platform for action on women. One of the main forums for discussion on this subject is the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women, currently in session in New York, but a few specific recommendations from the Beijing conference will also be discussed during the forthcoming session of the UN Commission on Human Rights. The UK delegation is playing an active part in both forums.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the rules governing access to the Government broadcasting station on St. Helena. [21680]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The station manager has editorial discretion but operates under guidelines issued by the St. Helena Government.

Rwanda

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure implementation of the recommendations produced by the multi-donor report on "The International Response to Conflict and Genocide: Lessons from the Rwanda Experience", published on 12 March. [21073]

Mr. Hanley: The circumstances that gave rise to genocide in Rwanda are worthy of a detailed international analysis. We will examine the recommendations carefully with other donors, UN agencies and non-governmental organisations, and consider ways in which lessons can be learnt.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made and are making to the Government of Sierra Leone regarding human rights abuses. [21103]

Mr. Hanley: We take every opportunity to urge the Sierra Leone Government to bring perpetrators of human rights abuses to justice. Any lasting improvement in the political and human rights situation depends on the restoration of accountable, civilian Government in Sierra Leone and an end to the rebel war which we fully support.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions Her Majesty's Government have held with the Government of Sierra Leone regarding immunity for those found guilty of human rights abuses during the civil war. [21104]

Mr. Hanley: No such discussions have taken place.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has for the future chairmanship of the Further Education Funding Council. [21968]

Mr. Paice: The current chairman, Sir Robert Gunn, has accepted my right hon. Friend's invitation to continue as chairman until 16 January 1998. We are very grateful to Sir Robert for his excellent contribution to the establishment and work of the council over the last four years, and for his willingness to continue to serve as chairman.

Schools (Surplus Places)

Mr. John Greenway: to ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the numbers and percentages of surplus places in each local authority in England. [21969]

Mrs. Gillan: The following tables set out the numbers of surplus places, by local authority area, and the proportion that these represent of total capacity, as at January 1995. The data are drawn from the returns made during 1995 by local education authorities in respect of their schools and by the Funding Agency for Schools in respect of grant-maintained schools in stage 2 and 3 authority areas: data on surplus places in the 336 grant-maintained schools in stage 1 authorities are not available. These returns show that there were just over 880,000 surplus school places in January 1995, representing 12 per cent. of the total capacity of 7.6 million places. This represents a reduction overall of some 130,000 places between 1994 and 1995—some 2 per cent. of total capacity.

This is encouraging, but the tables illustrate considerable variation in numerical and proportionate levels of surplus across the country. In some cases, combinations of pupil population growth and rationalisation are expected to reduce high levels of surplus to more acceptable levels. Where there is no sign of significant reduction in high levels of surplus, the Department will consult the authorities concerned about the extent to which any of that surplus is in practice removable. In the light of this consultation, my right hon. Friend will decide whether surplus place removal targets should be set for any of those authorities.

[2] Stage two for planning purposes.
[3] Stage three for planning purposes.
1. Stage 1 = less than 10 per cent. of pupils in the GM sector.
Stage 2 = between 10 per cent. and 75 per cent. of pupils in the GM sector.
Stage 3 = 75 per cent. or more pupils in the GM sector.

Schools Access Initiative

Sir Alan Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the schools access initiative. [21971]

Mr. Forth: Local education authorities are today being notified of supplementary credit approvals totalling £7.8 million in 1996–97 to enable them to improve access to mainstream schools for pupils with disabilities, and are being notified that capital grant of £974,000—grant to voluntary aided schools is paid at the rate of 85 per cent. of eligible expenditure—will support work in 1996–97 at voluntary aided schools. Together with partnership funding in many cases, the total value of the projects concerned is £10.6 million.

I am delighted that this will enable many more schools to admit pupils with disabilities. It will improve facilities in over 700 mainstream schools, not only for pupils with physical disabilities, but for those with, for example, visual or hearing impairments. The result will be greater access to the curriculum and to the social life of school for these pupils.

LEAs and schools are planning a wide variety of projects. Just a few examples of the many worthwhile and imaginative improvements which will be made are:

providing ramps, lifts, handrails and walkways to improve access to buildings; adapting accommodation for particular curriculum areas or relocating this accommodation to make it accessible; purchasing specialist equipment such as teaching aids for the visually handicapped—for example, Braille microcomputers— or portable transmitter/receiver systems for profoundly deaf pupils.

To maximise the benefits of the schools access initiative, LEAs and schools have secured partnership funding totalling some £1.8 million. This has come from private contributions, business sponsorship, voluntary aided school governors' contributions and schools' own resources. It is a marvellous achievement.

Access to Work Scheme

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will take steps to ensure that no disabled persons in Wales are denied benefit from the access to work scheme because of cash limits on the available budget; and if she will make a statement. [20787]

Mr. Paice: While additional funds have been allocated to the 1995–96 budget, it has been necessary to focus support mainly on people with disabilities who have been unemployed for at least four weeks and those to whom the Employment Service has existing commitments. The Government believe that this is the most equitable way of allocating the limited resources available across Great Britain.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many blind and vision-impaired people in the United Kingdom are currently receiving assistance from the access to work scheme; [21371]

(2) how many people in (a) Nottingham and (b) the east midlands are currently receiving assistance from the access to work scheme; and of these how many are blind or visually impaired people. [21370]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. John Heppell, dated 19 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your questions about the number of visually impaired people currently receiving help through the Access to Work programme;

the number of people currently being helped in Nottingham, and in the East Midlands; and the number of these who are visually impaired.

We do not keep detailed records centrally about the characteristics of people currently being helped. However, during 1994–95 we helped 10,394 people nationally and we estimate that around 2,200 of these were visually impaired. Similar figures for 1995/96 will be available after the end of the year.

In the East Midlands Region since Access to Work began, we have helped 1,480 people of whom 347 were visually impaired. The Nottingham Placing Assessment and Counselling Team helped 275 people, of whom 61 are visually impaired. These figures are included in the East Midlands Region total.

I hope this is helpful.

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those areas of executive action where she has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for her decision. [20543]

Mr. Robin Squire: Comprehensive records are not kept in the form requested but reasons will normally be given to the individual affected either at the time the decision is communicated or, on request, afterwards.

Schools (Special Educational Needs)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to review the powers and responsibilities of local education authorities in respect of the provision of special educational needs and education psychology services and specialist advice and support to schools; and if she will make a statement. [21082]

Mrs. Gillan: The powers and responsibilities of local education authorities in this regard are contained in the Education Act 1993 and associated legislation, including the code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs. The code came into force in September 1994, and the Department is currently monitoring its implementation by schools and LEAs, together with implementation of other aspects of the legislation. I understand that Ofsted intends shortly to publish a report on an interim survey by Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools on the implementation of the code of practice in the period from September 1994 to November 1995.

Barnsley and Doncaster Training and Enterprise Council

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many types of Government audits Barnsley and Doncaster TEC has undergone. [20989]

Mr. Paice: Three types of audits have been undertaken by the Department at the Barnsley and Doncaster training and enterprise council. These are in the areas of TEC quality assurance: supplier management, health and safety and financial appraisal and monitoring.

Autistic Children

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will review funding to ensure provision for autistic children; and if she will make a statement. [20877]

Mrs. Gillan: The assessment of autistic children and the identification of a suitable school for them is the responsibility of the local education authority in whose area they live. It is for LEAs to decide how best to use their financial resources in order to carry out statutory duties such as these in the light of local needs and priorities.

The Department is, however, funding a series of joint seminars, to be organised by the National Autistic Society and the Society of Education Officers, which will draw attention to the implications of autism for LEAs.

Schools (Financial Support)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has had, and what studies she has commissioned, since 1 January 1994, with the purpose of changing the balance of financial support between primary and secondary or middle schools. [21139]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has received a few representations on this issue but has commissioned no studies. The distribution of funds between primary and secondary schools is determined by the decisions of each local education authority.

Football Players (Transfer System)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make it her policy that abolition of the transfer system on out-of-contract football players should also apply to non-EU players wishing to transfer from employment in the United Kingdom to other EU countries. [21169]

Mr. Sproat: I have been asked to reply.

No. This is a matter for the football authorities which are independent of Government.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils (a) nationally and (b) in the Greater Manchester area received support under the assisted places scheme in each of the past four years. [21522]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested is given in the following table:

Numbers of pupils holding assisted places

Academic year	England	Greater Manchester
1992–93	28,674	2,813
1993–94	29,291	2,800
1994–95	29,747	2,794
1995–96[1]	30,200	2,800

Numeracy and Literacy Centres

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which local education authorities have been awarded grant for education support and training grants for the establishment of the 10 numeracy and 10 literacy centres announced in January 1996. [21556]

Mr. Robin Squire: No decisions have yet been made about which local education authorities will be selected to run the literacy and numeracy centres. I hope to make an announcement about the successful local education authorities shortly.

School Premises

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the safeguards against overcrowding contained in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1996. [21306]

Mrs Gillan: Regulation 17(3) requires that every part of a school building shall be such that the health, safety and welfare of the occupants shall be reasonably assured. Further to this, regulation 7 requires that the buildings provided for a school shall be adequate to permit the safe and convenient passage of persons and movement of goods within the buildings.

The new regulations will not require any school to take on more pupils: local authorities and school governors will continue to have exactly the same powers over admissions as they do now.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research she has commissioned into the impact of the private finance initiative on higher education institutions. [21310]

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has set up a small expert group with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals, the Standing Conference of Principals and others to consider the private finance initiative in higher education.

Mature Students

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the Government's targets for the participation rate of mature students in higher education by 2000. [21312]

Mr. Forth: The number of mature entrants has increased by 160 per cent. since 1979 and there are now more mature than young people entering higher education. The Government welcome this increase but have not set any targets for the level of participation among mature students.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many mature female students entered higher education institutions in each academic year from 1985–86 to 1995–96. [21313]

Mr. Forth: The available information is given in the following table:

Home full-time mature[1] female entrants to higher education

England

Academic year	Numbers
1985–86	20,548
1986–87	22,268
1987–88	23,723
1988–89	26,467
1989–90	29,825
1990–91	33,024
1991–92	41,936

1994–95	57,745

[1] Those aged 21 and over on an undergraduate course, and those aged 25 and over on a postgraduate course.

Higher Education (Student to Staff Ratio)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average student to staff ratio in higher education for each year from 1985–86 to 1995–96. [21314]

Mr. Forth: Information on the student-staff ratio in higher education institutions in England for the academic years 1990–91 to 1993–94, the latest available, are as follows:

1990–91: 13.4
1991–92: 14.6
1992–93: 15.6
1993–94: 16.5.

Information on the same basis for earlier years is not available.

Higher Education Funding Council for England

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many bids were received by HEFCE in response to circular 17/95; which institutions submitted bids; for what sums; and for what reasons the process was terminated in December 1995; [21316]

(2) how many bids were received by HEFCE in response to its circular 18/94; which institutions were successful; how much funding they were allocated; and how many reader spaces were funded. [21315]

Mr. Forth: These are matters for the Higher Education Funding Council for England. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member with the details.

Key Stage 2 Testing

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to publish the consultation paper on testing at key stage 2. [21304]

Mr. Paice: The Department published a consultation paper on the review of assessment and testing at key stages 1 to 3 on 25 January 1996. We intend to issue a separate consultation paper on key stage 2 performance tables in due course.

School Admissions Policy

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he plans to publish the results of the consultation on increasing schools' flexibility to admit pupils on the basis of aptitude or ability. [21305]

Mrs. Gillan: A summary of comments on the draft circular on school admissions, together with an analysis of responses to the consultation note on deregulating GM schools' admission arrangements, will be placed in the Library in due course.

Higher Education (Professors)

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average salary paid to professors in higher education in each academic year from 1985–86 to 1995–96 broken down by gender. [21311]

Mr. Forth: This information is not held centrally.

DEFENCE

Arms and Military Equipment (Exports)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to present an annual statement to Parliament on the implementation of Government policy with regard to the export of arms and military equipment; and if he will make a statement. [21245]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We have no current plans for such an annual statement but, as I informed the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 11 March, Official Report, column 451, my Department will take the lead in the review of the convention on the disclosure of information about defence exports.

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those areas of executive action where he has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for his decision. [20545]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Works of Art

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which former Minister was presented with a reproduction of "A View of the Admiralty" in 1994; and what was the value of the reproduction. [20829]

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) who provided the valuation of the photographic reproduction of "A View of the Admiralty" given by his Department's staff to a Minister as a leaving gift in 1994; and what was that valuation; [20907]

(2) how much was reimbursed to his Department by staff for the photographic reproduction "A View of the Admiralty", given to a Minister as a leaving gift in 1994. [20906]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Senior civil servants in my Department presented the reproduction "A View of the Admiralty" to my right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Sir A. Hamilton) on his departure from the post of Minister of State for the Armed Forces in 1993. The Department's registrar assessed the reproduction as having only nominal value, a judgment confirmed by the Government art collection. The officers concerned contributed £70 to the Department's funds.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to put his Department's art collection on public display. [20837]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Twenty-seven of my Department's most important works of art are on permanent display at the National Maritime Museum. My Department is receptive to requests from exhibition organisers and works have been loaned on occasions to temporary exhibitions. One work will be displayed in London in April and four will be shown in Manchester during the summer.

Competitive Tendering (Contracts)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by his Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21031]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My Department publishes each year in table 1.14 of "UK Defence Statistics", a copy of which is in the Library of the House, details of numbers and values of contracts placed by headquarters contract branches broken down by procurement route and pricing mechanism. A breakdown of these details by individual agencies could be produced only at disproportionate cost. The figures in table 1.14 exclude contracts placed by the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and the Meteorological Office since their inception and I have asked the chief executives of those agencies to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. Chisholm to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 18 March 1996:

You asked the Secretary of State for Defence for the number and value of the contracts for goods and services awarded after competitive tendering by his Department and its agencies in the last three years. I am replying on behalf of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

The details you requested are as follows:

Year	Total number	Total value (£000)
1992–93	378	44,822
1993–94	596	66,856
1994–95	3,081	109,907
Total	4,055	221,585

The figures refer to the Defence Research Agency (DRA) which was formed on 1 April 1991 and became a Trading Fund on 1 April 1993. The DRA is now part of the larger agency known as DERA which became a Trading Fund on 1 April 1995.

I hope this is helpful.

Letter from J. C. R. Hunt to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 18 March 1996.

I am replying as Chief Executive of the Meterological Office to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the number of contracts let my competitive tender in each of the last three financial years.

Unfortunately the information could only be produced at disproportionate costs, although naturally as an Agency of the Ministry of Defence we follow the Department's policy on competitive tendering. I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful.

Married Quarters Estate

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many married quarters properties are empty (a) in Lancashire and (b) in each local authority area in the country. [21246]

Mr. Soames: My Department owns 417 family quarters in Lancashire, 21 of which are currently vacant. Of these, 11 are presently unallocated and 10 are awaiting repair due to flood damage, etcetera. All these properties are required to house service families.

The local authorities are:

Preston: 2

The Fylde: 17

West Lancashire: 2.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officials responsible for administration of the MOD married quarters estate had been (a) made redundant and (b) dismissed between 1 April 1992 and November 1995. [21378]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

RAF Personnel Management Centre

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about agency status for the Royal Air Force's personnel management centre. [21869]

Mr. Soames: Elements of the Royal Air Force's personnel management centre at RAF Innsworth, Gloucester, are to be considered as a candidate for agency status. The range of business being considered is the formulation and implementation of personnel management policy, the manning of posts and the career management of RAF personnel—both regular and reserves. Some 450 staff, over half civilians, are currently employed on these activities. Trade unions will be consulted on any proposals that arise from this review.

A "prior options" study is being undertaken to establish whether agency status or other options would be appropriate. Comments are invited from interested parties. Comments should be sent by 2 April 1996 to:

Air Marshal D Cousins CB AFC BA RAF

The Air Member for Personnel

Headquarters Personnel and Training Command

Royal Navy (Vessel Procurement)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the cost of construction of the seven Trafalgar class strategic submarines nuclear (a) at year of completion and (b) at 1996 prices; [21396]

(2) what was the cost of construction of the five Sandown class mine counter-measures vessels presently in service (a) at the year of construction and (b) at 1996 prices; [21392]

(3) what was the cost of construction of each of the 12 type 42 destroyers remaining in service (a) at year of completion and (b) at 1996 prices; [21394]

(4) what was the cost of construction of the 14 type 22 frigates built for the Royal Navy (a) at year of completion and (b) at 1996 prices; [21397]

(5) what was the cost of construction of each of the 10 type 23 frigates accepted into service (a) at year of completion and (b) at 1996 prices; [21395]

(6) what was the total cost of construction of the 13 hunt class MCMVs (a) at year of completion and (b) at 1996 prices. [21393]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My hon. Friend the then Minister of State for Defence procurement set out on 14 January 1988 the basis for discontinuing the practice of publishing unit production costs of selected equipments, Official Report, column 373. This remains our position. We continue to make available to the Defence Committee of the House each year on a classified basis costs for those ships currently in production.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many applicants have been waiting for more than a year for a decision from his Department in respect of an appeal against a refusal of an application for asylum. [21486]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to expedite his Department's processing of appeals against a refusal of an application for asylum. [21487]

Mr. Evans: Additional adjudicators have been appointed and further recruitment plans are in hand. The number of hearing rooms has already been increased and further expansion plans are under consideration.

New asylum procedure rules aimed at reducing delays in the appeals process are being prepared following the recommendations in the report by KPMG Peat Marwick. The Lord Chancellor will consult interested organisations about the proposed new rules in due course.

Northern Ireland Court Service

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the current financial cost of the social security commissioners and child support commissioners within the Northern Ireland court service; what were the costs in each financial year from 1990 to 1995; and if he will provide a breakdown of the costs. [20520]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The estimated financial cost of the office of the social security commissioners and child support commissioners for the current financial year is as follows:

Commissioners' salary costs £	Staff salary costs £	Ancillary costs £
175,426.44	102,290.94	47,373.11

Ancillary costs include postage, rent, electricity, maintenance, cleaning, service charges, telephones and travel.

The figures for each of the financial years from 1990 to 1995 are as follows:

Year	Commissioners' salary costs £	Staff salary costs £	Ancillary costs £	Total £
1990–91	119,444.79	90,590.06	32,396.00	242,430.85
1991–92	135,786.72	98,128.08	45,373.65	279,288.45
1992–93	153,751.28	97,606.59	65,960.82	317,318.69
1994–95	168,385.91	103,583.58	294,284.51	566,254.00

The following amounts should be deducted from the overall yearly totals as they are recouped from the Department of Health and Social Services for the percentage of time spent by the commissioners and staff on cases involving non-contributory benefit:

1990–91: £67,588.04

1992–93: £34,940.86

1993–94: £99,465.27

1995–96: £51,359.19.

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those areas of executive action where he has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for his decision. [20538]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No areas have been identified, from readily available sources, in which there is a specific requirement to give reasons.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health and Social Services Expenditure

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland further to the press statement issued on 12 February concerning health and social services expenditure for 1996–97 in respect of relative spending on health and social services in Northern Ireland and England, what is spending on health and social services per head in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) England. [20552]

Mr. Moss: Based on the 1995 public expenditure survey settlement, spending in 1996–97 on health and social services in Northern Ireland will be £954 per head. The comparable figure for England will be £835 per head.

Commonwealth Day

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what celebrations, events or festivities were held in Northern Ireland to celebrate Commonwealth day; and what was the cost of those events in (a) 1995 and (b) 1996. [20595]

Sir John Wheeler: Northern Ireland Departments did not arrange any celebrations, events or festivities. However, the Department of Education encourages schools, by way of a circular which issues annually, to take advantage of the opportunity presented by the celebration of Commonwealth day to increase pupils awareness of the nature and significance of the Commonwealth and to extend the range of their knowledge and understanding of it.

Metropolitan Transport Research Unit Report

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response he has made to the report of the metropolitan transport research unit submitted to his Department by the Balmoral residents association. [20873]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 18 March 1996]: The report has been considered and a detailed response is being prepared.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

London News Radio

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if the Radio Authority has reported to her about the implications of the takeover of London News Radio as it relates to the franchise originally awarded and the quality and source of news gathering and output; and if she will make a statement; [21019]

(2) if the consortium purchasing London News Radio has presented a programme plan in accordance with the terms of the station's existing franchise; and if she will make a statement. [21048]

Mr. Sproat: My Department does not receive programme plans for radio services or reports on their day-to-day performances, since the award and regulation of licences for independent local radio services are solely matters for the Radio Authority.

The Broadcasting Act 1990, however, requires any person acquiring ownership of a licence to comply with the programming proposals included as conditions of the licence when it was awarded, except to the extent that the authority consents to any alteration within the parameters of section 106 of the Act. I understand that the authority has not received any recent proposals for altering the licensed programming of London News Radio and that it is content that the service is currently meeting its licence obligations.

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list those areas of executive action where she has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for her decision. [20537]

Mr. Sproat: Comprehensive records are not kept in the form requested, but no provisions have been identified from readily available sources.

National Lottery (Royal Opera House)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what account was taken of the absence of final planning permission for the Royal Opera house project in determining whether to allocate lottery funds; [20453]

(2) what conditions have been imposed on the Royal Opera house in respect of the new building works before the Arts Council funding is finally committed. [20494]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 18 March 1996]: The decision whether, and under what conditions, to allocate lottery funds to the Royal Opera house was taken by the Arts Council of England, an independent lottery distribution body. I have asked the chairman of the Arts Council to write to the hon. Member placing copies of his response in the House Library.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which of the executive non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) the minutes of meetings, (d) the agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests, indicating in each case if this is (i) under a statutory requirement or (ii) voluntary. [16826]

Mr. Sproat [pursuant to his reply, 27 February 1996, c. 493–94]: Regrettably, the reply was incomplete.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General what factors underlay the decision not to provide the report of Gerry Olsen of the City of London police into BCCI to the lawyers acting for Mr. Imran Iman; and if a copy of the report will now be given to them. [20560]

The Attorney-General: Leading counsel for the prosecution advised that the report was not disclosable. Relevant underlying documents were disclosed.

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list those areas of executive action where he has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for his decision. [20546]

The Attorney-General: No express statutory obligation to give reasons is imposed on the Attorney-General in respect of any of his functions. The extent to which it is appropriate for the Law Officers to give reasons for their decisions will vary according to the circumstances of the case.

Leon Patterson

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects an inquest to be held into the death of Leon Patterson; and if he will make a statement. [21716]

The Attorney-General: As I said in my answer of 3 March 1995, column 729, the date of the further inquest is for the coroner to determine in his judicial capacity.

Marchioness Incident

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, column 595, when he expects to determine whether he will initiate further criminal proceedings in respect of the Marchioness disaster. [20867]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service continues with the tasks outlined in my answer of 14 February 1996. It has also sought the advice of senior Treasury counsel. There is a substantial amount of material which requires to be given careful consideration and I am not able, at this stage, to give the indication sought.

Parental Bindovers

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Attorney-General what guidance is given to the Crown Prosecution Service and its representatives in respect of breach of parental bindovers. [21055]

The Attorney-General: Section 120 of the Magistrates' Court Act 1980 applies to proceedings to estreat a recognisance entered into a parent or guardian under section 58 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991. Breach proceedings are civil proceedings initiated by complaint. They are not commenced or conducted by the Crown Prosecution Service.

ENVIRONMENT

Education Authority Budgets

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, columns 196–97, which local education authorities budgeted by more than £50,000 below their capping limits in the years 1992–93 and 1993–94; and in each case by how much in cash and percentage of total spending. [19967]

Sir Paul Beresford: The local education authorities which budgeted more than £50,000 below their capping limits in 1992–93 and 1993–94 are as follows:

Housing

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the funding available for new-rental housing association houses in 1996–97; and if he will estimate what funding would have been available if funding plans in the 1993 autumn statement had been maintained for each local authority in the east midlands. [19883]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 12 March 1996]: The 1996–97 funding allocations made by the Housing Corporation in the east midlands for the provision of rented housing by housing associations through new build and rehabilitation are listed in the table. The Housing Corporation's estimate of what the allocations may have been for 1996–97 if funding plans in the 1993 autumn statement had been maintained are also listed. These estimates can only be hypothetical since the actual allocations depend on a series of factors including the nature of the schemes submitted by housing associations, local housing needs, local authority involvement and value for money. In any one year, activity by housing associations in a particular authority area can vary according to the schemes proposed and approved.

In addition, the Housing Corporation also makes funding allocations for social lettings provided through: the corporation's programme of new build and rehabilitation for shared ownership; and the corporation's other home ownership initiatives which release existing social lettings for reletting to others in housing need. Local authorities may also support housing association developments with local authority housing association grant.

Local Authority Voids

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the percentage and number of void local authority housing properties in each of the 10 local authorities with the highest figures. [20734]

Mr. Clappison: The 10 local authorities in England reporting the highest percentages of management vacants, dwellings available for letting immediately or after minor repairs, on 1 April 1995 are listed in the table.

	Number of management vacants	Management vacants as a percentage of total stock

Methyl Bromide

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the effects of methyl bromide on the ozone layer. [20583]

Mr. Clappison: My Department has received 21 representations, covering a range of views, on methyl bromide over the last year.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to introduce measures to reduce emissions of methyl bromide. [20584]

Mr. Clappison: The UK has already introduced controls on methyl bromide through EC regulation 3093/94, which is directly applicable to UK law. The regulation obliges all precautionary measures practicable to be taken to prevent leakages of methyl bromide during fumigations. It also includes a freeze on methyl bromide production and consumption at 1991 levels from January 1995 and a further 25 per cent. cut from 1998.

The meeting in December of the parties to the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer agreed to phase out methyl bromide in developed countries by 2010. The EC regulation will need to be amended in line with this decision, and the Council of Ministers has requested the Commission to come forward with appropriate proposals as soon as possible.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to establish monitoring facilities for methyl bromide levels in the atmosphere. [20585]

Mr. Clappison: Regular measurements of atmospheric concentrations of methyl bromide are carried out by the university of East Anglia on behalf of the Department of Environment at Macehead in the Republic of Ireland and Cape Grim in Australia in collaboration with international measurement programmes. Additional measurements have been made from time to time in urban areas, over the oceans and in the free atmosphere to investigate the sources and removal mechanisms for methyl bromide.

Local Authority Rent Arrears

Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 local authorities with the largest rent arrears together with amounts outstanding; what percentage this figure represents of the annual rent collectable; and what is the largest single sum owed by a tenant in each authority. [20733]

Mr. Clappison: The 10 local authorities in England with the highest cumulative rent arrears as a proportion of rent roll on 31 March 1995, the latest date for which figures are available, are as follows:

	Cumulative arrears as a percentage of 1994–95 rent roll	Total cumulative rent arrears £000
Haringey	33.4	20,318
Hackney	31.6	32,675

Southwark	20.8	26,160
Lambeth	19.8	19,491
Greenwich	19.6	14,984
Ealing	19.1	10,809
Liverpool	17.2	12,763
Islington	16.0	16,072
Hammersmith and Fulham	15.1	6,553

Housing Associations (Wirral and Liverpool)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the moneys available in (a) the Wirral and (b) Liverpool-based housing associations for expenditure in the Wirral. [20786]

Mr. Clappison: In 1996–97, the Housing Corporation's funding allocation to the Wirral is £4.5 million. These funds are distributed to all housing associations whose proposed housing schemes in the Wirral were successful in this year's competition for funding irrespective of where those associations are based. Details of allocations to individual housing associations will be published in the Housing Corporation's regional allocations statements in early May.

Rural Housing

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from organisations on the extent of rural homelessness; and of the responses to this Department's White Paper on housing, what percentage expressed concern over the extent of rural homelessness. [20983]

Mr. Clappison: The representations we have received recently about rural housing issues, including those in response to the housing White Paper, have primarily been concerned with the proposed purchase grant proposals. My Department has commissioned research into the nature of housing need and the demand for housing in different types of rural areas. The results are expected later this year.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what safeguards he will introduce to ensure that future provision of rural social housing meets demand. [20981]

Mr. Clappison: Guidance is provided by the Department to local authorities on the preparation of their housing strategies and the need to identify and prioritise rural housing needs alongside other housing needs in their areas. Their priorities guide the allocation of Housing Corporation funding for new social housing to meet housing need in each area.

Public funding continues to support the Housing Corporation's rural housing programme which provides new social housing in small rural villages of 3,000 and fewer population. Between 1996–97 and 1998–99 this programme is expected to approve around 1,500 new rural homes a year which is over 300 more than the number being provided in 1995–96.

To safeguard the supply of affordable rented housing and ensure the continued provision of sites, the Government are proposing to exempt small rural villages of 3,000 and fewer population from the purchase grant scheme. This exemption will also apply to the voluntary scheme that is being launched in April 1996.

A new rural housing enhancement factor will be introduced on 1 April 1996 to address the additional costs associated with developing schemes in rural areas. The effect of this multiplier will be to increase by up to a quarter the proportion of grant which schemes would otherwise receive.

We have also recently issued for consultation a draft circular on planning and affordable housing that provides practical advice to local planning authorities and developers on the implementation of affordable housing policies and clarification of how to assess need.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the level of rural homelessness (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the national total of homeless households in each year since 1989. [20980]

Mr. Clappison: The information is not available centrally. The data collected from local authorities on homeless households accepted for re-housing do not differentiate between households from rural and non-rural areas.

I have today placed in the Library a summary print showing the reported acceptances in each local authority area in England for the years 1980 to 1995.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of rural housing is unfit for human habitation. [20982]

Mr. Clappison: The 1991 English house condition survey found 7.6 per cent. of rural housing to be unfit under section 604 of the Housing Act 1985, as amended by schedule 9 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Competitive Tendering (Contracts)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by his Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21032]

Sir Paul Beresford: This information is not held centrally by my Department and is obtainable only at disproportionate cost.

Pollution Controls

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reconsider his decision to delay the implementation of pollution controls on volatile organic compound emissions; and if he will make a decision. [20878]

Mr. Clappison: No. The decision, announced last June, was justified pending the review of the relevant statutory guidance notes. It avoided industry incurring what might prove to be unnecessary expenditure. We are well on course to achieving a 30 per cent. reduction in volatile organic compound emissions by 1999 in accordance with the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe VOC protocol. This reduction will not be compromised by the extension to the implementation time-scale.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effect of changes to the home energy efficiency scheme on pensioner households. [21049]

Mr. Clappison: All householders aged over 60 remain entitled to grants under this successful high-quality scheme. Those on low incomes or receiving disability benefits will continue to be eligible for 100 per cent. grants for better insulation of their homes and for energy advice. From 1 April, better-off householders over 60 will be entitled to free advice, and to insulation measures at a substantial discount.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) requests for information and (b) applications for grants were made under the home energy efficiency scheme in (i) February 1995, (ii) February 1996, (iii) March 1995 and (iv) March 1996 to the latest available date. [21261]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The table shows the numbers of requests for information received by Eaga Ltd. the scheme managers, and the numbers of grants claimed.

Month	Inquiries handled by Eaga Ltd.	Grant claims
February 1995	27,322	42,801
February 1996	53,874	58,551
March 1995	18,805	32,390
March 1996 (until 8th)	12,605	27,225

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many home energy efficiency scheme (a) applications and (b) grants have been made since 1 April 1995 to the latest available date; [21262]

(2) how many households have had work carried out under the home energy efficiency scheme since 1 April 1995 to the latest available date. [21263]

Mr. Jones: From 1 April 1995 to 8 March 1996, 602,791 home energy efficiency scheme grant claims in respect of work completed were received by Eaga Ltd. Applications to installers for work to be done are not centrally recorded. In the same period, Eaga Ltd. received 330,000 inquiries about the scheme.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the waiting list of applications for home energy efficiency scheme grants which have been received but have yet to be processed at the latest available date. [21264]

Mr. Jones: I estimate that installers now have, on average, about 18 weeks, work from people who have registered an interest in the home energy efficiency scheme.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money from the 1996–97 home energy efficiency scheme budget will be used to fund work where the application was made on or before 31 March; and how many grants will be paid for in this way. [21287]

Mr. Jones: I estimate that up to 210,000 claimants may have registered an interest by 31 March 1995. If all of them are eligible for grants under the present rules, up to £34 million of the 1996–97 budget could be spent.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) in how many cases where applications for home energy efficiency scheme grants have been approved the work has not yet been carried out; [21265]

(2) what proportion of households who successfully apply for home energy efficiency scheme grant in (a) the third quarter of financial year 1995–96 and (b) the fourth quarter of financial year 1995–96 will have the work carried out within financial year (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97. [21266]

Mr. Jones: I understand that over 200,000 people who have inquired about grants are waiting for work to be done. The table gives the information requested about times of inquiry and estimated payment of grant.

Percentage

Period of enquiry	Work completed in 1995–96	Work completed in 1996–97
Third quarter of 1995–96	95	5
Fourth quarter of 1995–96	25	75

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of home energy efficiency scheme grants made in (a) financial year 1994–95 and (b) financial year 1995–96 to the latest available date, were made to people who will no longer be eligible for a full grant after 1 April. [21267]

Mr. Jones: I estimate that in 1994–95, 33 per cent. of all home energy efficiency scheme grants were paid to people aged over 60 who did not also claim an income-related benefit, and the equivalent figure for 1995–96 is likely to be about 45 per cent. I expect the proportion to fall in future.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the national average waiting time for (a) processing applications for home energy efficiency scheme grants and (b) carrying out work under the home energy efficiency scheme once an application was approved, in each month of 1995 and each month of 1996 to the latest available date; [21268]

(2) what was the average waiting time in each region of England and in Scotland and Wales for (a) processing applications for home energy efficiency scheme grants and (b) carrying out work under the home energy efficiency scheme once an application was approved in each month of 1995 and each month of 1996 to the latest date. [21269]

Mr. Jones: The information requested is not available on a regional basis. National data are given in the table. Average waiting times nationally, allowing for seasonal variations in demand, are not significantly longer this winter than last, despite the recent increase in demand for the scheme.

Orimulsion Burning (Emissions)

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the permissible daily tonnage of PM 10s which will be emitted from power stations burning orimulsion; and what monitoring procedures have been agreed. [20847]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 18 March 1996]: With reference to Pembroke power station, proposals have been received from National Power for the burning of orimulsion, and these are currently being evaluated by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. It is intended that releases of particulate matter would be continuously monitored.

With regard to Ince power station, over 90 per cent. of the particulates from orimulsion combustion are removed by the electrostatic precipitators. The particulate emission limits for orimulsion are currently the most stringent of the black fossil power generation processes.

HMIP requires continuous monitoring of particulates emissions, and specific limits have been imposed for short-term (two hours), medium-term (48 hours), and long-term (monthly) average emission levels. In addition, maximum annual tonnage limits are specified.

The authorisation of Ince power station under EPA90 is soon to be modified, and it is expected that PowerGen will be required to assess the effect of emissions (including PM 10s) on local air quality with a view, if necessary, to reducing concentrations under adverse meteorological conditions.

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the measures to be taken at power stations burning orimulsion to ensure there are no emissions of vanadium and other heavy metals as well as pentoxide fumes; and what monitoring procedures have been agreed. [20848]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Orimulsion, in common with most heavy fuel oils, contains a small amount of vanadium and heavy metals which form part of the particulates produced in combustion.

The one power station which is currently firing orimulsion is Ince, and this uses electrostatic precipitators which effectively reduce vanadium and heavy metal emissions levels by more than 90 per cent. as a requirement of its IPC authorisation.

Currently, HMIP imposes an annual tonnage limit on power stations for vanadium and heavy metal emissions. In the forthcoming modified authorisation for Ince power station, this limit has been reduced by 15 per cent.

Telecommunications Masts and Wind Turbines

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what planning restrictions there are on the number of wind turbines erected in a particular area; [21414]

(2) what planning regulations apply to anemometers; [21412]

(3) what planning regulations apply to the erection of wind turbines; [21408]

(4) what statutory protection is provided to areas on the outskirts of areas of outstanding natural beauty from wind farms; [21418]

(5) what protection is provided to areas of outstanding natural beauty from wind farms by (a) planning regulations and (b) guidance; [21409]

(6) what plans he has to review the section on planning policy guidance note 22 dealing with the erection of wind farms. [21411]

Sir Paul Beresford: Wind turbines are subject to the same planning controls as other types of development, and are subject to national policies for the protection of the countryside. Planning policy guidance note 22 gives full and clear advice on the planning framework. The same planning controls apply to anemometers. If a local planning authority wishes to protect a locally important area, it should draw up a policy to do so in its development plan.

All planning applications for wind turbines should be considered on their own merits. Local planning authorities should balance the benefits of developing a clean and renewable source of energy against any impacts on the local landscape depending upon local circumstances.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what method his Department recommends for the safe disposal of (a) mercury, (b) lead, (c) cadmium and (d) polychlorinated biphenyls. [21390]

Mr. Clappison: The recommended method of disposal for these substances will depend on their chemical and physical form, the quantity and the availability of disposal facilities. In general where they are not recovered, mercury, lead and cadmium my be safely disposed to a suitable landfill either directly or after chemical and/or physical treatment.

PCB wastes should be incinerated. At very low concentrations they may be landfilled. There are other specific treatments for PCB-contaminated transformer oils which destroy the PCB to an extent that allows the oil to be reused.

Detailed guidance on methods for the safe disposal of wastes is available in waste management papers published by the Department. The relevant papers are:

WMP No. 12 Mercury-bearing Wastes;

WMP No. 24 Cadmium-bearing Wastes;

WMP No. 6 Polychlorinated Biphenyls; and

WMP No. 11 Metal Finishing Wastes which includes some lead wastes.

In addition, WMP No. 26F co-disposal landfill, currently in preparation, will give guidance on loading rates for these and certain other wastes.

Housing (Environmental Appraisal)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when the draft circular on planning and affordable housing consultation paper was subject to an environmental appraisal using the guidance contained in "Policy Appraisal and the Environment", produced by the Department of the Environment; and if he will publish the appraisal; [21074]

(2) what alternative courses of action from those listed in the draft circular on planning and affordable housing consultation paper were considered in the environmental appraisal undertaken by his Department; [21075]

(3) in what ways the draft circular on planning and affordable housing consultation paper was modified by the results of the environmental appraisal undertaken by his Department. [21076]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The planning policy on affordable housing is set out in planning policy guidance note 3. Because the draft circular does not change policy, but only explains how it can best be implemented, an environmental appraisal was not necessary. However, if any comments are received from consultees on environmental impact, they will be carefully considered.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what procedures have been put in place by his Department to monitor the environmental impacts arising from the implementation of the draft circular on planning and affordable housing consultation paper. [21077]

Mr. Jones: There are no direct environmental impacts of the draft circular. The policy guidance on affordable housing is in PPG3 in which environmental issues are fully addressed, and which was revised following the 1990 White Paper "This Common Inheritance". The draft circular is intended not to add to the policy guidance to planning policy guidance note 3, but to advise on how that guidance might be best given effect.

Local planning authorities, in taking account of PPG3 and other guidance notes in drawing their local plans, are already advised to carry out an environmental appraisal of these plans.

Local Authority Contracts

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by service, the local authorities in England that have been challenged by his Department under regulations under section 9 of the Local Government Act 1992 in relation to their internal arrangements for establishing client-contractor splits. [21547]

Sir Paul Beresford: Although we have received allegations of anti-competitive behaviour by local authorities about the arrangements for establishing a client-contractor split, none has proceeded to statutory action. Records are not available by service area of the allegations which have been received.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by authority and service area, the recorded deficits made by local authority direct labour or services organisations in England that have failed to meet the rate of return requirements operating contracts under the terms of the Local Government (Planning and Land) Act 1980 and for the Local Government Act 1988 for each financial year from 1990–91 to 1994–95 in both cash and constant prices. [21551]

Sir Paul Beresford:

334 (14.5 per cent.) of the 2,302 1994–95 local authority direct labour/service organisation accounts for 1994–95 received by my Department recorded a deficit.

For 1993–94, 2,381 accounts were received, of which 307 (12.9 per cent.) recorded a deficit.

For 1992–93, 2,409 accounts were received, of which 321 (13.3 per cent.) recorded a deficit.

For 1991–92, 2,260 accounts were received, of which 242 (10.7 per cent.) recorded a deficit.

Detailed lists by authority and service area for the years 1991–92 to 1994–95 have been placed in the Library of the House. A list for 1990–91 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many complaints his Department received alleging anti-competitive behaviour by local authorities in England under the terms of the Local Government Act 1988 for each financial year from 1990–91 to 1994–95; and how many local authorities were subsequently issued with a section 19a notice or 19b direction. [21548]

Sir Paul Beresford: The table gives, for the years in question, the number of complaints received by the Department of the Environment alleging anti-competitive behaviour by local authorities under the Local Government Act 1988. It also shows the number of authorities on which notices were served under section 13 and to which directions were given under section 14, and the total numbers of notices and directions.

Year	Total number of complaints	Number of authorities receiving notices	Total number of notices	Number of authorities given directions	Total number of directions
1991–92	41	6	7	2	2
1992–93	70	8	9	5	6
1993–94	110	12	13	6	6
1994–95	65	12	15	8	9

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many complaints his Department received alleging anti-competitive behaviour by local authorities in England under the terms of the Local Government (Planning and Land) Act 1980 for each financial year from 1990–91 to 1994–95; and how many local authorities were subsequently issued with a section 19a notice or 19b direction. [21552]

Sir Paul Beresford: The table gives, for the years in question, the number of complaints received by the Department of the Environment alleging anti-competitive behaviour by local authorities under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980. It also shows the number of authorities on which notices were served under section 19A and to which directions were given under section 19B, and the total numbers of notices and directions.

Year	Number of complaints	Number of authorities receiving notices	Total number of notices	Number of authorities given directions	Total number of directions
1991–92	15	3	3	0	0
1992–93	36	2	3	3	3
1993–94	40	5	6	6	8
1994–95	15	3	3	2	2

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority direct labour and direct service organisations in England, operating contracts under the terms of the Local Government (Planning and Land) Act 1980, have achieved the required rate of return for each financial year from 1992–93 to 1994–95 and similarly under the Local Government Act 1988. [21549]

Sir Paul Beresford: For the financial year 1994–95, my Department recorded 2,302 local authority direct labour and direct service organisation accounts. Some 1,968 of these accounts showed that the statutory financial objective had been met.

For 1993–94, 2,381 accounts were received, 2,057 of which met the required rate of return.

For 1992–93, 2,409 accounts were received, 2,060 of which met the required rate of return.

Local Government Finance

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last issued comprehensive guidance on the system of local authority capital finance; and if he will make it his policy to up-date this at annual intervals. [21559]

Sir Paul Beresford: Comprehensive guidance was last issued in the Department's circular 11/90, on 2 August 1990. A replacement guide is in preparation. Once issued, it will be updated as the need arises.

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the primary and subordinate legislation affecting local authority capital finance. [21558]

Sir Paul Beresford: The primary legislation is parts IV and V of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, as amended. The main subordinate legislation is as follows:

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance) Regulations 1990 [SI 1990/432]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance) (Amendment) Regulations 1990 [SI 1990/1273]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance) (Amendment) Regulations 1991 [SI 1991/500]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance) (Amendment) Regulations 1992 [SI 1992/738]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance) (Amendment) (No.2) Regulations 1992 [SI 1992/1618]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance) (Amendment) (No.3) Regulations 1992 [SI 1992/2819]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance) (Amendment) (No.4) Regulations 1992 [SI 1992/3257]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance) (Amendment) Regulations 1993 [SI 1993/520]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance) (Amendment) (No.2) Regulations 1993 [SI 1993/2014]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance) (Amendment) (No.3) Regulations 1993 [SI 1993/3054]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance) (Amendment) Regulations 1994 [SI 1994/553]

The Local Authorities (Companies) Order 1995 [SI 1995/849]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance and Approved Investments) (Amendment) Regulations 1995 [SI 1995/850]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance) (Amendment) Regulations 1995 [SI 1995/1526]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance and Approved Investments) (Amendment) (No.2) Regulations 1995 [SI 1995/1982]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance and Approved Investments) (Amendment) Regulations 1996 [SI 1996/568]

The Local Authorities (Companies) (Amendment) Order 1996 [SI 1996/621].

In addition, there are 13 sets of regulations dealing with detailed issues concerning the rate of discount, borrowing, approved investments; and two other sets of regulations dealing with capital finance implications of local government reorganisation.

Local Authority Trading Accounts

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by authority the surplus achieved on trading accounts for each financial year from 1992–93 to 1994–95 for (a) general highways work, (b) construction and maintenance of sewers, (c) works on new construction and (d) maintenance work, delivered by local authorities' direct labour or services organisations in England by the terms of the Local Government (Planning and Land) Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988. [21550]

Sir Paul Beresford: A detailed list of the surpluses achieved for these services for the years 1993–94 to 1994–95 has been placed in the Library of the House.

Similar figures for 1992–93 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total running cost to Department for the financial years 1991–92 and 1993–94 of the local government compulsory competitive tendering enforcement team. [21553]

Sir Paul Beresford : The estimated costs of enforcing the compulsory competitive tendering provisions of the Local Government (Planning and Land Act) 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988 are £250,000 in 1991–92 and £420,000 in 1993–94.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the additional costs likely to fall on local authorities as a result of the implementation of the Social Security (Persons from Abroad) Miscellaneous Amendments Regulations 1996 in respect of their statutory duties under (a) existing homelessness legislation, (b) the Children Act 1989 and (c) the NHS and Community Care Act 1990. [21705]

Mr. Clappison: Officials in my Department and the Department of Health have invited the local authority associations to provide information on the likely costs that authorities will face.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment for what reasons the special grants he is proposing to make available under section 88B of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 to authorities which face additional costs as a result of the withdrawal of benefits under the Social Security (Persons from Abroad) Miscellaneous Amendments Regulations 1996 will be subject to a threshold. [21706]

Mr. Clappison: Because it is reasonable for authorities to meet some costs from their own resources.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the minimum threshold of expenditure for each London local authority will be in respect of housing benefit subsidy for-gone and unavoidable additional social services expenditure for the special grants under section 88B of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 to authorities which face additional costs from the introduction of the Social Security (Persons from Abroad) Miscellaneous Amendments Regulations 1996. [21595]

Mr. Clappison: The thresholds have not yet been determined.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make special grants available under section 88B of the Local Government Finance act 1988 to authorities which face additional costs from the introduction of the Social Security (Persons from Abroad) Miscellaneous Amendments Regulations 1996 for the current year only; and what plans he has for similar grants in subsequent years. [21596]

Mr. Clappison: An official in my Department wrote on 26 February to chief executives of local authorities in England explaining the basis on which the Government intend to make special grants available to authorities for 1995–96 and 1996–97. I am placing a copy of that letter in the Library of the House.

Private Finance Initiative

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the primary and subordinate legislation affecting local authorities's ability to take advantage of the private finance initiative; and what plans he has to (a) consolidate this legislation and (b) provide a guide to it for those companies wishing to enter into partnerships with local authorities. [21557]

Sir Paul Beresford: The primary legislation is parts IV and V of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, as amended. Subordinate legislation aimed at assisting local authorities to take advantage of the private finance initiative is as follows:

The Local Authorities (Companies) Order 1995 [SI 1995/849]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance and Approved Investments) (Amendment) Regulation 1995 [SI 1995/850]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance and Approved Investments) (Amendment) (No. 2) Regulations 1995 [SI 1995/1982]

The Local Authorities (Capital Finance and Approved Investments) (Amendment) Regulations 1996 [SI 1996/568]

The Local Authorities (Companies) (Amendment) Order 1996 [SI 1996/621]

Consolidation of the capital finance regulations is in hand, as in the preparation of a guide to the capital finance system. My Department will ensure that there is adequate advice, for both local authorities and potential provider companies, on the private finance initiative in local government.

Gun Clubs

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning advice is given to local planning authorities concerning applications for gun clubs; and if he will make a statement. [21707]

Sir Paul Beresford: The express planning permission of the local authority is required for any development proposal to change the use of a building to use for the purposes of a gun club or to erect a new building. Other land, not in the curtilage of a building, may be used for those purposes for not more than 28 days in a calendar year without express planning permission. Planning applications must be publicised so that local views can be taken into account before decisions are taken. My Department does not issue planning advice specifically on gun clubs. Gun clubs in England and Wales are subject to a licensing regime, independent of the planning legislation, operated by my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

Rural White Paper

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many display leaflets inviting people to purchase the White Paper on Rural England were distributed to post offices in Scotland. [21488]

Mr. Clappison: Post Office Counters provided my Department with details of rural post offices in England to which display material on the English rural White Paper was to be sent. To the best of my knowledge, one post office in Scotland received copies of the display material in error. Post offices were under no obligation to display the material. The leaflets informed the public how to buy a copy of "Rural England" or to obtain the free summary document.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Computers

Mr. Miller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all cases since 1987 where his Department has bought computer capacity from (a) other Departments and (b) the private sector, giving the value of each contract and the name of the private sector contractors. [19450]

Mr. Boswell: Since 1987, the Ministry has not bought in any computer capacity from other Government Departments but has let one outsourcing contract to the private sector company Data Sciences. The value of the contract with Data Sciences is estimated to be £1.5 million.

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those areas of executive action where he has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for his decision. [20550]

Mr. Boswell: Comprehensive records are not kept in the form requested. Identification of the kind of provisions referred to could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Methyl Bromide

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what environmental impact assessments his Department has made in respect of methyl bromide. [20581]

Mr. Clappison: I have been asked to reply.

The stratospheric impact of Methyl Bromide was reviewed by the UK stratospheric ozone review group in its last report "Stratospheric Ozone 1993". Its next assessment will be published by the end of 1996.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidelines his Department has issued regarding the use of methyl bromide. [20582]

Mrs. Browning: My Department has not issued specific guidelines relating to the use of methyl bromide. The British Pest Control Association operates a strict system of regulation, certification and training for the use of methyl bromide which was drawn up in collaboration with my Department and the Health and Safety Executive. Industry has a good history of self-regulation and only those who obtain a BPCA certificate may be supplied with methyl bromide.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what alternative fumigants to methyl bromide are approved for use in the United Kingdom. [20586]

Mrs. Browning: There is no single alternative to methyl bromide in all of its wide range of uses.

Approved alternative fumigants for soil sterilisation include chloropicrin, 1,3 dichloropropene and formaldehyde. Phosphine may be used for commodity fumigation. No alternatives to methyl bromide exists for rodent control and insect elimination aboard aircraft.

Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much funding the Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research at Aberystwyth received from his Department in (a) 1985, (b) 1990, (c) 1992, (d) 1993, (e) 1994 and (f) 1995; how much will be allocated in 1996; and if he will make a statement. [20995]

Mr. Boswell: The Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research was not established until 1989. Records of payments made to the institute by the Ministry in respect of research and deveopment projects are kept on a financial year basis only. These show:

1992–93: £7,164,000
1993–94: £7,452,000
1994–95: £7,426,000
1995–96: £7,449,000 (estimate).

It is too early to forecast total payments for 1996–97 but, to date, some £5,823,000 of expenditure has already been committed.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations his Department has recently received from the Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research; and if he will make a statement. [20997]

Mr. Boswell: This Department is a major funder of research at the Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research and, as such, maintains regular contact in the course of monitoring and reviewing its on-going research. Most recently, discussions have focused on the future scope and content of the MAFF programme on oat breeding at IGER. A formal mid-term review meeting was held on 13 March at which this issue was considered. No final decisions have yet been taken.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much grant aid from the European Commission the Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research received in (a) 1990, (b) 1992, (c) 1994 and (d) 1995; how much is to be allocated in 1996; and if he will make a statement. [20998]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

The Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research received grant in aid from the European Commission for the respective years as follows:

1990–91: £30,000
1992–93: £155,000
1994–95: £458,000
1995–96: £383,000.

The Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council, which is the Research Council responsible for IGER, estimates that in 1996–97 IGER will receive £240,000 from the European Commission.

Merchant Shipping Act 1988

Mr. French: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications of the ruling by the European Court of Justice that the Merchant Shipping Act 1988 contravenes European Law. [20827]

Mr. Baldry: Action has already been taken to amend merchant shipping legislation following the European Court of Justice's judgments in earlier Factortame cases (C 221/89 and C 246/89) in 1991.

In regard to the recent judgment on the latest Factortame case (C 48/93) and the steps which the Government plan to take to deal with quota hopping, I would refer to the replies which my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food gave to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris) on 5 March 1996, Official Report, columns 130–31, and to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 6 March 1996, Official Report, column 345.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. French: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many vessels are currently licensed to fish in British waters; and of those, how many are owned by Spanish operators. [20844]

Mr. Baldry: As at 1 January 1996, some 8,500 British registered vessels were licensed to fish for profit in British and Community waters, although not all of these are entitled to fish for the full range of stocks subject to quota.

Following the introduction of the Merchant Shipping (Registration of Shipping) Regulations 1993 (SI 1993 No. 3138), the Registrar General of Shipping and Seamen no longer collects details of shareholdings in UK companies owning British-registered fishing vessels. We estimate, however, that there are more than 100 licensed UK vessels with a significant Spanish interest.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many veterinary officers and technical assistants were involved on (a) 13 February, (b) 14 February, (c) 15 February and (d) 16 February, in lairages near Dover, in inspecting animals to ensure that they were fit to travel under the Welfare of Animals During Transportation Order 1994 and to deal with other related matters; [20772]

(2) how many consignments containing calves on 13, 14, 15 and 16 February were inspected by his veterinary officers and technical assistants; and how many hours were spent in carrying out the inspections. [20771]

Mrs. Browning: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to the hon. Member for Glandford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley) on 20 February 1996, Official Report, columns 136–37 and on 26 February 1996, Official Report, columns 381–82).

HOME DEPARTMENT

Women Prisoners (Drug Tests)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the procedures involved in respect of the random mandatory drug testing policy for women prisoners. [20618]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the procedures involved in respect of the random mandatory drug testing policy for women prisoners.

In most respects the procedures for the random testing of women prisoners are the same as those for men. Ten per cent. of each prison's population is randomly selected by computer at the beginning of each month. Prisoners are given no advance warning that they are to be tested and are escorted immediately to the sample collection site.

At the sample collection site the prisoners are informed of the reason and authority for the test. All prisoners are searched before being asked to give a sample. Each prisoner is then required to wash her hands to remove any potential contaminants.

Prisons have been advised to assess the risk of false samples being substituted and to take appropriate security measures. Male members of staff are not permitted to collect or to observe the collection of samples from women prisoners.

If a prisoner is unable to provide a sample straight away, she may be confined at the collection site for up to five hours. She is offered a third of a pint of water each hour. If it is suspected that the prisoner is having genuine difficulty in providing a sample, the prisoner is asked if she wishes to see a health care worker. Prisoners who refuse to provide a sample or who fail to provide a sample without a medical reason are charged with disobeying a lawful order.

Samples are equally divided between two bottles. Screening and confirmation tests are carried out on the urine from one bottle, the second may be analysed at an independent laboratory on the prisoner's instructions. Both sample bottles are sealed with bar-coded seals and then sealed into a chain of custody bag for despatch to the laboratory. All of this takes place in the prisoner's presence.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women prisoners have been tested under the random mandatory drug testing policy; and what were the results. [20616]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of women prisoners tested under random mandatory drug testing and the results of those tests.

Between April 1995 and January 1996 586 prisoners were randomly tested for drugs in women only prisons. Of the 586 samples tested 136 (23.2 per cent.) were positive for drugs; 57 (9.7 per cent) were for cannabis, 50 (8.5 per cent.) for benzodiazepines (tranquillisers) 26 (4.4 per cent.) for opiates, two (0.3 per cent.) for cocaine, and one (o.2 per cent.) for methadone.

Statistics from establishments which house both male and female prisoners are not yet broken down by sex.

Prisons ("Advice to Governors")

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy relating to public access to the documents "Advice to Governors", issued to prison governors. [20617]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the policy relating to public access to the documents Advice to Governors.

In responding to requests from members of the public for access to such documents the Prison Service follows the Open Government Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. Each request is considered on its merits and there is a presumption in favour of disclosure.

Charge Reductions

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will advise police authorities that they should repay retrospectively reductions in charges when an error has taken place and has been admitted. [20888]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 18 March 1996]: I would expect police authorities to correct any overcharging when it came to notice, in the same way as any other organisation.

Buckley Hall Prison

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the security cameras currently operating at Buckley Hall prison are constantly monitored; and for how long the videotape recording made by the cameras are stored. [20918]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about whether the security cameras at Buckley Hall prison are monitored constantly and for how long the video recording made by the cameras are stored.

Security cameras at Buckley Hall are monitored constantly. Video recordings made are held for one week before being taped over, unless they are considered to be useful for future use, in which case they would be held for a longer period.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many attempted escapes have been recorded at Buckley Hall prison since its opening; and what was the average number for male category C training prisons over the same period. [20920]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking how many attempted escapes have been recorded at Buckley Hall prison since its opening; and the average number of attempted escapes for male category C training prisons for the same period.

The number of attempted escape incidents reported from Buckley Hall prison since its opening on 14 December 1994 to 29 February 1996 is three.

The average number of attempted escape incidents reported during that period for male category C prisons is 1.6.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (a) what is the average absenteeism rate among prison officers at Buckley Hall prison and (b) what is the average absenteeism rate amongst prison officers at male category C training prisons. [20923]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about average absenteeism rates among prison officers at Buckley Hall and male Category C training prisons.

Questions about staff issues at Buckley Hall prison are a matter for the contractors, Group 4, and I am unable to provide information about absenteeism at that establishment.

You also ask about absence rates per uniformed prison officer in male Category C training prisons. Information on sick absence (which accounts for virtually all absence form work apart from annual leave), is that, the average sick absence was eight days per officer during the period April 1995–February 1996. (These figures relate to basic grade prison officers, senior officers and principal officers).

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 11 March, Official Report, column 445, what steps are being taken to eradicate smuggling into Buckley Hall prison through items being thrown over the prison fence. [20924]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the steps being taken at Buckley Hall prison to eradicate smuggling through items being thrown over the prison's fence.

Every effort is being made at Buckley Hall to eradicate smuggling through items being thrown over the prison fence, by prohibiting the access of prisoners to the most vulnerable sections and twice daily checking of these areas by staff.

Arrangements are being made for the installation of additional fencing at the most vulnerable points of the prison fence which, it is expected, will reduce the potential for this method of smuggling by 80 per cent. There will also be more stringent policing of other areas of fencing.

Consideration is also being given to the installation of external cameras so as to allow early warning to be given to the police in the event of any cause for concern arising.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have received authorised leave from Buckley Hall prison after protesting on the prison hospital's roof because of the denial of authorised leave. [21272]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners who have received authorised leave from Buckley Hall prison after protesting on the prison hospital's roof because of the denial of authorised leave.

One prisoner has been given authorised leave from Buckley Hall after a protest regarding the cancellation of a period of leave. The temporary release was granted to allow him to attend a job interview and was completed successfully.

Prison Cells

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the statutory minimum size of prison cells; [19333]

(2) what is the average cell size per inmate in prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement; [19334]

(3) what is the (a) average cell size and (b) current average number of prisoners per cell, in each prison in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [19335]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 7 March 1996]: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Questions about average cell size and average number of prisoners per cell in each prison in England and Wales and the statutory minimum size of prison cells.

Information regarding the size of cells is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

With regard to the number of prisoners per cell, the position at the end of January this year was that some 8,488 prisoners were housed two to a cell which was designed for one person. There were no instances of three prisoners sharing a single cell.

There is no statutory minimum size for existing prison cells, although Prison Service operating standards do lay down an ideal minimum size of 5.5 square metres. Section 14 of the Prisons Act 1952 requires cells to be certified as being fit as regards their size, lighting, heating, ventilation and fittings.

Football Matches

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the financial problems for association football clubs arising from the costs imposed by police services in respect of the attendance of police officers at games; and if he will make a statement. [20872]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 18 March 1996]: The taxpayer already foots the bill for policing outside football grounds as part of the duty of the police to keep the peace and prevent crime. It is right for those who benefit—the club and the supporters attending the match—to pay for police services inside grounds.

Featherstone Prison (Drug Parties)

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will hold an inquiry into the making of a video showing drug parties in Featherstone prison, near Wolverhampton; and if he will make a statement. [21681]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Warren Hawksley, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about a video purporting to show a drugs party in Featherstone.

The governor of Featherstone will conduct a full investigation into the circumstances surrounding this incident once a copy of the video has been received. Any action to be taken will depend on the conclusions of the investigations now taking place.

Fine Defaulters

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average weekly cost of keeping a fine defaulter in prison. [21115]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mrs. Anne Campbell, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the average weekly cost of keeping a fine defaulter in prison.

Information on the cost of prisoners according to their type of offence is not collected centrally. The average weekly net operating cost of a prison place in 1994–95 was £458.

Mrs. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently held in prison on convictions relating to fine defaults. [21113]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mrs. Anne Campbell, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking, how many people are currently held in prison on convictions relating to fine defaults.

The latest available information is for 31 January 1996. On that date there were 358 persons in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales for non-payment of a fine.

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if prisoners from Doncaster prison are eligible for unaccompanied visits to (a) Doncaster and (b) surrounding towns after good behaviour; and if he will make a statement; [21005]

(2) what provision is available in Doncaster prison for (a) therapeutic and (b) psychological treatment when inmates receive positive results to tests for transmissible diseases; and if he will make a statement; [20991]

(3) what regular medical checks prisoners in Doncaster prison receive; what systematic checks are carried out for transmissible diseases; and if he will make a statement; [20999]

(4) what steps are taken to prevent discrimination against prisoners in Doncaster prison with specific health problems; and if he will make a statement; [20993]

(5) what percentage of the annual budget for Doncaster prison is designated for health care; and if he will make a statement; [21002]

(6) how many (a) nurses and (b) doctors are employed in Doncaster prison; and if he will make a statement; [20992]

(7) what mechanisms exist in Doncaster prison relating to the prevention of (a) transmissible or (b) contagious diseases (i) in general and (ii) in respect of specific outbreaks; and if he will make a statement; [21001]

(8) how many prisoners in Doncaster prison are currently recorded as being terminally ill; if he will list the illnesses diagnosed; and if he will make a statement; [20990]

(9) what provisions are made for those prisoners in Doncaster prison known to be terminally ill; and if he will make a statement; [20994]

(10) what steps are taken to ensure the confidentiality checks on prisoners in Doncaster prison, with particular reference to cases involving transmissible diseases; and if he will make a statement; [20978]

(11) how many prisoners have died in Doncaster prison since it opened; and if he will list the figures where the cause of death was (a) self-inflicted, (b) accidental, (c) murder, (d) disease, (e) AIDS, (f) tuberculosis, (g) cancer and (h) vascular and heart disease. [21004]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about unaccompanied visits for prisoners and medical matters at Doncaster prison.

No prisoners from Doncaster are eligible for unaccompanied visits to Doncaster or any other towns in the area.

Four prisoners have died within Doncaster since the prison opened. Two inquests have been held, one of which recorded a verdict of death from natural causes and one a verdict of death by suicide. In addition, two have died in outside hospital, one from natural causes and one suicide. All prisoners are given a physical and mental health check on reception. Prisoners who are identified with pre-existing conditions receive reviews as clinically indicated. All are asked about their experience of transmissible diseases. If clinically indicated, and the prisoner agrees, they undergo the appropriate tests.

Medical confidentiality is of paramount importance at Doncaster and helps reduce the chance of discrimination against any prisoner on the grounds of health. All medical information on prisoners is kept within the Health Care Centre and is provided to nobody except authorized staff. With regard to transmissible diseases, health promotion posters and literature are displayed freely throughout the prison. Doncaster has also had a contagion control policy in preparation for the outbreak of any contagious disease. This policy allows a number of internal and external resources to be deployed in the event of specific outbreaks. The prison has registered mental nurses with counselling skills, as well as qualified counsellors and psychologists to assist prisoners who receive positive results having been tested for a transmissible disease.

There are currently no prisoners in Doncaster who are terminally ill. Should any prisoner be so diagnosed, an application can be made to the Area manager for release on compassionate grounds.

The contract for Doncaster prison specifies the health care requirements that the contractor is required to meet. Distinct services within the total operation are not broken down by price. The way these requirements are met and staffing details are matters for Premier Prison Service.

Prison Officers (Training)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the level of training received by prison officers at (a) Buckley Hall prison and (b) other male category C training prisons. [21054]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the level of training received by prison officers at (a) Buckley Hall prison and (b) in other male category C training prisons.

The contract for Buckley Hall prison specifies the level of staff training, both basic and continuing, which the contractor is required to meet.

The detail of how these requirements are fulfilled is a matter for Group 4.

All new prison officers joining other category C establishments will have received nine weeks training in both theoretical and practical skills.

Prisoners (Threats to Witnesses)

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last five years prisoners have telephoned or written from Her Majesty's prisons to witnesses in such a way that charges of perverting the course of justice or other charges relating to attempts to interfere with witnesses in criminal cases have resulted. [20726]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Mr. Mike O'Brien, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about prisoners who may have telephoned or written to witnesses in such a way that charges of perverting the course of justice or other charges have resulted in criminal cases.

Unfortunately this information is not available.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions prisoners have been disciplined in Her Majesty's prisons in each of the last five years as a result of complaints about letters or telephone calls by prisoners making threats to witnesses in their case. [20727]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Brian Landers to Mr. Mike O'Brien, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about prisoners who have been disciplined in the last five years as a result of complaints of threats to witnesses in their case.

Unfortunately this information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Competitive Tendering (Contracts)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by his Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21028]

Mr. Howard: The information requested is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, it is Home Office policy to buy all goods and services by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Purchases in excess of about £100,000 are subject to European Community competition procedures, as laid down in statutory instruments.

Prison Service (Medical Staff)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what controls (a) his Department and (b) the Prison Service has over medical staff who undertake work for them and are engaged in medical research; and if he will make a statement. [19953]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 7 March 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alastair Papps to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about controls on medical staff who are engaged in medical research.

I understand that there are no medical staff employed on medical research in the main Home Office.

Within the Prison Service all medical and health care research requires ethical approval, the consent of the governor of the prison and the free and informed consent of the prisoner concerned.

Such ethical approval is obtained either from the Prison Service Health Research Ethics Committee, which has an independent chairman and membership drawn from the independent Health Advisory Committee to the Prison Service and health care professionals from outside the Prison Service or the appropriate NHS committee.

Harry Duggan

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Harry Duggan, who is serving a life sentence, was allowed to attend his mother's funeral in the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [21516]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Max Madden, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question asking if Harry Duggan who is serving a life sentence, was allowed to attend his mother's funeral in the Republic of Ireland.

An application by Mr. Duggan to attend the funeral of his mother in the Republic of Ireland was carefully considered but refused for security and jurisdictional reasons.

Hewell Grange (Maintenance and Repair)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 8 March, Official Report, columns 411–12, what use Hewell Grange was put to when it was under Home Office responsibility before it was used as a prison; what maintenance and repairs were undertaken; and what condition the building was in when it was handed over to the Prison Service. [21443]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Andrew Faulds, dated 19 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the use Hewell Grange was put to when it was under Home Office responsibility before it was used as a prison; what maintenance and repairs were undertaken; and what condition the building was in when it was handed over to the Prison Service.

Hewell Grange has been used as an open prison for male adult offenders since 1991. Prior to that change of role, it was used as a Young Offenders Institution to accommodate young offenders in open conditions.

The building was acquired for use as a penal institution in 1947. There are no records of its condition at that time. A full range of maintenance work and repairs has been undertaken during its ownership by the Prison Service. Details are not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Chief Fire Officers

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when a reply will be sent to the hon. Member's letter of 13 February, ref. 3185/96, concerning chief fire officers. [21229]

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 18 March 1996]: My right hon. and noble Friend replied to the letter on 18 March.

Immigration (Pakistan)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the home country report on Pakistan is to be completed and placed in the Library; what steps are taken to ensure the accuracy and completeness of such reports; if such reports are normally made available to those representing appellants at immigration appeals; and if he will make a statement. [21517]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Our aim is to finalise the report and place it in the Library quite soon. It will also be made available to those concerned with the asylum appeals system. The report, like those on Nigeria and Ghana, will draw on all available, relevant sources of information, and will be updated as necessary.

Alcoholic Lemonade

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has commissioned regarding the consumption of alcoholic lemonades by under-age drinkers; and what representations he has received regarding (a) such studies and (b) the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic lemonades. [9462]

Mr. Maclean: Although no research has been commissioned by my Department into the consumption of alcoholic lemonades by under-age drinkers, concerns that these drinks may provide a temptation for children to start drinking have been expressed in letters from members of the public on general law and order issues. We welcome reports that the Portman group, set up by the eight leading

United Kingdom drinks companies to promote sensible drinking and reduce alcohol misuse, are considering a code of practice to its industry members on the use of names that include, for example, lemonade, cola or other soft drinks.

SCOTLAND

Computers

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list all cases since 1987 in which his Department has bought computer capacity from (a) other Departments and (b) the private sector, giving the value of each contract and the name of the private sector contractors. [19454]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since 1987, the Scottish Office has not purchased computer capacity from other Departments or the private sector to augment the Department's own computing capability. Payroll and superannuation processing services have been bought from other Departments, and these have included an element of computer processing.

Department	Amount £
Her Majesty's Treasury (Chessington Computer Centre—Payroll Services)	1,922,400
Ministry of Defence (Superannuation services)	115,700

In addition, from time to time, the Scottish Office has purchased other services which may have included some computer processing as part of the work undertaken but it is not possible to identify these services except at disproportionate cost.

Multi-storey Housing Blocks

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the total number of people living in multi-storey blocks of flats in Scotland. [21118]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information is not available in the form requested.

Local authorities in Scotland are estimated to have 51,000 dwellings in blocks of flats more than four storeys high.

Information on the number of households, by lowest floor level of accommodation, was published in the report of the General Register Office for Scotland on the 1991 census, a copy of which is available in the House Library.

Mr. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of blocks of multi-storey flats over 10 floors high in Scotland; and where they are located. [21119]

Mr. Robertson: The information is not available in the form requested.

The table provides information on the number of individual dwellings in blocks of flats of 15 or more storeys let by local authorities in Scotland.

Rented Housing

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the total number of houses in the rented sector in Scotland; and what was the figure in 1979. [21117]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The estimated number of rented houses in Scotland was, at December 1979, 1,283,000; and, at December 1994, 948,000. These figures cover both private and public sectors, and include housing associations.

Urban Environment

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is Scottish Natural Heritage's policy on the urban environment; and if he will make a statement. [21095]

Mr. Kynoch: On 30 November 1995, Scottish Natural Heritage published "Natural Heritage In and Around Settlements: A Framework for Action", which sets out the principles that guide SNH's activities throughout urban areas and other settlements in Scotland. I have asked for a copy to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

SNH supports many projects and initiatives in urban areas, including some £1.5 million per annum for projects in the countryside in and around towns programme.

Permitted Development Orders

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he proposes to ensure the accountability of planning decisions taken within the areas covered by the permitted development orders. [21041]

Mr. Kynoch: No such measures are necessary. There is only one permitted development order, the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) (Scotland) Order 1992, which covers the whole of Scotland. It grants a form of general planning permission, known as permitted development, for certain types of non-controversial development which would otherwise invariably be granted planning permission. These permitted development rights are subject to various limitations and conditions to protect amenity and the environment. Some classes of permitted development, that is for agricultural and forestry buildings, are subject to a prior approval procedure which gives planning authorities the opportunity to influence matters such as siting, design and external appearance.

Provided a person is satisfied that a proposed development is permitted development there is no need to apply to the planning authority for consent and no basis for addressing the accountability of decisions not before the authority.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many approaches his Department has had during the last five calendar years from local authorities seeking to amend the terms of permitted development orders; and on how many occasions his Department has responded positively to these requests. [21044]

Mr. Kynoch: The Department receives numerous approaches from local authorities, and others, suggesting changes to the permitted development order and other pieces of planning legislation. Like all planning legislation, the permitted development order is kept under regular review and any suggestions for amendment are taken into account. The Department responds to all such approaches explaining what action, if any is to be taken. No record is kept of the number of these approaches.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedures are used by his Department in considering whether to renew the terms of a permitted development order. [21043]

Mr. Kynoch: The Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) (Scotland) Order 1992 is a statutory instrument and so remains in force until it is amended or revoked by a subsequent statutory instrument. Thus, while there is no requirement to renew the order, it is kept under review and from time to time it is subject to amendment. Suggestions for change can arise from research, a policy change or ideas submitted by interested parties.

Any proposals to amend the order are normally subject to public consultation with planning authorities and a wide range of individuals and organisations representing developer, business, environmental and community interests before being implemented.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement listing the permitted development orders currently in force, the facilities these orders relate to, when they were initially enacted and when they were last reviewed by his Department. [21045]

Mr. Kynoch: There is only one order, the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) (Scotland) Order 1992. It presently covers 71 different classes of development, which would require too much space to list here. However, a copy of the order is available in the Library. The current order came into force on 13 March 1992 and, like all planning legislation, is subject to regular review. It has been amended on several occasions since then, most recently in February 1995.

Disabled Students

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which authority will be responsible from 1 April for paying the travel costs of college students who have disabilities; and if he will make a statement. [21099]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Travel costs for college students with disabilities are paid through bursaries or the students awards scheme for those studying on higher education level courses.

From 1 April 1996, responsibility for bursaries will transfer from local authorities to the 43 incorporated further education colleges. Bursaries for further education students studying outwith the incorporated colleges will remain the responsibility of local authorities. The student awards agency for Scotland will continue to administer the student awards scheme.

Prisoners (Self-harm)

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many self-inflicted deaths have occurred in Scottish prisons in 1996 at the latest date for which figures are available by (a) age, (b) sex and (c) prison establishment; [21015]

(2) if he will make it his policy to collate figures on incidents of self-harm in Scottish prisons. [21016]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the questions relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Michael Connarty, dated 19 March 1996:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your questions relating to the number of self-inflicted deaths in Scottish prisons in 1996 and whether figures on incidents of self harm will be collated as a matter of policy.

There have been three deaths in custody in 1996 to date. The table below gives the information by age, sex and prison, as you requested. The cause of death in each case is subject to the findings of Fatal Accident Inquiries.

Age	Sex	Prison
54	Male	Edinburgh[1]
37	Male	Edinburgh
20	Male	Greenock

[1]A Fatal Accident Inquiry into this death is due to be held on 20 March 1996.

When you raised with me last year the question of maintaining statistics on incidents of self harm, I indicated that I would need to be sure it was a practical and useful proposition and that I would give it further thought. The Scottish Prison Service has commissioned Dr. Kevin Power and Dr. Joseph McElroy of the Department of Psychology at the University of Stirling to undertake a comprehensive evaluation of our Suicide Prevention Strategy. In addition, Professor Gunn of the Institute of Psychiatry has been commissioned to consider the appropriateness of the strategy against developments in the care of "at risk" people in other jurisdictions. Both these reports are expected in the near future and I shall consider your suggestion again in the light of these reports.

Ardrossan, Saltcoats and Stevenson Bypass

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current progress on the Ardrossan, Saltcoats and Stevenson bypass. [21046]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The position has not changed significantly since my answer to the hon. Member on 24 November 1995, Official Report, column 321. The revised design work is still on-going, and will be completed soon, allowing consideration to be given to publication of new draft standing orders this summer.

Special Needs Housing

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to increase the number of special needs houses in Scotland; and if he will make a statement; [21121]

(2) what is the total number of special needs houses in each parliamentary constituency in Scotland. [21120]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Community care is one of four national priorities for local housing authorities. It is also a priority for Scottish Homes.

Between 1979 and 1995, the stock of sheltered dwellings provided by public authorities and housing associations increased by more than fourfold to around 34,000. In 1995, these bodies also provided just over 7,900 dwellings for disabled people; just over 24,000 specially adapted houses; over 17,400 amenity houses; and over 23,000 dwellings with alarms. In addition, many community care users live in mainstream housing with suitable support services and a number are in private provision.

A breakdown of the total numbers of such dwellings by parliamentary constituency is not available.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people received into prison on remand during 1994 were (a) acquitted, (b) freed at court, (c) sentenced to non-custodial sentence and (d) sentenced to a term of imprisonment (i) in total and (ii) by gender. [21017]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Scottish Natural Heritage Projects

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total amounts spent by Scottish Natural Heritage in each of the last three years on projects in each constituency in Scotland. [21096]

Mr. Kynoch: The information requested is not held in the form required. Details of Scottish Natural Heritage's annual expenditure are set out in its annual reports, copies of which are lodged in the Library of the House of Commons.

Competitive Tendering (Contracts)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by his Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21035]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office and its executive agencies follow Government policy that goods and services should be acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Formal competitive tendering procedures are normally used for all purchases over £10,000 in value. Details of the value and numbers of all contracts placed could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Scottish Homes

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will announce the name of the new chairperson of Scottish Homes; and if he will make a statement. [21098]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: My right hon. Friend expects to make an announcement shortly.

Population Statistics

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the total numbers of people who are (a) unemployed, (b) old age pensioners, (c) in receipt of benefits, (d) under 16 years of age, (e) on low incomes, (f) living in poverty and (g) homeless in each of the new parliamentary constituencies in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [21102]

Mr. Kynoch: The information requested is not available.

Roads

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was spent by the Scottish Office on (a) construction and improvement of trunk roads and (b) grants to local authorities for construction and improvement of other roads in Scotland at outturn prices in each year from 1975 to 1995. [19306]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 March 1996]: The information required is set out in the table for 1975–76 to 1994–95. Only expenditure on grants to local authorities for specific schemes is included. Grant aid to the majority of local authorities roads construction and improvement activity is subsumed within revenue support grant. Information for grants to local authorities for specific schemes from 1975–76 to 1983–84 for roads could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

£ million

Year	Net capital expenditure on trunk roads[1]	Grants to local authorities for roads[2]
1975–76	43	—
1976–77	44	—
1977–78	62	—
1978–79	65	—
1979–80	74	—
1980–81	81	—
1981–82	88	—

1990–91	172	2
1991–92	173	1
1992–93	196	2
1994–95	208	2

[1] Includes expenditure on construction and improvement, structural repairs and other capital grants on trunk road projects. Figures taken from "Scottish Transport Statistics" Bulletins.
[2] Includes grants to assisted areas for access roads under the Industrial Development Act 1982 and specific grants under section 3 of the Roads (Scotland) Act 1984. Roads and transport capital consent allocations are excluded.

Fox Fur Farms

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many fox fur farms there are in each county of Scotland. [21375]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: There are no fox fur farms in operation in Scotland.

Municipal Farms

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each current region and district council in Scotland (a) the number, (b) the size and (c) the market value of each farm owned by the council or on its behalf; and which are planned to be sold (i) before and (ii) after local government reorganisation. [21201]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mink Farms

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many licences were issued for mink farms in each county of Scotland in each of the last five years. [21374]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The numbers of licensed mink farms are as set out in the table. No licences have been issued since 1993.

Region	1991	1992	1993
Grampian	1	1	1
Strathclyde	1	1	—

Firearms

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of gun clubs in each Scottish local government district, the total number of weapons held in each and the total membership in each for each year since 1985. [21715]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are currently 247 gun clubs in Scotland approved by the Scottish Office under section 15 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988. More detailed information about these clubs is not available centrally, but I am arranging for it to be collected and made available to the inquiry to be held by Lord Cullen.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of firearms certificates (a) which are issued for new applications, (b) which are renewals and (c) which are valid for more than one year for each year since 1985. [21708]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

	New certificates	Renewals[1]
1985	3,167	[2]—
1986	3,391	10,200
1987	3,223	9,800
1988	3,307	9,900
1989	2,669	10,100
1990	2,697	8,700
1991	1,850	8,400
1992	1,851	8,300
1993	1,770	8,500
1994	1,991	9,200

[1] The renewals figures have been estimated centrally to take account of forces unable to provide this information.
[2] Not collected.

New firearm certificates granted prior to 1995 were initially made valid for three years and could be renewed after this time for further three-year periods. Since the Firearms (Period of Certificate) Order 1994 came into effect on 1 January 1995, the order has extended the life of all firearm certificates granted or renewed after that date to five years.

WALES

Fire Services

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will review his allocation of funds to the fire services consequent on the formation of the new local government unitary authorities; and if he will make a statement. [20649]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Unitary authorities are responsible for funding fire authorities' revenue expenditure from their unhypothecated resources. The local government revenue settlement for 1996–97 was approved by the House of Commons on 8 February. Funding of fire authorities' capital expenditure is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary.

School Class Sizes

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what current restrictions apply in respect of class sizes in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [20729]

Mr. Richards: Class sizes are a matter for individual school governing bodies to consider in the light of their local statutory responsibilities and their perception of educational needs and priorities.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce in Wales (a) a scheme to provide on the NHS powered indoor/outdoor wheelchairs for severely disabled people and (b) a voucher scheme for the purchase of wheelchairs. [21256]

Mr. Richards: In the light of my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Health's recent announcement about the provision of powered wheelchairs and a wheelchair voucher scheme, we are currently examining the implications of introducing similar arrangements in Wales.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to introduce in Wales a similar scheme to that announced by the Government on 23 February for England to provide powered indoor and outdoor wheelchairs for the severely disabled and financial aid for wheelchair users; and if he will make a statement. [21302]

Mr. Hague: I am currently examining the implications of introducing similar arrangements in Wales.

Nursery Vouchers Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit St. Anthony's county primary school, Saltrey Ferry and Broughton county primary school to meet teachers, parents and governors to discuss the voucher scheme; and if he will make a statement. [21131]

Mr. Richards: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I has any plans to do so. Each primary and nursery school in Wales has had a copy of a letter from the Welsh Office giving details of the scheme and addressing some common misunderstandings. In addition, I am sending a letter to all schools in Clwyd to set right misleading comments I have seen in material from the Clwyd Federation of Primary Headteachers.

Smoking (Children)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the proportion of 15-year-old (a) girls and (b) boys who smoke regularly. [21126]

Mr. Richards: The Welsh youth health survey undertaken by Health Promotion Wales shows that, in 1994, the latest year for which it has figures, the percentages were as follows:

	Daily	Weekly
Girls	20.7	25.1
Boys	15.5	17.8

Nurses

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the British Medical Association about the work load of nurses. [21122]

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend has recently discussed with representatives of the BMA the increasing work load of hospital services and its implication for staffing as a whole.

Pupil-teacher Ratios

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the current pupil-teacher ratios in Wales for each (a) grant-maintained and (b) non-grant-maintained primary schools; and if he will make a statement; [20985]

(2) if he will list the current pupil-teacher ratios in Wales for each of the (a) grant-maintained and (b) non-grant-maintained secondary school; and if he will make a statement. [20984]

Mr. Richards: Information from which pupil-teacher ratios for individual schools may be calculated is collected centrally only for the purpose of compiling statistical aggregates. PTRs for individual schools are not estimated on a regular basis, and their accuracy is not confirmed with the schools. The calculation and checking of these ratios would therefore involve disproportionate cost.

Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research

Mr. Llywd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations his Department has recently received from the Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research; and if he will make a statement. [20996]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Departmental Equipment and Furniture

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the cost and number of items of equipment and furniture that (a) have been stolen and (b) are otherwise unaccounted for from his Department and its agencies in each of the last five years, itemising any items valued at £5,000 or over, and indicating information technology material separately. [21087]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Makerfield (Mr. McCartney) on 7 March 1996, Official Report, column 362.

Departmental Report

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 March, Official Report, column 628, if he will give the date of publication of the departmental report in each year since 1990. [21399]

Mr. Hague: The departmental report has been published only since 1991. Publication dates from 1991 to 1995 were as follows: 15 February 1991; 14 February 1992; 15 February 1993; 10 March 1994; 9 March 1996.

Welsh National Opera

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received and what consultations he has undertaken on the provision of a permanent home for the Welsh National Opera company. [21428]

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Mr. Hague: I have received a number of representations on the proposed Cardiff bay opera house. While I have not instigated any consultations on the matter, the subject was raised with me at three meetings.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning the outcome of the meeting convened by the Institute of Welsh Affairs on 8 March; what plans he has received for expenditure (a) by the corporation and (b) grant aided by the corporation in relation to the proposal for a large-scale lyric theatre in Cardiff bay; and if he will make a statement. [21427]

Mr. Hague: I have discussed with the chairman the outcome of the meeting convened by the Institute of Welsh Affairs on 8 March. I have received no plans for expenditure by Cardiff Bay development corporation on the construction of a lyric theatre in Cardiff bay.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the out-turn figure for expenditure on (a) administration and (b) the architectural design competition of the Cardiff bay opera house trust from his departments grant in aid to the Cardiff Bay development corporation in 1994–95; and what estimate he has made for the same categories for the year 1995–96. [21425]

Mr. Hague: Financial contributions by Cardiff Bay development corporation towards meeting the cost of administration of the Cardiff bay opera house trust and the architectural design competition are operational matters for the corporation. I have asked the chief executive of the corporation to respond and I shall arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Viticulture

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the proportion of the agricultural land area of Wales which is suitable for viticulture; and if he will make a statement. [21308]

Mr. Hague: No assessment has been made.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number and acreage of commercial vineyards in Wales. [21309]

Mr. Hague: The latest data from the Wine Standards Board show 18 commercial vineyards in Wales totalling 23 hectares.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what grants are available to livestock and arable farmers in Wales to convert their holdings to viticulture. [21317]

Mr. Hague: None.

Pembrokeshire NHS Trust

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he plans to publish the final report by Coopers and Lybrand into the circumstances leading up to and the financial implications of the departure of the former chief executive of Pembrokeshire NHS trust. [21426]

Mr. Richards: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I have him on 15 January 1996, Official Report, column 385.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he plans to make in the division of responsibilities between himself and his junior Ministers; and if he will make a statement. [21303]

Mr. Hague: I have overall responsibility for all policy issues within the Welsh Office. I have recently made one change to my junior Minister's duties. Mr. Jones has assumed responsibility for all rural and agricultural matters as set out in the rural White Paper.

EstateCare (Privatisation)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 559, what was the date of the item of correspondence between his Department and the Welsh Health Common Services Authority which would most accurately fit the description of a decision letter concerning the privatisation of the EstateCare Group of the authority. [21307]

Mr. Hague: My officials wrote to the Welsh Health Common Services Authority on 16 August 1995.

Departmental Staff (Location)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the geographical location of the place of work of all civil servants within the Welsh Office. [21679]

Mr. Hague: Welsh Office—excluding Cadw—staff work from the following locations: London; Cardiff; Caernarfon; Carmarthen; Llandrindod Wells; Lampeter; Colwyn Bay; Haverfordwest; Milford Haven; Dolgellau; Swansea; Newtown; Brecon; Aberystwyth; Ruthin; Holyhead; Newport; Gwent and Conwy.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Fraud

14. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to tackle fraudulent social security claims. [19712]

Mr. Heald: Our strategy, including the additional measures announced by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Social Security on 5 March, Official Report, columns 164–68, is set to save the taxpayer £1.5 billion next year.

18. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what incentives he is giving local authorities to combat fraud. [19716]

Mr. Heald: Local authorities are rewarded for successfully detecting housing benefit and council tax benefit fraud through the anti-fraud financial incentive scheme. The scheme allows authorities to earn additional cash subsidy through successful detection of fraud, as measured against their weighted share of a national threshold. I am stepping up the incentives by ear-marking £8 million for challenge funding to encourage innovation in fighting fraud, strengthening the financial regime by providing higher rates of return for better performing authorities, and increasing the penalties for those which are failing to tackle fraud seriously.

20. Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have been prosecuted as a result of Operation Rattle. [19718]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To date, there have not been any prosecutions as a result of Operation Rattle which was launched in November 1995.

Pensioner Incomes

15. Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to introduce a guaranteed minimum income for pensioners above the current income support levels; and if he will make a statement. [19713]

Mr. Heald: We have no plans to introduce a guaranteed minimum income which would have the effect of extending means-testing to all pensioners.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of pensioners who have an income of less than 20 per cent. of average male earnings. [19710]

Mr. Heald: In 1993, there were around 650,000 pensioner households with an income below that level.

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioners are in the least well off fifth of the population; and what the figure was in 1979. [19885]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table.

Percentages of pensioners in the bottom 20 per cent. of the overall United Kingdom income distribution

Percentages

	Before housing costs	After housing costs
1979	47	46

1. The information in the tables is derived from the 1979 and 1992–93 households below average income datasets. 1992–93 is the latest date for which information is available. Figures for 1992–93 are for two calendar years data combined.
2. Figures are based on the standard households below average income definition of income—weekly household disposable income adjusted for household size and composition (equivalised). These particular results are especially sensitive to the choice of equivalence scale. For example, results before housing costs vary between 32 per cent. and 54 per cent. in 1979, and 19 per cent. to 30 per cent. in 1992–93. However, results present a similar picture of changes over time, regardless of which particular equivalence scale is used. Further information on equivalisation and tests for sensitivity to choice of equivalence scale is given in Appendix 4 of households below average income 1979 to 1992–93.
3. All estimates are subject to sampling error.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners in Scotland (a) are dependent on income support and (b) have an income less than £10 above income support levels. [20067]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Pensioners are defined as men aged 65 and over and women aged 60 and over. The number of pensioners in Scotland who are dependent on income support is 176,000, as at May 1995. This figure has been rounded to the nearest thousand and it represents customers and partners over pension age who are dependent on income support.

Information on the number of pensioners who have income less than £10 above the income support levels is not collated.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the proportion of pensioner's income taken up by (a) housing costs and (b) council tax, broken down by (i) quintile and (ii) region. [20013]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Estimated proportion of income spent on housing costs and council tax

Percentage

	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4	Q5
Pensioner couple
Housing costs	13	15	10	5	3
Council tax	6	5	4	3	2
Single pensioner
Housing costs	17	21	27	20	7
Council tax	8	5	5	4	2
All pensioners
Housing costs	15	18	21	11	5
Council tax	7	5	5	4	2

Notes:
1. Reliable data for a breakdown by region (using the 12 standard regions) cannot be given due to limited sample size.
2. The data have been separated into information on single pensioners, pensioner couples and all pensioner benefit units. A pensioner benefit unit is defined as a single person over state pension age or a couple where the husband, or head, is over state pension age.
3. The figures are the estimated percentages, given to the nearest percentile, of the proportion of unequivalised net income taken up by housing costs and council tax liability for single pensioners, pensioner couples and all pensioner benefit units.

Source:
Pensioners' income series 1993, based on 1993 family expenditure survey.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the change in the mean income of pensioners in (a) the lowest and (b) the highest quintile in each region of the United Kingdom since 1979. [20218]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested.

For the UK as a whole, the estimated mean income of the lowest quintile of pensioner benefit units has risen by 21 per cent. in real terms since 1979. For the highest income quintile this figure is 68 per cent.

Notes:
1. There is no information available on a regional basis due to the limited sample size.
2. Pensioner benefit units are defined as a single person over state pension age or a couple where the husband, or head, is over state pension age.

Benefit Recipients (Newham)

16. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many individuals in the London borough of Newham are in receipt of social security benefits. [19714]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The available information on locally paid benefits is set out in the table:

	Caseloads	Counts taken
London borough of Newham area:
Housing benefit	39,640	August 1995
Council tax benefit	33,460	August 1995
Unemployed claimants signing on	17,368	January 1996
Benefits Agency Newham district area:
Income support	50,018	November 1995
Incapacity benefit	7,311	January 1996
Maternity allowance	124	January 1996
Severe disablement allowance	850	January 1996

Notes:
1. Information on the numbers receiving centrally paid pensions and benefits is not available.
2. Some individuals will be in receipt of more than one benefit.
3. Unemployed claimants includes those on income support, unemployment benefit and those signing on for credits only.

Low-Income Families

19. Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to ensure that the benefit system assists the families on the lowest incomes. [19717]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The Department maintains a comprehensive system of income-related benefits which are effective in focusing help on low-income families. Some 85 per cent. of income-related benefit expenditure goes to households in the bottom 40 per cent. of the income distribution and around a fifth of all social security expenditure goes to families with children.

Debt Recovery Scheme

21. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which areas have been chosen as pilots for the privatised debt recovery scheme. [19719]

Mr. Roger Evans: The six areas are the north central and west Scotland, Wales, Merseyside, Tyne Tees, Chilterns, south London and West Sussex.

The contractors will also deal with 600 cases for centrally administered benefits, which will be spread at random throughout Great Britain.

Retirement Pensions (Centenarians)

22. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of centenarians in receipt of retirement pensions breaking the figure down by sex and age, for each year after and including 100; and if he will make a statement. [19720]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table.

Age	Men	Women
100	530	2,420
101	240	1,800
102	230	1,150
103	70	850

Notes:
1. Figures include persons residing overseas.
2. "retirement pension" comprises contributory retirement pension, non-contributory retirement pension and graduated retirement benefit.

Identity Cards

23. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information will be stored on the proposed social security identity card. [19722]

Mr. Heald: We are looking to the successful private sector supplier to bear the risk of fraud. It is therefore up to them to propose any additional features. However, we expect the details to be held either on the face of the card or within its memory to be kept to the minimum required for the card to act as a secure key to access the payments database.

Child Support Agency

24. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of child support collected by the Child Support Agency represents a net income increase for parents with care. [19724]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: Of the total number of parents with care who currently have a full maintenance assessment, 13 per cent. are receiving family credit or disability working allowance, and 8 per cent. are non-benefit cases. Subject to the level of any previous maintenance agreement these cases represent a net income increase.

For parents with care receiving income support, maintenance is a portable income, giving greater flexibility and choice should they wish to return to work. The child maintenance bonus, due to be introduced from April 1997, will provide additional income at the point parents do return to work.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent changes there have been in (a) the working of the Child Support Agency and (b) its performance against targets; and what factors have led to them. [15766]

Mr. Mitchell: Recent changes to the agency's operations include: measures to improve the accuracy of its assessments through enhanced training and better targeted quality checks; the more efficient use of field office staff in the take-on of responsibility for pre-assessment work; improvements to the child support computer system; and the roll-out of computer support to the field offices.

These and other measures to simplify the child support scheme have enabled the agency to make considerable progress over the past year. Accuracy rates have improved significantly and currently exceed the 75 per cent. target. Further improvements are expected in the coming year. The agency has also collected and arranged maintenance of over £230 million so far this year and is on track to meet the 1995–96 target of £300 million. In January 1996, the agency collected maintenance in excess of £14 million which is more than that collected in the whole of its first year of operations. Payments of maintenance to parents with care have been made within 10 working days in 97 per cent. of cases against a target of 90 per cent.

The changes which have been made and the improvements in the agency's performance are the result of the Government's commitment to the success of the child support scheme and the determined efforts of staff across the agency to deliver the quality of service which the public is entitled to expect.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of staff (a) joining and (b) leaving the Child Support Agency for each of the last 24 months for which figures are available; what was the total number of employees of the agency in each month during that period; and if he will make a statement. [20619]

Mr. Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Alex Carlile, dated 18 March 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency staffing.

The total number of employees of the Agency from February 1995 to January 1996 inclusive is shown in the attached table. This also shows the fluctuations in staffing levels for each month in that period. Information on the numbers of staff leaving and joining the Agency each month during this period is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member shortly with the outstanding information.

The figures do not include information on staff within the Belfast Child Support Agency Centre. This is because staffing issues at this centre are the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Child Support Agency.

I hope this is helpful.

Staff-in-post for the period 1 February 1994 to 31 January 1996

Staff-in-post figures up to and including February 1995 are shown as full-time equivalents. They are shown as whole-time equivalents thereafter.

25. Mr Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average length of time taken to complete child support assessments. [19725]

Mr. Mitchell: The average time for making an assessment is around 30 weeks but in straightforward cases, where both parents co-operate, the agency aims to complete the process in six to 12 weeks.

Benefits Agency Medical Service

26. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current situation in respect of privatisation of the Benefits Agency medical service; and if he will make a statement. [19726]

Mr. Burt: The work of the Benefits Agency medical services with the exception of policy and adjudication functions, will be contracted out to the private sector.

A competitive process is to be undertaken to select the most appropriate companies to provide a medical service for the Benefits Agency. The process will commence shortly with the placement of an advertisement inviting expressions of interest from private sector companies. The award of contracts is scheduled for April 1997.

HGV Drivers (Eyesight Testing)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which social security benefits will be available for drivers of heavy good vehicles affected by the forthcoming European Community regulations on eyesight. [19886]

Mr. Roger Evans: Many of those adversely affected by the forthcoming EC directive on driving licences will find other employment, either with their existing employer or elsewhere. Others will have opportunities for retraining. Those remaining may be entitled to social security benefits, depending upon their circumstances.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the savings in respect of benefits no longer paid under the Social Security (Persons from Abroad) Miscellaneous Amendments Regulations 1996 to (a) asylum seekers with children, (b) persons housed under the homelessness legislation, and (c) other persons seeking asylum. [21597]

Mr. Roger Evans: The estimated savings in respect of benefits no longer paid to asylum seekers with children are £50 million in 1996–97, rising to £107 million in 1997–98. Estimated savings for those housed under the homelessness legislation are not available. Estimated savings for other persons seeking asylum are £68 million in 1996–97, rising to £147 million in 1997–98.

Notes:

1. Figures are based on income support and housing benefit administrative statistics for 1994, uprated in line with departmental forecasts and Home Office estimates of asylum applications.

2. Figures relate to income support, housing benefit, council tax benefit and jobseeker's allowance combined.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the savings to his Department as a result of the implementation of the Social Security (Persons from Abroad) Miscellaneous Amendments Regulations 1996 in respect of housing benefit no longer paid. [21598]

Mr. Evans: The estimated savings in respect of Housing Benefit no longer paid to asylum seekers are £60 million in 1996–97, rising to £130 million in 1997–98.

Note:

Figures are based on housing benefit administrative statistics for 1994, uprated in line with departmental forecasts and Home Office estimates of asylum applications.

Personal Pensions

27. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding the level at which age-related rebates for appropriate personal pensions should be set. [19728]

Mr. Heald: Representations from a range of interested parties were received in response to the Government Actuary's consultation paper issued in August 1995.

Benefit Replacement Ratios

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he holds on benefit replacement ratios in 1994–95; and if he will make a statement. [22056]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is in the table.

[1] Calculated for benefit units selected from FES data where the head works 30 hours or more a week. Excludes the self-employed and pensioners. Estimates are cumulative.
[2] Caseloads are rounded to the nearest 5,000 (subject to a margin error of 20,000). Proportions are rounded to the nearest 0.1 per cent., and any change of 0.5 percentage points is statistically significant.
[3] Estimates assume full receipt of benefit entitlement both in and out of work and are based on income from all sources after housing costs. Figures for 1990–91 and 1991–92 incorporate the effects of the community charge benefit and the independent taxation of husbands and wives.
[4] Estimates for 1985 make arbitrary allowance for travel-to-work costs. However the use of a single figure to represent such costs is inadequate, and survey evidence suggests that up to one in three employees may have no travel to work costs. For those reasons, estimates for 1980–90 onwards make no allowance for travel to work costs.
[5] Extrapolated from the 1982, 1983 and 1984 family expenditure survey.
[6] Extrapolated from the 1987, 1988 and 1989 family expenditure survey.
[9] Indicates case load less than 0.1 per cent.

This replaces the information published in the 1995 departmental report which unfortunately was in error as a result of a computer modelling problem.

State Retirement Pension

17. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost of allowing people to claim a full state pension from the age of 60 years. [19715]

Mr. Heald: The estimated cost of allowing people to claim a full state pension from the age of 60 is £15 billion in 2025 and £12 billion in 2035.

Notes

1. These costs are based on estimates of an equal state pension age of 65 published in "Pensions Bill 1994, Report by the Government Actuary on the Financial Provisions of the Bill on the National Insurance Fund" (December 1994 Cm 2714), and on estimates of an equal state pension age of 60 published in "Options for Equality in State Pension Age" (December 1991, Cm 1723). All estimates have updated to 1995–96 prices, and do not take account of changes to invalidity benefit and contracting-out since then.

2. The change in SPA is assumed to be implemented from 2010 to 2020.

3. Costs assume that the proportion of men who claim basic retirement pension at age 65 at present would claim at age 60 under the proposed scheme.

4. The baseline costs assume that state pension ages are equalised at 65 in 2020 in accordance with the provisions of the Pensions Act 1995.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost to the Exchequer of paying the state retirement pension on the day when the pensioner reaches pensionable age. [13142]

Mr. Heald: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley) on 23 October 1995, Official Report, columns 485-86. Unfortunately, there was a factual error in the reply. The correct information is as follows.

The estimated gross cost of paying state retirement pension from the day the pensioner reaches state pension age is £14 million.

This figure includes basic and additional pension and cases who are awarded after reaching minimum pension age.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people's national insurance contributions record leaves them without entitlement to a full retirement pension; and how many of these are (a) women below retirement age and (b) women above retirement age. [20736]

Mr. Heald: At 31 March 1995, there were 4,642,330 people over state pension age whose national insurance contributions record leaves them without entitlement to a full retirement pension. Of these, 4,449,500 were women. The information is not available for people under state pension age.

Child Support

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent changes have been made to the system of child support; and if he will make a statement. [17007]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: A number of changes have been made to the child support scheme over the past year. These include:

- an allowance in the formula for travel-to-work costs and provision to recognise existing property and capital settlements;
- a cap on maintenance assessments which restricts the amount an absent parent is assessed to pay to a maximum of 30 per cent. of net income;
- changes to streamline administration including simplifications in the review procedures and in the definitions of housing costs and earnings for the purposes of the maintenance assessment;
- provisions paving the way for the introduction of future changes which will allow for a departure from the formula assessment in prescribed circumstances, and for the payment of a child maintenance bonus to parents with care moving off benefit into work.

These changes have been made in the light of live running of the scheme in order to address the main areas of concern, avoid undue hardship for the parents involved and enable the Child Support Agency to operate more effectively.

Disability Living Allowance

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the extent to which hospitals are accumulating funds from the mobility component of the disability living allowance being received by patients. [16283]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: Departmental officials had discussions with a number of NHS trusts throughout Great Britain last summer. These suggest that this was a considerable problem in the past but is now rare.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many examinations for the all-work test of capacity have been scheduled but have not yet taken place in each of the 11 medical services centres; [20165]

(2) what proportion of people who have been examined for the all-work test since April 1995 are new claims; [20167]

(3) how many people have (a) failed to return the IB50 all-work test questionnaire and (b) failed to attend an examination for the all-work test in each month since April 1995 for each of the 11 medical services centres; [20175]

(4) how many people have been examined for the all-work test of incapacity (a) in total and (b) during each month since April 1995, for each of the 11 medical services centres. [20179]

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the format requested. At 31 January 1996, 319,449 incapacity benefit all-work test examinations had been performed. Available information for individual medical centres is given in the table.

Payments (Indian Sub-continent)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the value of the social security payments dispatched to the Indian sub-continent in each of the last 10 years. [19794]

Mr. Heald [holding answer 11 March 1996]: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Fraud Freeline

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what analysis his Department has made of those phone calls received under the pilot fraud referral freeline service Operation Speakeasy; and if he will make a statement. [20866]

Mr. Heald: Analysis of calls made to the pilot freephone fraud referral lines is currently being conducted. The results of the pilot are expected to be available at the end of March 1996.

HEALTH

Adverse Drug Reactions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the change in the rate of reporting by general practitioners via the yellow card system since 1 October 1995. [20065]

Mr. Malone: Suspected adverse drug reaction reports are received through the yellow card scheme from general practitioners, hospital doctors, dentists and coroners directly and via pharmaceutical companies. Between 1 October 1995 and 29 February 1996, 4,546 reports of suspected adverse drug reactions were received from general practitioners compared with 4,866 reports over the same period in 1994–95. The difference in number of reports is a consequence of the major campaign to immunise children with measles-rubella vaccine which was carried out in November 1994.

Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the proportion of drugs issued on prescription by general practitioners to which patients have an adverse reaction. [20886]

Mr. Malone: The Medicines Control Agency receives reports of suspected adverse reactions to licensed medicinal products via the yellow card scheme. A report of a suspected reaction does not necessarily mean that it was caused by the medicine. As the scheme is voluntary, not all adverse reactions are reported. Therefore an estimate of the proportion of drugs issued on prescription by general practitioners to which patients have an adverse reaction can not be made from the available data.

Pensions (Abatement Rules)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the abatement rules announced on 11 July 1991, Official Report, columns 425–26, apply to members of staff given service-related severance payments by an NHS trust and re-employed by a health authority in the same area; and if he will make a statement. [20387]

Mr. Malone: The abatement rules announced in 1991 generally still apply. National health service pensions are subject to abatement where an employee returns to NHS employment before age 60.

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those areas of executive action where he has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for his decision. [20540]

Mr. Horam: Comprehensive records are not kept in the form requested.

Adoption Bill

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the draft Adoption Bill. [20788]

Mr. Bowis: A draft of the proposed Adoption Bill will be issued shortly in the form of a consultation document.

Long-term Care

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will (a) introduce a statutory disregard of capital resources for those in need of long-term social and nursing care and (b) give a higher priority to the well being of this group; and if he will make a statement. [20656]

Mr. Bowis: The legislation and guidance for local authorities contained in the "Charging for Residential accommodation Guide" clearly state the amount of capital that must be disregarded for charging for residential accommodation. The development of services for older people—(the majority in this group)—has been and remains one of the Government's priority areas. The new capital limits being introduced from April will enable them to retain a minimum of £10,000 of their capital assets.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for new measures on long-term care. [19727]

Mr. Bowis: The Government will consult shortly on proposals to encourage people to make provision for long-term care, as announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Budget statement on 28 November 1995.

Residential Accommodation (Charges)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the final allocation in 1996–97 to Hereford and Worcester county council in respect of costs incurred as a result of the raising from 8 April of the capital limits for charges for residential accommodation. [20756]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 14 March 1996]: The final allocation for Hereford and Worcester will be £765,086.

Pharmacists

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average length of time it takes for his Department to pay pharmacists for their NHS contract work; [21111]

(2) what plans he has to shorten the time taken by his Department when paying pharmacists for their NHS contract work. [21112]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggars) on 12 December 1995, Official Report, column 580.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many increases there have been in the cost of NHS prescriptions since 1979. [21124]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 12 March, Official Report, column 776.

NHS Management

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines he has issued in respect of the performance-related element of the chief executives of NHS trusts, regional health authorities and district health authorities. [20856]

Mr. Malone: National health service trusts boards are accountable for the proper appointment, appraisal and remuneration of their senior executives and, as in all their functions, boards must have regard to the public service values of accountability, probity and openness enshrined in the codes of conduct and accountability issued to NHS boards in April 1994. The code of accountability requires all NHS boards to establish a remuneration and terms of service committee to exercise proper control of executive board member's remuneration.

For those staff employed on the national terms and conditions for general and senior managers, guidance has been issued periodically on performance-related pay in a series of health service guidelines, health circulars and personnel memoranda, copies of which are in the Library.

Medical Students

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the training of medical students. [20858]

Mr. Malone: Under the Medical Act 1983 the education committee of the General Medical Council has the statutory responsibility for determining the skills and knowledge required for the granting of primary medical qualifications in the United Kingdom.

General Practitioners

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the number of out-of-hours general practitioners co-operatives and the number of general practitioners included in these co-operatives; [20859]

(2) how many out-of-hours general practitioner co-operatives there were in each of the last five years. [20885]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners' premises are currently below minimum standards (i) by region and (ii) nationally. [20879]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Dulwich (Ms Jowell) on 30 January, Official Report, column 711.

Consultants (Accident and Emergency)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many accident and emergency consultants have been in post in each of the last five years. [20883]

Mr. Malone: The information for England is shown in the list.

1991: 220

1992: 240

Child Supervision

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce his decision following the recent consultation exercise on supervised activities and holiday play schemes used by children under eight years of age; and if he will make a statement. [20903]

Mr Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 18 March Official Report, column 324.

Temazepam

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what clinical guidelines have been issued on the prescribing of temazepam capsules as opposed to temazepam tablets. [21009]

Mr. Bowis: In October 1995, issue No. of the chief medical officer's update, issued to all doctors in England, notified a ban on the national health service prescribing by general practitioners of the capsule formulation of temazepam from 1 January 1996 and advised on measures taken to increase controls over temazepam generally. British National Formulary No. 31, March 1996, page 151, draws specific attention to the risks associated with the misuse of temazepam capsules. A copy of CMO's update and the British National Formulary have been placed in the Library. Temazepam tablets remain available to meet all clinical needs.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people died in each of the last five years from abuse of temazepam capsules. [21010]

Mr. Bowis: The number of deaths certified as due to abuse of temazepam—ICDs[1] 304.1, 304.7, 304.8. 305.4, 305.9—alone or with other drugs for the years 1990–94 in England and Wales is:

1991: 13

1992: 15

1994: 22

The available data do not differentiate between the different formulations of temazepam that may be available in any one year.

Note

[1] Internal Classification of Disease ninth revision.

Generic Prescriptions

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Heath what is the average percentage of generic prescriptions by (a) non-fundholding and (b) fundholding general practitioners. [20882]

Mr. Malone: The percentage of generic prescriptions written by non-fundholding general practitioners in England and dispensed in 1994–95 is 50.5 per cent. The equivalent figure for fundholding general practitioners is 55.3 per cent.

Notes

1. The data cover all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors, dispensing doctors, and prescriptions submitted by prescribing doctors for items personally administered in England.

2. The analyses are based on prescriptions written by GPs and dispensing doctors in England only, wherever they are dispensed.

Casualty Admissions

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many admissions to casualty departments there have been in each of the last five years. [20884]

Mr. Horam: The information is set out in table 4 of the statistical bulletin "NHS hospital activity statistics: England 1984 to 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library. This shows the number of attendances at accident and emergency departments in NHS hospitals.

Competitive Tendering (Contracts)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by his Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21033]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health and its agencies competitively tender for all their contracts.

The information requested is not available centrally.

Acute Psychiatric Beds

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many acute psychiatric beds are available (a) in total and (b) per head of population in the North West region. [21421]

Mr. Bowis: The information available centrally is shown in the table.

Average daily number of available short-stay beds—wards open 24 hours—NHS hospitals: North West region —mental illness 1994–95

Number of beds[1]	[2]Number of beds per 100,000
2,011	47.8

[1] Source of data: Department of Health KHO3 returns.
[2] Based on OPCS estimate of 4,206,500 as resident population.
1. Definition of short-stay: an element of the component of the ward classification intensity of care (psychiatric). Facilities for the mentally ill who are intended to stay less than one year.
2. The table excludes places in special hospitals and NHS secure wards, which are not defined in this way.
3. "Bed availability for England", a copy of which is in the Library, contains information by individual National Health Service providers, i.e., trusts, directly managed units and the special health authorities, with summary tables for England. Data are collected by broad ward classification rather than by clinical specialty and returns are made on a financial year basis. 1994–95 is the latest year for which data are available.

Life Expectancy

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the average life expectancy for (a) women and (b) men by health authority. [21667]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 15 February, Official Report, columns 686-87.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have died while on waiting lists in each of the last three years; and if he will indicate the treatment for which they were waiting. [21675]

Mr. Horam: Information is collected on removals from waiting lists but does not differentiate between the various reasons, which include death. Emergencies are always treated immediately and patients who need urgent treatment are given priority.

Residential Care (Capital Allowance)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional resources are being made available to local authorities to reflect the changes to the capital allowance for those in residential care. [19723]

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave my hon. Friend the Member for Worcester (Mr. Luff) on 5 March, Official Report, column 189.

Intensive Care

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average annual cost of providing an intensive care bed; and if he will provide a breakdown of the main costs involved. [21163]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many inquiries his Department has held into intensive treatment unit beds in each year since 1979; and if he will indicate their date. [21502]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health has commissioned three inquiries on intensive care since 1979. The "Study of Provision of Intensive Care in England, 1993" was published in January 1995.

An inquiry called "Investigation into the Neurosurgery Patient Transfers" was published in March 1995. It was jointly commissioned by the Department.

In addition, the Department contributed to the funding of a report of a multi-disciplinary working party on paediatric intensive care published by the British Paediatric Association in December 1993.

Copies of the documents are available in the Library.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those organisations which were short listed for the purchase of the headquarters in Harrogate of the former regional health authority. [21525]

Mr. Malone: Following pre-tender qualification, the companies invited to tender for the new headquarters of the Northern and Yorkshire regional office in Durham, which also included the requirement to purchase the former headquarters of the Yorkshire regional health authority in Harrogate, were:

Wickes Properties Ltd.

Grantchester Group plc

Durham County Council

Dysart Developments Ltd.

Doctors

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many medical doctors qualified in each year since 1970. [21485]

Mr. Malone: The information available relates to the number of degrees awarded in medicine and is collected by the higher education funding councils. This information is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to compensate local authorities for additional costs from the implementation of the Social Security (Persons from Abroad) Miscellaneous Amendments Regulations 1996 in respect of their statutory duties under the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 and Children Act 1989. [21594]

Mr. Bowis: On 11 January, Official Report, columns 331–65, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced that the Government proposed to assist local authorities with any unavoidable additional costs arising under the homelessness legislation or the Children Act 1989.

The Government have since decided that a special grant under section 88B of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 will cover 80 per cent. of social services authorities' unavoidable additional expenditure above a certain threshold.

The grant will be paid in arrears on the basis of evidence submitted by authorities. Threshold levels have yet to be determined.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 20 March 1996

TREASURY

Unclaimed Tax Relief

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his current estimate of the amount of unclaimed returnable tax on interest paid to non-taxpayer holders of savings in building societies and banks. [20270]

Mr. Jack: Our most recent estimate showed that approximately £500 million of tax was deducted from interest paid by banks and building societies between April 1991 and March 1995, that could be reclaimed, and remains unclaimed by account holders. In order to encourage savers to reclaim this money the Inland Revenue held a tax-back week last September. It told people paying too much tax on their savings how to claim tax back and attracted widespread media publicity.

Income Tax

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost or saving at current prices and assumptions would be of (a) a tax-free allowance of £10,000 to all income tax payers, (b) a flat rate income tax rate of 20 per cent. on the remainder of all incomes and (c) abolition of all other income tax allowances; and what the full-year tax saving would be of (a) and (b) for a person with income of (i) £20,000, (ii) £40,000, (iii) £80,000, (iv) £160,000 and (v) £400,000. [21438]

Mr. Jack: Available information was given in my answer to the hon. Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 7 February, Official Report, column 186.

The tax savings for individuals with the specified income levels would depend on their levels of allowances and reliefs as well as incomes.

Tax Loss (Unemployment)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average annual cost to the Treasury in lost taxes for every 100,000 additional persons unemployed. [21439]

Mr. Jack: No accurate estimate can be made of the cost to the Treasury in lost taxes for every 100,000 additional persons unemployed. Any such calculation is highly sensitive to the assumptions on which it would have to be based.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21459]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between the contractor or supplier and his employees, subject of course to any relevant legal requirements. Compliance with health and safety regulations is a legal requirement for the contractor or supplier, but the Treasury does remind suppliers of this in their terms and conditions of contract.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state (a) the name of the document and (b) the date and place of any speech made by members of Her Majesty's Government prior to 9 April 1992 which committed the current administration to acceptance of the principle of economic and monetary union as set out in the treaty on European Union. [21546]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 18 March 1996]: The treaty on European Union was signed in Maastricht on 7 February 1992 and came into force on 1 November 1993. Protocol No. 11, annexed to the EC treaty, and section 2 of the European Communities (Amendment) Act 1993 mean that the United Kingdom shall not be obliged or committed to move to the third stage of economic and monetary union without a separate decision to do so by the Government and Parliament. We will agree to take part in a single currency only if it is in our national interest to do so, given the circumstances at the time.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Servants (Justices of the Peace)

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what arrangements exist to give civil servants who are appointed justices of the peace leave of absence to carry out their judicial training and duties. [21380]

Mr. Freeman: The civil service management code gives Departments and agencies discretion to grant special leave for voluntary public service. There are no centrally prescribed limits to the amount of special leave that may be given to a civil servant who is appointed as a justice of the peace. Departments are aware of their obligation to comply with section 29 of part II of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21474]

Mr. Willetts: The Cabinet Office does not carry out checks on the wage rates paid by its contractors or suppliers. Terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between the contractor or supplier and his employees, subject to any relevant legal requirements.

All our contractors and suppliers are expected to comply with all legal requirements including the health and safety regulations.

HMSO

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will give details of the meetings he has had with representatives of the staff at HMSO about the Government's plans for the privatisation of HMSO; and if he will make a statement. [20655]

The Deputy Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is responsible for the sale of HMSO. He gave details of the meetings he has had with HMSO staff, in his answer to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Cunningham) on 4 December, Official Report, column 33. Since then, my right hon. Friend has held a further meeting with national and local trade union representatives.

The Government are committed to ensuring that staff are treated fairly during the privatisation of HMSO, and that their legal rights are fully respected. My colleagues and officials will maintain contact with staff throughout the process, and remain willing to hold further meetings as necessary.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. French) of 1 February, Official Report, columns 858–59, what is the Crown Prosecution Service's cash limit for 1995–96 after taking account of appropriations in aid. [21952]

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service's cash limits which I announced on 1 February did not take account of appropriations in aid. Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the Crown Prosecution Service's cash limit for class IX, vote 4, after taking account of appropriations in aid, will be increased from £229,673,000 to £231,173,000. This increase will be charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Upper Waiting Hall Exhibitions

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the United Kingdom coal industry to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [21974]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 8 July to Friday 12 July 1996.

Members (Training and Advice)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will make arrangements to provide training and advice to hon. Members on the handling of casework involving people who appear to be unbalanced or suspicious. [21962]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I will write to the hon. Member.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Doncaster Crown Court Building

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many times the former Doncaster Crown court building has been used for (a) judicial and (b) other purposes since its formal closure. [20664]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The question concerns a specific operational matter on which the chief executive of the Court Service is best placed to provide an answer and I have accordingly asked the chief executive to reply direct.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 20 March 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply to your Question about the use of the former Doncaster Crown Court building.

The Crown Court moved to its current address on 23 November 1989. Before that, it had rented courtrooms from the Doncaster Magistrates Court. Since the Crown Court moved to its new location, the space has reverted to use by the magistrates court.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is provided to help people who have fled from the former Yugoslavia to return to their country of origin; what discussions have taken place within (a) the EU and (b) the UN on developing a repatriation programme; and if he will make it his policy to give priority to the repatriation of skilled workers and smallholders. [21495]

Mr. Hanley: Following the Dayton agreement, the International Organisation for Migration, IOM, is collaborating with the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, UNHCR, in regular consultation with the EC and member states, on a comprehensive return, repatriation and re-development programme. It has been agreed that the emphasis should now be on the return of individuals with the necessary skills to assist in the general rehabilitation and reconstruction of the region. The UK is currently considering contributing a further grant towards this return of talent. The return of nationals for the former Yugoslavia who came to the UK under Government auspices will be assisted financially through the IOM.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Oil and Gas Exploration

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to evaluate the advantages of laying a submarine pipeline to the new Atlantic oil fields; whom he plans to consult in the near future on this issue; and if he will make a statement. [21200]

Mr. Page: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Energy has encouraged and continues to encourage, the oil and gas industry to consider this issue. At present, it is clear that recoverable reserves in the area are insufficient to justify the laying of a submarine pipeline. The position is under constant review.

Genetic Information

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to legislate for total genetic privacy; what studies he has made of American statutes to safeguard genetic read-outs and their applicability in the United Kingdom; what measures he proposes in respect of the insurance implications of genetic testing; and if he will make a statement. [21649]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Government policy on genetic privacy and the insurance implications of genetic testing were set out in Cm 3061, published on 10 January 1996. This responded to the Select Committee on Science and Technology's report on "Human Genetics: the Science and its Consequences", Session 1994–95, No. 41. Copies of both documents are available in the Library of the House.

The Government's response took account of developments overseas. As a result of differences in its basic health care system, however, direct parallels with the United States are difficult to draw.

In the light of further discussions with the Select Committee, the Government have said that they will consider whether there is a need for an additional trans-departmental mechanism to look at broader issues raised by human genetics. I have also met representatives of the Association of British Insurers to urge that their dialogue with geneticists and other interested parties continues in as open a manner as possible.

Nuclear Power (Research and Development)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the present level of expenditure on research and development into nuclear power; and what are the planned levels for 1996–97 and 1997–98. [21254]

Mr. Eggar: The DIT's provision for funding nuclear research and development is set out in the annual Supply estimates published each March by HM Treasury. The estimates give details for the present and coming financial years only. Drawimg on the details given in the Supply estimates published in March 1995, the total provision for DTI funded nuclear research and development for 1994–95 was £26,313,000 and for 1995–96 is £25,556,000. This includes provision for research and development work on safety and health, fusion, safeguards and also for research and development into decommissioning and radioactive waste management, which is listed separately in the estimates. Full details of nuclear research and development funding provision for 1996–97 will be published very shortly in the March 1996 Supply estimates. A similar level of funding for nuclear research and development is planned for 1997–98. These future plans were set out in "Trade and Industry 1995: the Government's expenditure plans for 1995–96 to 1997–98", which was published in March 1995, Cm 2804.

The majority of UK nuclear research and development into nuclear safety is carried out within a programme funded by the nuclear industry and co-ordinated by the Health and Safety Executive on behalf of the Health and Safety Commission. In 1995–96, the budget for this programme is £26,300,000. The budget for 1996–97 is expected to be at a similar level.

Grant Consultants

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration he is giving to a code of practice for grant consultants; and if he will make a statement. [20327]

Mr. Page: I support the idea of a code of practice for grant consultants, and welcome any private sector initiative that provides a commitment to raising standards and makes it easier for businesses to identify bona fide consultants. One small business organisation has approached me on the subject already.

Many information brokers in the UK have now adopted a European code of conduct known as EIRENE—European information researchers network—which lays down the basic principles of responsible research and information provision.

Iraq (Exports)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial assistance was provided by the Government for exports to Iraq during 1990–91. [21153]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Prior to the invasion of Kuwait in August 1990, the Export Credits Guarantee Department provided cover in 1990–91 for £112 million of UK exports to Iraq.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those areas of executive action where he has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for his decision. [20536]

Sir John Wheeler: In the absence of express statutory requirement within the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments, there is no general duty to give reasons for administrative decisions. However, as a matter of good administrative practice, including compliance with the code of practice on access to Government information, coupled with the fact that a failure to give reasons may provide grounds on which a decision may be challenged by judicial review, reasons are given where it is appropriate to do so.

Independent Tribunal Service

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the annual financial cost of the provision of appellant medical records for disability appeal tribunals run by the independent tribunal service, Northern Ireland. [20514]

Mr. Moss: The costs for the provision of appellant medical records for disability appeal tribunals are subsumed in the overall financial cost of the independent tribunal service and no separate records are maintained.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current financial cost of the independent tribunal service, Northern Ireland; what was the cost in each financial year between 1990 and 1995; and if he will provide a breakdown of costs. [20515]

Mr. Moss: A breakdown of costs which are directly attributable to the independent tribunal service is included in the accompanying table. It does not include certain centrally borne costs such as those for finance and personnel or printing and stationery.

Figures for 1990–91 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Civil Evidence Act 1995

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when section 10 of the Civil Evidence Act 1995 will come into effect in Northern Ireland. [20869]

Sir John Wheeler: It is expected that section 10 of the Civil Evidence Act 1995 will be brought into force in Northern Ireland on the same day as in England and Wales. No day has yet been appointed for this.

Competitive Tendering (Contracts)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by his Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21037]

Sir John Wheeler: The annual spend on goods and services following competitive tendering by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Office and their executive agencies in each of the last three financial years is:

1992–93: £280 million

1993–94: £231 million

1994–95: £236 million

Records of the precise number of contracts and their value are not held centrally. Such information could be gathered only at disproportionate cost given that a very large number of contractual arrangements are entered into annually.

Order in Council

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the individual costs of the last 10 completed consultation processes on proposed Orders in Council. [17115]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 28 February 1996]: The estimated costs of printing and postage associated with the last 10 completed consultation processes were:

Business Tenancies (NI) Order	1,445
Police (NI) Order	2,517
Gas (NI) Order	2,712
Road Traffic Offenders (NI) Order	3,362
Food Safety (Amendment) (NI) Order	570
Proceeds of Crime (NI) Order	1,161
Road Traffic (NI) Order	3,818
Street Works (NI) Order	3,803
Ombudsman (NI) Order and Commissioner of Complaints (NI) Order	4,041
Education (NI) Order	8,486

Staff costs are available only in respect of two consultation processes as follows:

Gas (NI) Order	500
Food Safety (Amendment) NI Order	130

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

China and Taiwan

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to discuss with the United States authorities the situation between China and Taiwan. [21642]

Mr. Hanley: We have been in regular and close contact with the Americans about the situation in the Taiwan straits.

South Africa

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent talks he has had with European Union member counterparts to help establish for South Africa a free trade agreement into the European Union; and what the next steps towards such an agreement will be. [21593]

Mr. David Davis: The UK is in the lead in pressing for liberalisation of trade between the EU and South Africa. The negotiation mandate for an EU-South Africa free trade area was discussed at the Foreign Affairs Councils on 4 December, 29 January and 26 February. It will be on the agenda again at the Foreign Affairs Council on 25 to 26 March, when the UK will urge partners to agree a mandate which is compatible with World Trade Organisation rules and negotiable with the South Africans.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21471]

Mr. Hanley: Terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between the contractor or supplier and his employees, subject to any relevant legal requirements. Compliance with health and safety regulations is a legal requirement for the contractor or supplier.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [21276]

Mr. Hanley: None.

Hong Kong

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the annual report on Hong Kong will be laid before Parliament. [21986]

Mr. Hanley: The report is being published and laid before Parliament today. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

European Parliament

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated cost of the European Parliament in 1996; and what were the figures in each of the last five years. [20988]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

The information is provided in the table.

Cost of the European Parliament

	Ecu	£
1991	465,800,000	326,099,130
1992	528,100,000	387,738,610
1993	660,300,000	514,052,160
1994	646,300,000	500,077,370
1995	843,321,000	690,624,020
1996	802,739,800	680,115,050

1. The figures for 1991–94 are outturn figures and have been taken from the relevant Court of Auditors report. The figures for 1995 and 1996 are taken from the adopted European Community Budgets for those years.

2. The figures for 1991–95 have been converted from ecu to sterling using the annual average exchange rate[1]. For 1996 the conversion rate used is that prevailing on the last working day of the last month of the previous year—29 December 1995—of £1=1.1803 ecu.

[1] 1991 £1=1.4284 ecu. 1992 £1=1.3620 ecu. 1993 £1=1.2845 ecu. 1994 £1=1.2924 ecu. 1995 £1=1.2211 ecu.

WALES

Community Care

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning care in the community in Wales. [21128]

Mr. Richards: Many more people are now being cared for in their own homes or in a homely environment in their local community. On the basis of figures supplied by the local authorities, in 1993–94 local authorities assessed 51,000 people for community care services and an estimated 30,000 were provided with care to help them stay in their own homes. In 1994–95 these increased to 66,000 and 32,000 respectively.

The unitary authorities will be even better placed to co-ordinate the range of care and support that vulnerable people need.

Competitive Tendering (Contracts)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by his Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21036]

Mr. Hague: All contracts for goods or services over £1,000 are subject to competitive tendering. Information in the form requested is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

General Practitioners

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the supply of GPs in Wales. [21127]

Mr. Richards: The number of GPs in Wales is 1,710—28 per cent. more than in 1979, when it was 1,339. The average list size continues to fall—from 2,133 in 1979 to 1,744 in 1995.

The Medical Practices Committee survey of GP recruitment last year concluded that there is a downward trend in the number of applicants for vacancies, but that there are still sufficient numbers for appointments to be made.

The Welsh Office is keeping a close eye on the situation, and has taken soundings from family health services authorities about the situation in their areas. These, together with the MPC findings, show that there is no overall shortage of GPs at national level although there are pockets of difficulty in certain places. The Welsh Office is exploring with the service ways in which we may alleviate these problems.

Firlands Training Ltd., Whitchurch

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those training and enterprise councils which have contracts with Firlands Training Ltd. The Firs, Whitchurch near Aylesbury under (a) the youth training scheme and (b) training for work. [21499]

Mr. Hague: Contracts between training and enterprise councils and their training providers are matters for the parties concerned. Information on such contracts is not collected centrally.

Local Government Consultation Paper

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to publish his consultation paper on the relationship between the Welsh Office and local government. [22346]

Mr. Hague: I have published the paper today and placed copies in the Library of the House.

Wales Youth Agency

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the outcome of the financial management and policy review of the Wales Youth Agency. [22347]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: A summary of the report's recommendations, together with the Department's response in the form of an action plan, has today been placed in the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners' Brains

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Frederick West's brain was removed from his body; and if he will make a statement. [20252]

Mr. Sackville: I understand that Mr. West's body was subjected to a routine post mortem. The brain was removed in the course of the post mortem and returned to the body following examination.

Alcoholic Lemonade

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the question from the hon. Member for Taunton for answer on 15 January about alcoholic lemonade. [21008]

Mr. Maclean: I replied to the question from the hon. Member on 19 March.

Betting and Gaming (Deregulation)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans Her Majesty's Government have to modify, deregulate or amend the law relating to betting and gaming; and if he will state the principal statutes and regulations which would be involved. [21535]

Mr. Kirkhope: Our on-going review of the controls on gambling as part of the Government's deregulation initiative has resulted in a number of proposals to amend the law on betting and gaming.

Betting Licensing

On 31 January last year, we issued a consultation paper on proposals for relaxations in the law on the licensing of bookmakers, betting offices and greyhound tracks. For details of our proposals, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. and learned Member for Burton (Sir I. Lawrence) on 31 January 1995, Official Report, column 556.

The consultation process has been completed and we are currently considering the responses received. We hope to bring before this House later this year a draft order under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 to amend the Betting, Gaming and Lotteries Act 1963.

Gaming Machines and Betting Office Facilities

On 11 December last year, we brought before this House a draft order under the 1994 Act containing proposals to introduce an all-cash amusement-with-prizes machine in adult premises; increase the numbers of jackpot machines allowed in casinos, bingo clubs, and members' clubs; and extend the range of facilities in betting offices.

This order has been under scrutiny by the Deregulation Committee of this House, which has recommended some minor amendments, and in another place by the Select Committee on the Scrutiny of Delegated Powers. We shall be submitting a revised order shortly and we expect that the changes to the 1963 Act and the Gaming Act 1968 will be implemented by the summer.

Casinos, Bingo and Advertising

On 27 February, we issued a consultation paper on proposals for relaxations in the law on casinos, licensed bingo clubs and the advertising of commercial gambling. Subject to this consultation, we will bring forward orders under the 1994 Act to amend the 1963 and 1968 Acts. For details of our proposals, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Harrogate (Mr. Banks) on 27 February 1996, Official Report, columns 518–19.

Pools

We are also actively considering the scope for further deregulation of the pools industry. We hope to issue a consultation paper later this year.

Children (Former Yugoslavia)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children from the former Yugoslavia entered the United Kingdom in each year since 1991; how many of those children were not accompanied by parents or adult relatives; and how many children from the former Yugoslavia have (a) applied for and (b) been granted (i) asylum and (ii) exceptional leave to remain. [21494]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information on the total number of children given leave to enter the United Kingdom is not available, as only those with a settlement entry clearance are identified in the statistics.

Information on the number of unaccompanied children from the former Yugoslavia who applied for asylum on arrival in the United Kingdom, for the years 1992 to 1994, is given in table 2.4 of the Home Office Statistical Bulletin, "Asylum Statistics United Kingdom 1994", issue 15/95. A copy of this publication is available in the Library. Provisional information for 1995 indicates that nine unaccompanied children from the former Yugoslavia applied for asylum on arrival in the United Kingdom. Decisions on asylum applications from unaccompanied children are not separately recorded.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average cost of answering an (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary question from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each Session since 1989–90. [21779]

Mr. Howard: This Department does not collect the information in the form requested.

TRANSPORT

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those areas of Executive action where he has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for his decision. [20532]

Mr. Norris: Comprehensive records are not kept in the form requested. However, in accordance with the code of practice on access to Government information, the Department is committed generally to giving reasons for administrative decisions to those affected.

Road Schemes

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of public inquiries into major road schemes ruled against his Department over the last five years; and, of these public inquiry decisions, how many were subsequently endorsed by the Secretary of State. [20778]

Mr. Watts: Since 1 April 1991, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport have announced 139 decisions on trunk road schemes following public inquiries. In seven cases, the independent inspector recommended against making the orders for the scheme and the inspector's recommendation was endorsed by the Secretaries of State in each case. Over the period in question, significant modifications to satisfy objections were incorporated in 30 schemes, following inquiries where the inspector recommended in favour of the scheme.

London to Greenwich Transport

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 11 March 1996, Official Report, column 470, how many of the improved transport links between central London and Greenwich will be in operation by the beginning of 1999. [21437]

Mr. Norris: The Jubilee line extension is scheduled to open in early 1998 and the docklands light railway's Lewisham extension is scheduled to open in 1999. The expansion of river services on the Thames is a continuous process and a matter for the operators. We shall publish shortly our long-term proposals for new river crossings east of Tower bridge.

Warren Springs Research Laboratory

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many research projects sponsored by his Department were undertaken by the Warren Springs laboratory in the last three years. [21288]

Mr. Norris: Prior to the relocation of Warren Springs within the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, it performed extramural work for the Transport Research Laboratory on a number of projects relating to exhaust emissions. These are listed.

In-service emissions testing of catalyst equipped vehicles:

Project Manager: Tim Barlow

Work: Emissions test on 56 catalyst equipped cars

Completed: January 1993

Cost: about £43,000

Emissions modelling—feasibility study:

Project Manager: John Hickman

Work: Consultant services of Simon Eggleston and John Stedman (WSL)

Completed: Feasibility Study—1993, but see below

Since the absorption of Warren Springs Laboratory within the AEA, the following work has been carried out by it:

Emissions modelling:

Project Manager: John Hickman

Work: Consultant services of Simon Eggleston (NETCEN, Culham)

Completed: Ongoing

Emissions factors:

Project Manager: Tim Barlow

Work: Emission test on 10 vehicles over derived cycles using the WSL emissions test facility relocated at AEA Technology, Harwell

Completed: February 1996

Cost: about £18,000

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21460]

Mr. Norris: None. Terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between the contractor or supplier and his employees, subject of course to any relevant legal requirements. Compliance with health and safety regulations is a legal requirement for the contractor or supplier.

Emergency Towing Study Report

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will place in the Library a copy of the emergency towing study final report. [22263]

Mr. Norris: A copy has now been placed in the Library of the House.

Metropolitan Line

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the completion of the full refurbishment programme for the rolling stock units of the London Regional Transport Metropolitan services. [20796]

Mr. Norris: I understand that London Underground's programme for refurbishing the Metropolitan line trains is expected to be complete in October 1997.

Jubilee Line

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the new more frequent running schedules following the start of the extended Jubilee line service to commence. [20797]

Mr. Norris: The new running schedules, of up to 27 trains per hour, compared with the current 20 trains per hour, are expected to come into effect as soon as the extended Jubilee line opens. London Underground's aim is that this should be in early 1998.

Discretionary Purchase (Owen Case)

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications for discretionary purchase under section 246 (2A) of the Highways Act 1980 have been redetermined since the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the Owen case; and in how many such cases the redetermination has favoured the applicant. [21078]

Mr. Norris: Under the revised guidelines announced in July 1995, 161 cases have been redetermined. Of these, 24 decisions favoured the applicant.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the average cost of answering an (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary question from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each Session since 1989–90. [21790]

Mr. Norris: My Department does not collect the information requested.

Newbury Bypass

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost to the Highways Agency for constructing the proposed Newbury bypass on stilts over the Kennet and Lambourn valleys; and what is the estimated cost for building the bypass on an embankment over these two river valleys. [21599]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 19 March 1996]: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Tony Banks, dated 20 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the estimated cost of constructing the proposed Newbury Bypass on stilts over the Kennet and Lambourn Valleys and the estimated cost of building the Bypass on an embankment over these two river valleys.

The estimated costs of the embankment crossings that we propose to build over the Kennet and the Lambourn Rivers are £7.7m and £1.7m respectively. Were we to provide equivalent viaducts, the costs would be around £15m and £2.6m respectively.

The Inspector who held the 1988 Inquiry rejected the concept of viaducts; our proposals reflect his recommendations.

Egremont Bypass

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the compensation claim lodged by residents of Wyndham place, Egremont, following the construction of the Egremont bypass will be resolved. [21273]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 19 March 1996]: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Dr. John Cunningham, dated 20 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question asking when the compensation claim lodged by residents of Wyndham Place, Egremont, following construction of the Egremont Bypass will be resolved.

The Highways Agency is in contact with your constituents' Agents and the District Valuer, about the scope for further discussion of the compensation figures offered, with a view to re-opening negotiations. I am hopeful that this will result in a settlement acceptable to your constituents.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Starts

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new homes were started in the west midlands in 1995 in (a) the private sector and (b) the housing association sector; and what percentage changes these figures represent from 1994. [20914]

Mr. Clappison: It is estimated that in the west midlands region in 1995 there were 10,800 new private enterprise dwellings started, a decrease of 19 per cent. from the total started in 1994, and there were 2,200 housing association dwellings started, a fall of 43 per cent. compared with 1994.

These figures are as reported to the Department by local authorities and the National House-Building Council. They include estimates for those local authorities that have not sent in statistical returns for their districts.

While these figures cover newly built accommodation, housing associations have also provided additional social lettings by the rehabilitation of existing properties and the various home incentive schemes, whose relative importance has been growing with the greater emphasis being placed on making more effective use of existing stock.

Housing Stock

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much unsold housing stock there is in the west midlands. [20915]

Mr. Clappison: The only information held centrally on dwellings for sale in the west midlands relates to vacant local authority dwellings to be sold, as reported by local authorities on their housing investment programme returns. The 1995 returns showed a total of 283 local authority dwellings in the west midlands that on 1 April 1995 were vacant and to be sold.

The available data on vacant dwellings in the west midlands in other sectors do not identify separately those which are for sale.

Farming Waste

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to reduce the amount of (a) environmentally damaging waste and (b) other pollution created by the farming industry. [21387]

Mr. Clappison: The Government's views on the reduction of waste, including agricultural waste, are set out in the White Paper "Making Waste Work" which was published in December 1995.

Measures to control agricultural sources of water pollution include:

(a) consents for discharges from identifiable sources;

(b) Regulations relating to the storage of silage and slurry, the quality of sewage sludge spread on land, and the approval and use of pesticides; and

(c) encouraging farmers to draw up farm waste management plans for the disposal of waste to land.

Codes of good practice have been published by MAFF concerning the protection of water, air, soil and the use of pesticides; and a pesticides forum is being established to take forward policy on pesticides minimisation. As regards nitrates, the Government are introducing a variety of measures to reduce inputs. These measures include a code of practice, changes to agricultural practice in nitrate sensitive areas and the proposed designation of nitrate vulnerable zones under the nitrates directive. The National Rivers Authority also issues guidance and advice to farmers and others on preventive measures; and takes enforcement action where necessary.

John McLintock

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the reasons for South Oxfordshire district council's refusal to give information about the circumstances surrounding the termination of its contract with John McLintock; and if South Oxfordshire district council has signed a confidentiality agreement with John McLintock, the contractor form computing services. [21165]

Sir Paul Beresford: The arrangements under which contracts are entered into by local authorities with private contractor are for authorities themselves to decide within the law. Authorities have a fiduciary duty, under common law, to their local taxpayers.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what criteria the Housing Corporation used in determining the 1996–97 grant allocations apart from the guidelines in the bidding forum and the regional policy statement; [21238]

(2) what influence Housing Corporation regional directors have in allocating Housing Corporation grant; and to what extent this influence was applied in the 1996–97 allocations; [21239]

(3) what criteria apply to schemes seeking Housing Corporation funding where standards exceeded the published scheme work development standards; [21240]

(4) what guidelines the Housing Corporation issues to local authorities in regard to competition between associations for Housing Corporation funding; [21242]

(5) what consultation arrangements on investment priorities with individual associations and local authorities is undertaken by the Housing Corporation. [21243]

Mr. Clappison: The Housing Corporation's regional directors are responsible for allocating approved development programme resources within their regions in response to competitive bids from housing associations. They do so within a policy and procedural framework which, for 1996–97, was published by the corporation in its:

1. "Guide to the Allocation Process"
2. Regional Policy Statements
3. "invitation bid" letter.

Prior to publishing the above documents at the start of the 1996–97 bidding process, the corporation issued to local authorities and housing associations a consultation paper "Competing for Grant" which set out its proposed framework and criteria for competition including, inter alia, proposals for dealing with schemes where standards exceed the published scheme development standards. Where higher standards are proposed, corporation regional directors assess their relevance to the client group and schemes in question, and their cost-effectiveness, in arriving at their value for money judgments.

Local authorities are expected to involve housing associations in drawing up their housing strategies in accordance with the housing investment programme guidance issued annually by the Department. The Housing Corporation discusses the investment priorities arising from the strategies with local authorities, and publishes the outcome of these discussions in the regional policy statements. Following receipt of bids, and prior to finalising investment decisions, corporation regional directors and their staff discuss with local authorities the proposed allocations.

Homelessness

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to tackle homelessness amongst 16 to 20-year-olds. [21520]

Mr. Clappison: Under the Children Act 1989, local authority social services departments have a duty to provide accommodation for any child in need within their area who has reached the age of 16 and whose welfare the authority consider is likely to be seriously prejudiced if they do not provide accommodation. Local authorities have a duty to advise and assist young persons aged under 21 who have left local authority care after reaching the age of 16; this assistance can include help with accommodation.

My Department provides grants under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 to a range of voluntary organisations throughout England which offer practical help to homeless people. Many of these projects will assist homeless young people. In 1995–96, £6.9 million has been made available and a further £25 million will be made available over the next three years. Since 1990, my Department has also provided £182 million through the rough sleepers initiative to help rough sleepers in central London. Independent research shows that this has been particularly effective in helping young people to start a new life away from the streets. Plans for the third phase of the initiative were announced by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration in his reply to the hon. Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 4 March 1996.

In addition, various Government programmes including the rough sleepers initiative and the single regeneration budget have funded the development and operation of a range of foyer projects, hostels based on a French model which provide accommodation linked with training and job opportunities for homeless and unemployed young people.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the shortfall since September 1995 in available places for applicants to hostels intended to provide shelter for homeless people in central London; and if he will make a statement on his policies to deal with this problem. [21689]

Mr. Clappison: This information is not held centrally. I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration on 4 March 1996, Official Report, columns 8–10, about the Government's plans for the next phase—1996–99—of the rough sleepers initiative. These plans include the offer to fund up to 200 additional beds in temporary hostel accommodation, and continued funding for some hostel and night shelter accommodation already funded under the initiative.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21472]

Sir Paul Beresford: Terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between the contractor or supplier and his employees, subject of course to any relevant legal requirements. Compliance with health and safety regulations is a legal requirement for the contractor or supplier.

South West Water

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take on the drinking water inspectorate's report into the pollution of South West Water's supply in South Devon in August 1995. [21693]

Mr. Clappison: The drinking water inspectorate is still investigating this incident and will, as is usual in such cases, consider whether to recommend prosecution of the company for the offence of supplying water unfit for human consumption.

Rough Sleepers Initiative

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the financial support available from (a) his Department and (b) elsewhere for the rough sleepers initiative in 1995–96; and what changes will take place to this support in 1996–97. [21688]

Mr. Clappison: In 1995–96, my Department has made available revenue funding of £5.479 million in support of the rough sleepers initiative; and the Housing Corporation has made available capital funding of £24.862 million and revenue funding of £1.9 million for the provision and management of permanent move-on accommodation. Plans for the third phase—1996–99—of the initiative are set out in the strategy paper issued on 4 March 1996. Housing associations and voluntary sector organisations working with rough sleepers are being invited to bid for further resources of £73 million being made available by my Department over this three year period. This financial support will be complemented by £4.2 million for each of the next three years being made available by the Department of Health to continue and develop the homeless mentally ill initiative.

Local Councils (Cycling Allowance)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce legislation to enable local councils to pay a cycling allowance to elected members. [21591]

Sir Paul Beresford: We have no plans to introduce legislation on the payment of cycling allowances by local authorities to their elected members.

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21506]

Sir Paul Beresford: There is no central record of the number of hours worked each week by staff in my Department. Conditioned hours are generally 41 gross in London and 42 gross elsewhere.

Council Tax

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average council tax for a band D property in each authority in England for 1996–97. [22009]

Mr. Curry: The average council tax for band D two-adult dwellings in England in 1996–97 is £647. This is before any reductions for council tax benefit and transitional relief, and represents an increase of 6.2 per cent on 1995–96 levels.

Council taxes in shire areas will be £632 on average, an increase of 5.9 per cent. on last year.

In London, the average council tax for band B is £616, with inner London having the highest increases, of 10.4 per cent. on average, while in outer London increases average 5.1 per cent. Metropolitan areas have the highest band D council taxes, at £725—6.8 per cent. higher than in 1995–96.

I have today placed in the Library of the House a table showing band D council tax for each authority in England for 1996–97, and the percentage increase from 1995–96.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [21279]

Sir Paul Beresford: A list of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department can be found in the Cabinet Office Publication "Public Bodies 1995". A copy is available in the House of Commons Library. Of these the following bodies carry out activities falling within the specified categories:

a. hold open meetings,

Local Government Commission

Local Government Staff Commission

b. conduct public consultation exercises,

Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment

Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council

Local Government Commission

Local Government Staff Commission

c. conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests,

Advisory Committee on Business and the Environment

Advisory Panel for Construction Research

Advisory Panel on Standards for the Planning Inspectorate

Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council

Local Government Commission

d. publish a register of members' interests (in annual reports),

Advisory Committee on Hazardous Substances

Advisory Committee on Releases of Genetically Modified Organisms to the Environment

Advisory Panel on Standards for the Planning Inspectorate

Local Government Commission.

The Local Government Commission is required by statute to carry out consultation exercises. None of the other activities is a statutory requirement.

The royal commission on eNvironmental pollution is an independent body appointed by the Queen by royal warrant. Its policy is to consult widely on subjects it is studying and to ensure that all the advice it gives is in the public domain.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the amount of uncollected domestic rates, community charge and council tax for the London boroughs of (a) Lambeth and (b) Islington at the latest date for which figures are available. [21400]

Sir Paul Beresford: Estimates of uncollected community charge and council tax for individual authorities are published regularly by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. Estimates for 31 March 1994 are available in its revenue collection statistics 1993–94 publication, which shows the following figures:

	Arrears outstanding at 31 March 1994 for:
	Community charge	Council tax
Lambeth	84,895	29,597
Islington[1]	n/a	10,270

[1] No information as published by CIPFA for Islington: the figure shown for council tax arrears is the Department's estimate based on information supplied by the authority in May 1994.

Later figures are not yet available, but will differ from those given above to the extent that the authorities concerned have collected outstanding amounts, written off uncollectable amounts or, in the case of council taxes, raised new debits.

Information on arrears of domestic rates is not published by CIPFA and is not available centrally.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional funding has now been made available to local authorities to compensate for the effect of the Social Security (Persons from Abroad) Miscellaneous Amendments Regulations 1996 (S.I., 1996, No. 30). [21600]

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Austin-Walker) on 19 March Official Report columns 146–47.

Local Government Reorganisation

Sir Peter Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the orders will be made implementing his decisions on the Local Government Commission's recommendations for new parishes in Hampshire. [21972]

Sir Paul Beresford: The order creating the new parish of Bishopstoke in the borough of Eastleigh came into force on 14 December 1995. In the light of further evidence, we have decided not to implement the commission's recommendations for new parishes for Sarisbury and Warsash in the borough of Fareham.

Spending Plans

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make an announcement about the spending plans of the Department of the Environment, Ordnance Survey and the Office of Water Services for the years 1996–97 to 1998–99. [22345]

Mr. Gummer: Yes. I have today published the Department of the Environment's annual report for 1996. This sets out in detail the outcome of the public expenditure survey which was announced in the November 1995 Budget statement as it affects the areas of my responsibility. The report records how the Department, Ordnance Survey and the Office of Water Services have discharged their functions over the past year. It provides the background to each spending programme and it sets out our plans for the future, where it sees environmental concerns playing a key role both within the UK and in the European Union.

DEFENCE

Works of Art

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the National Audit Office report "Ministry of Defence, Management of Works of Art". [20842]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The NAO report will be considered in the normal way. It would not be appropriate to anticipate the outcome.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans (1) he has to obtain a full valuation of his Department's art collection; [20843]

(2) what plans he has to conduct an inventory of all works of art held by his Department and the armed services. [20835]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Both the valuation of my Department's collection and the inclusion of additional works of art on its inventory are recommended by the Comptroller and Auditor General in his report "Ministry of Defence, Management of Works of Art", which is to be considered shortly by the Committee of Public Accounts. I do not propose to anticipate consideration of the report.

Nimrod MR2

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 508–09, what is the estimated cost of converting the Nimrod MR2; and from which subheads of which votes these funds will be taken. [21678]

Mr. Soames: The total cost of conversion is not expected to exceed £30 million. The cost is being met in full from existing provision, the bulk of which falls within the top-level budget of Air Officer Commanding-in-Chief Logistics Command, vote 2 section C2(1).

Ballistic Missile Defence System

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to publish the review of a United Kingdom–based theatre ballistic missile defence system; and if he will make a statement. [21376]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We are currently assessing our response to the risks posed by ballistic missiles both to the UK mainland and dependent territories, and to UK forces deployed overseas. This assessment will be informed by the results of a pre-feasibility study, which will advise on options, costs, time scales and technical risk. We hope to be in a position to make decisions regarding the way ahead by the end of the year.

Service Personnel (Evictions)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what review he has carried out, since 1992, of his Department's policy of evicting service families following (a) marital breakdown and (b) the redundancy of service personnel; how many such evictions have taken place in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [21382]

Mr. Soames: The Department's policy on the treatment of personnel who lose their entitlement to service accommodation was examined, as part of the process of transferring responsibility for administering the married quarter estate, to the defence housing executive. Consequently, the defence housing executive will become responsible for evictions within the married quarter estate from 1 April 1996. Records of the reasons for eviction of RAF and Navy personnel who lose their entitlement to service accommodation are not held. The total number of all evictions remains very low, however, as the eviction process is initiated only after all other avenues have been exhausted. Since 1992, there have been no evictions in the RAF, three in the Navy and 45—all marital breakdown—evictions in the Army. The breakdown in years for the Army is as follows:

1993: 15

1994: 6

1995: 7

Figures are not yet available for 1996.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [21277]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 6 March 1995, Official Report, column 12.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the average cost of answering an (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary questions from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each Session since 1989–90. [21795]

Mr. Soames: This Department does not collect the information in the form requested.

Surplus Military Clothing

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the sale of surplus military clothing; and how many companies are contracted by his Department to purchase this clothing. [20748]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 14 March 1996]: Following a competition between 12 firms, AMAC (UK) Ltd. of Stockport was contacted to sell, on the Department's behalf, all surplus clothing and textile stores.

Attrition Reserve

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and of what type of aircraft were in his Department's attrition reserve at 1 March in each of the last five years. [21022]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 18 March 1996]: The number of aircraft required for attrition purposes is determined at the time of procurement. Once in service, all aircraft in excess of aircraft establishment—AE—are available to meet fleet management and replacement needs. The table gives the number of available airframes in the fleets of each major aircraft type over and above the aircraft establishment at operational—including training—units, at 1 March for the last five years. Significant factors leading to variations in the figures include changes in AE, disposals of surplus aircraft, and the number of aircraft undergoing maintenance or modification programmes:

Aircraft type	1992	1993	1994	1995	1996
Royal Air Force
Tornado GR	37	65	65	61	60
Tornado F3[1]	60	67	65	63	27
Jaguar[2]	37	36	36	36	36
Harrier	50	48	44	43	43
Hawk	25	33	35	47	47
Canberra	3	4	4	4	4
Hercules	2	6	6	6	6
Nimrod	6	6	6	6	4
Sentry	1	1	1	1	1

TriStar	0	1	1	1	1
Chinook	4	5	5	5	7
Wessex	9	9	9	9	11
Gazelle	7	7	6	6	4
Sea King	3	3	3	3	2

Army
Lynx	32	22	24	21	20
Gazelle	23	22	24	24	23

[1] 24 surplus Tornado F3 aircraft were leased to the Italian air force in the course of 1995.
[2] In addition, 46 Jaguar aircraft are kept in long-term storage and as ground instruction aircraft.

SCOTLAND

Permitted Development Orders

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what powers local planning authorities have to seek to amend the terms of permitted development orders. [21047]

Mr. Kynoch: The Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) (Scotland) Order 1992 is a statutory instrument and so planning authorities do not have powers to seek amendments. However, like anyone else, planning authorities are free to suggest amendments and their suggestions are given careful consideration. With their practical experience in the day-to-day operation of the planning system, planning authorities' views on planning legislation are always welcome.

Diabetics (Microfine Needles)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the practice of each health board in Scotland in respect of the provision of exemption certificates for diabetic patients requiring microfine needles for insulin injections; and if he will make a statement. [21491]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Patients with diabetes mellitus, except where treatment is by diet alone, are exempt from all prescription charges. This exemption arises from their medical condition rather than their need to use injecting equipment. Microfine needles are not available on GP prescription.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the cost to the national health service in Scotland of giving blanket exemption certificates to diabetic patients to allow them to obtain, free of charge, microfine needles for insulin injections. [21492]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Microfine needles to fit insulin injection pens are not available on GP prescription.

The cost to the NHS in Scotland of providing microfine needles free of charge has not been estimated. The cost would depend on the number of prescriptions written by responsible medical practitioners in respect of patients for whom they considered the use of pen injecting systems to be clinically necessary.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the expenditure on regional selective assistance offers accepted by companies in (a) 1991–92, (b) 1992–93, (c) 1993–94 and (d) 1994–95; the proportion of regional selective assistance expenditure on foreign-owned firms; and regional selective assistance expenditure per employee in manufacturing. [12700]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1996]: The information which the right hon. Member seeks is set out in the table:

Year	Number of offers accepted	Value of offers accepted (£ million)	Of which overseas-owned firms (£ million)	Of which overseas-owned firms (percentage)	Cost-per-job for all accepted offers for manufacturing projects (£)
1991–92	160	52.3	13.8	26	6,155
1992–93	198	72.3	36.2	50	6,702
1993–94	239	127.3	68.1	54	7,747
1994–95	246	112.7	73.8	65	7,636

Data are given by reference to offers accepted rather than expenditure defrayed. To link annual offer data to expenditure can give misleading results, since assisted projects and thus grant expenditure will typically cover a number of years.

Stalking

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been prosecuted for stalking on a breach of the peace charge in each of the last five years. [21590]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate informs me that it is not possible to identify those cases of breach of the peace which involved stalking behaviour. The records do not contain details of the offence other than the nomen juris.

Media Monitoring Service

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 94, how many companies and agencies were invited to tender for the trial media monitoring service; and if he will make a statement. [12772]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 30 January 1996]: No companies were invited to tender for the provision of a press cuttings service on a trial basis. Both companies approached the Scottish Office.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Nursery Voucher Scheme

19. Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many additional nursery places she estimates there will be after implementation of phase 2 of the nursery voucher scheme. [20143]

Mr. Robin Squire: The number of additional places created through the nursery voucher scheme will depend on the response of providers to parental demand. I am confident that providers of all types, either alone or in partnership with each other, will satisfy parental demand over time.

27. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the progress of the nursery voucher scheme. [20151]

Mr. Squire: In the phase 1 areas, over 600 private and voluntary sector providers have registered to participate in the scheme alongside maintained schools. The second batch of vouchers has now been issued to parents in preparation from the start of term.

School Capital Challenge

20. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she expects to conclude the consultation on the school capital challenge funding applications with local education authorities. [20144]

Mrs. Gillan: We have asked for responses to the consultation paper on the schools renewal challenge fund by 31 March.

Higher Education Funding

21. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has received regarding the planned funding of higher education in the period 1996–97 to 1998–99. [20145]

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received representations from the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and others. She has listened very carefully to their views and set up two working groups with them to collate evidence on the effects of public funding on universities and colleges and to consider the private finance initiative in higher education.

32. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent representations she has had from the university vice-chancellors about the funding of higher education. [20157]

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend meets university vice-chancellors from time to time to discuss the funding of higher education. She last met them on 6 February to discuss the 1995 Budget settlement and other matters. She has listened very carefully to their views and set up two working groups with them to collate evidence on the effects of public funding on universities and colleges and to consider the private finance initiative in higher education.

The vice-chancellors will also be able to put their views on longer-term funding matters to the National Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education announced by my right hon. Friend on 19 February, which will start work before Easter.

Workfare Scheme

22. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what conclusions she has drawn from her Department's studies of the workfare scheme in the USA. [20146]

Mr. Forth: Our studies of workfare in the United States have shown that universal make-work schemes have been relatively small in coverage, and have proved ineffective and expensive. I note that the Employment Select Committee reached similar conclusions in its recent report "The Right to Work and Workfare".

Local Government Reorganisation

23. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent discussions she has had with the heads of local education authorities to discuss the effects of local government reorganisation. [20147]

Mr. Robin Squire: Ministerial colleagues and officials have held many useful meetings with councillors and senior officers of local education authorities to discuss local government reorganisation.

School Admissions

24. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of (a) primary school and (b) secondary school children gained admission to the school of first choice in England in (i) 1994 and (ii) 1995. [20148]

Mrs. Gillan: This information is not collected centrally. Surveys commissioned by the Association of Metropolitan Authorities in 1992 and The Times in 1993 suggested that some 90 per cent. of parents gained a place at their first choice school.

Parliamentary Questions

25. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many oral questions she has answered on employment issues; and how many on education and training matters. [20149]

Mr. Robin Squire: Since the formation of the Department on 5 July 1995, 163 oral questions have been answered; 47 on employment issues and 116 relating to education.

Grant-maintained Schools

26. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to encourage more schools to become grant-maintained. [20150]

Mrs. Gillan: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made clear, we are actively considering ways of extending the benefits of self-government for all schools. We shall continue to encourage schools to become grant-maintained by ensuring that governors and parents have ready access to reliable information about GM status when making their decisions about the future of their school, and by seeking ways to give GM schools even greater flexibility to improve and develop what they offer to pupils and parents.

Young People (Employment Opportunities)

28. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to improve employment opportunities for young people in Coventry. [20153]

Mr. Paice: The Department will continue to offer and support a wide range of opportunities for all young people.

Activity Centres

29. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made in drawing up the guidelines following the enactment of Activity Centres (Young Persons' Safety) Act 1995. [20154]

Mrs. Gillan: Good progress has been made. The Health and Safety Commission issued a consultation document, containing draft regulations and guidance to the licensing authority, last September. The consultation period ended on 24 November. I understand that the commission hopes to publish its guidance to the licensing authority when the order designating the body concerned is laid before the House. This should be soon.

Job Security

30. Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what new proposals she has to improve job security. [20155]

Mr. Forth: The best protection against job insecurity is sustained economic growth and increased competitiveness. We shall continue with the policies which have seen the economy grow for over three years, unemployment fall by over 750,000 since recovery began and the number of jobs rise by 259,000 over the last year.

Education Standards

31. Mr. Atkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she last met the Secondary Heads Association to discuss standards in education. [20156]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets the Secondary Heads Association from time to time to discuss a range of issues. There is no record of a recent meeting relating specifically to standards in education.

Representatives of the SHA met with officials to discuss matters relating to standards in education on 28 February 1996. I shall be meeting the SHA shortly to discuss its paper "Towards More Effective Schools".

Teachers' Qualifications

33. Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to introduce specific qualifications for (a) expert teachers and (b) head teachers. [20158]

Mr. Robin Squire: At my right hon. Friend's request, the Teacher Training Agency is developing a national professional qualification for head teachers for implementation from September 1997. There are no current plans for other qualifications, although the agency is developing national standards for four key points in the profession.

Whole Group Teaching (Primary Schools)

34. Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment her Department has (a) undertaken and (b) commissioned of the impact of whole group teaching in primary schools. [20159]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department has not undertaken or commissioned such studies. However, Ofsted's recent report on class sizes, a copy of which is in the Library, contains relevant analysis in paragraphs 71 to 77.

Grant-maintained Schools (London)

35. Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the academic performance of children at grant-maintained schools in London. [20160]

Mr. Paice: The 1995 performance tables show that 47 per cent. of pupils in grant-maintained schools in Greater London achieved five or more good GCSE passes, compared with 34 per cent. of pupils in local education authority schools. A comparison of comprehensive schools only in the two sectors shows that 43 per cent. of pupils in GM comprehensive schools achieved five or more good GCSE passes compared with 32 per cent. in LEA schools.

Primary School Teachers

36. Mr. Foreman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will review the regulations governing in-service training for primary school teachers. [20161]

Mr. Robin Squire: We have no plans to review the statutory provision of five non-contact days per year, which may be used for in-service training; pupils should be offered 190 days of teaching each year. Where in-service training takes place in school hours, schools should ensure that their arrangements cause minimal disruption to pupils.

Departmental Research

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list all Department for Education and employment-funded pilots, trials and research studies which have been conducted since 1990 in (a) Doncaster, (b) Mexborough, (c) Doncaster travel-to-work area and (d) Mexborough travel-to-work area identifying (i) title, summary and duration of the pilot/trial, (ii) target population and total number of participants and (iii) whether each pilot, trial or research finding was published and the date of publication; and if she will list all other non-Department for Education and Employment research bodies or organisations involved in each pilot, trial or research scheme. [19088]

Mr. Paice: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Schools (Admission Policies)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those bodies involved in the consultation exercise in respect of schools' admission policies which favoured allowing schools the option to select up to 15 per cent. of pupils by aptitude or ability; and what proportion of the total number of organisations consulted these represent. [21056]

Mrs. Gillan: The draft admissions circular, issued for consultation on 8 January, set out the Secretary of State's view that schools could select up to 15 per cent. of pupils with reference to ability or aptitude without having to publish statutory proposals. The previous benchmark for which statutory proposals had been necessary was 10 per cent. in certain subjects. A total of 218 responses were received from the around 1,500 bodies consulted. Some 94 of the responses made no reference to this interpretation of existing legislation. Of the 124 which did comment on the new interpretation, 15 welcomed the Secretary of State's view. The other responses included opposition to selection and concern about the impact on the provision of places locally. The following supported the Secretary of State's view and were content for their responses to be made public under the code of practice on access to government information:

Bennett Memorial School, Kent

Castle Hall School, West Yorkshire

Chancellors School, Hatfield

Chatham House Grammer School, Kent

Chelmsford County High School for Girls, Essex

The City Technology Colleges Trust

Davonport High School for Boys, Devon

Funding Agency for Schools

Grant Maintained Schools Advisory Committee

Hayes School, Bromley

The King John School, Essex

Oldfield School for Girls, Avon

St. Clement Danes School, Hertfordshire

Thomas More School, Surrey

Wandsworth Borough Council, Education Department.

Of course it will be for individual admission authorities to decide whether to introduce these new selective arrangements.

Personal Performance Consultants

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what steps she is taking to ensure that Personal Performance Consultants is not given unfair commercial advantage through being allowed special access to employment services staff under their contract to provide welfare services; [21166]

(2) which welfare services are to be provided for employment service staff by Personal Performance Consultants under the contract recently awarded to it; and what is the cost of the contract. [21167]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. John McAllion, dated 20 March 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions about the decision to award a contract to Personal Performance Consultants (PPC) to provide welfare services to those employed within the Employment Service (ES).

My decision to award the contract to PPC was reached following a market test carried out in accordance with the Cabinet Office Efficiency Unit Guidance. It represents best value for money to ES and therefore better value for money to the taxpayer. The services to be provided by PPC under this contract cover information, advisory and counselling services both face to face and by telephone; and support to line and personnel managers within ES. The details of these services were set out clearly in the specification of our requirements. They do not allow PPC to acquire commercial advantage in offering advise to ES employees.

The amount to be paid to PPC under this contract will be determined by the number of people it is to cover. As the numbers employed in ES may vary during the life of the contract it is not possible to give a definitive contract value. However, using the indicative volumes utilised during the evaluation process it would be around £3.2 million over three years.

I hope this is helpful.

School Child Care Grant Initiative

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many places have been created, and how much money has been (a) spent and (b) allocated each year under the out of school child care grant initiative. [21168]

Mrs. Gillan: The following table below sets out this information in respect of England.

Out of school child care initiative	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
Allocation (£ million)	2,437	12,760	17,516
Expenditure (£ million)	2,283	11,458	[1]13,306
Places created (1,000s)	4,000	22,286	[1]30,859

[1] Figures provided for 1995–96 reflect the position up to the end of February 1996.

Executive Jobclub, Wirral

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the value of the grant paid to the executive jobclub in Wirral; how many people use the service; what is the success rate of service users in finding jobs after leaving the club; what is the current budget for this financial year; and what is the projected budget for the next two financial years. [21231]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Frank Field, dated 20 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your written question about payments made to the organisation running the Wirral Executive Jobclub, and the projected budgets for the Jobclub for the next two financial years.

The Employment Service (ES) has, for a number of years, awarded commercial contracts, after tendering, to external organisations and companies to run its programmes to assist unemployed people. The programmes and contractual agreements are regularly reviewed and monitored locally by ES staff.

Jobclubs have proved very successful since they were introduced over ten years ago, and the Wirral Executive Jobclub opened in October 1994, with both morning and afternoon sessions.

During the period April 1995 to February 1996, 277 people have used both sessions of the Wirral Executive Jobclub, resulting in 122 job placings. However, performance has declined in the second half of the year in both Jobclubs. In the period April to October 1995, 79 job placings were achieved by the Jobclubs, compared with 43 for the period November 1995 to February 1996. Total positive outcomes including job placings and training have shown a similar decline from 103 for the period April to October 1995 to 53 for the period November 1995 to February 1996. The ES does not track clients after they have left Jobclubs, so it is not possible to say how many enter employment after leaving.

As financial renumeration is a commercial matter between the ES and its programme providers, I am unable to provide details for the Wirral Executive Jobclub. However, the total Jobclub budget allocation for the Wirral ES District for the 1995/96 financial year is £383,102. Projected budgets for Es programmes for the 1996/97 and 1997/98 financial years have not been finalised.

I hope this is helpful.

Travel-to-interview Scheme

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) for how long, and between what dates, the pilot of a revised travel-to-interview scheme took place in the north-west region in 1995; [21696]

(2) how many unemployed people were assisted by the travel-to-interview scheme in the north-west region during the pilot scheme in 1995, involving the relaxation of the rules; what would have been the figure if the rules that applied to the rest of the United Kingdom had been applied; and how many would have been assisted (a) under the criteria set by the pilot if the qualifying period had changed to 13 weeks of unemployment and (b) if the rules that applied to the rest of the United Kingdom had been applied with the qualifying period changed to 13 weeks of unemployment. [21698]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Ian McCartney, dated 20 March 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of people in the North West who would have been assisted by the Travel to Interview Scheme under a variety of conditions.

The pilot of a revised Travel to Interview Scheme in the North West Region ran from October 1994 to March 1995. The scheme helped 3,359 people during that six month period.

It is not possible at the present time to provide the other information you require. However, it is anticipated that a copy of the report of the evaluation of the pilot will be placed in the House of Commons Library shortly. Some of the figures requested will be available in the forthcoming report but the decision to restrict eligibility to 13 weeks was not part of the piloted changes and the figures you request will therefore not be available.

I hope this is helpful.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by her Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [21278]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies are:

Committees for the Employment of People with Disabilities

National Advisory Council on Employment of people with Disabilities

Race Relations Employment Advisory Group

Supported Employment Consultative Group

Women's National Commission.

For each of these bodies the answer to each part of the question is none.

Statistical Data and Analysis

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans her Department has to provide statistical data and analysis on an individual gender-disaggregated basis and to use this to inform the preparation of education and employment policies; and if she will make a statement. [21402]

Mrs. Gillan: Gender is a key characteristic of most of the statistics we collect and of much of the information we publish. Additional analyses are often available on request although, for obvious reasons, not at the level of individual people.

Such information already informs our education and employment policies and will continue to do so in future.

Ministerial Committee on Women's Issues

Mrs. Maddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will issue a press release following each meeting of the ministerial committee on women's issues; and if she will make a statement. [21403]

Mrs. Gillan: "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" makes it clear that information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet or Cabinet committees is not normally made public.

Firlands Training Ltd.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what information she has on the number of training and enterprise councils which have contracts under (a) training for work and (b) youth training schemes with Firlands Training Ltd., Whitchurch in Aylesbury. [21498]

Mr. Paice: The Department does not collect information about contracts between training and enterprise councils and providers of training.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Kenneth Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress Surrey, North Yorkshire and Heart of England TECs have made in meeting the criteria for the award of a three-year licence. [22398]

Mr. Paice: I am pleased to announce the award of a three-year licence to Surrey, North Yorkshire and Heart of England training and enterprise councils, which have now completed the process of meeting the rigorous standards we set.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in the last five years appointed local veterinary inspectors have certified animals which they owned for export. [20773]

Mrs. Browning: No cases of LVIs certifying for export animals which they owned have been recorded.

The conditions of appointment of local veterinary inspectors contain a strict condition that an LVI must not certify any animal for export when he or she has a direct financial interest in the animal including an interest arising from ownership of the animal or from employment in the service of the exporter of the animal. For this purpose, "animal" means any animal, bird or fish or any material in relation to any one of them.

Farm Animals (Cloning)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on his policy on the cloning of farm animals. [20898]

Mrs. Browning: The Department's policy on the cloning of farm animals is guided by the recommendations of the report of the Committee to Consider the Ethical Implications of Emerging Technologies in the Breeding of Farm Animals—the Banner committee—which reported in 1995.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 18 and 19 March; and if he will make a statement. [22394]

Mr. Baldry: I represented the United Kingdom at the Agriculture Council meeting in Brussels on 18 to 19 March 1996.

The Council had before it three proposals relating to beef hormones, which together re-enacted the ban on growth-promoting hormones and the import of meat treated with such hormones; introduced rules on the use of so-called beta-agonists; and strengthened controls on the illegal use of these substances. On behalf of the UK, I argued against enacting these proposals in view of the imminent negotiations in the World Trade Organisation framework between the European Union on the one hand, and the United States and other complainants on the other. However, all other member states were able to agree. I indicated our intention to vote against the measures when formally adopted for the reasons which I had stated in the Council.

The Agriculture Commissioner introduced a proposal to amend the Council regulation on the common organisation of the market in bananas, principally to increase the tariff quota to provide for the market requirements of the new member states of the EU, but also to introduce other changes. I made clear the UK's willingness to remedy operational deficiencies in the present banana regime, but not to accept fundamental changes to the regime to the detriment of African, Caribbean and Pacific banana producers. Work will now begin on this proposal at technical level.

The presidency and Commission conducted bilateral meetings with member states on the proposals for reform of the common organisation of the market in fruit and vegetables and in products processed from fruit and vegetables. I made clear the importance which the UK attaches to reform of these regimes. I stressed the need for measures to reduce dependence on intervention, to allow specialist producer groups to flourish, and to prevent market arrangements of an anti-competitive nature. The presidency said that these proposals would be discussed further at the Council in April in the light of conclusions drawn from bilateral contacts.

Finally the Commissioner said, in response to UK questioning, that work was under way at technical level on the proposal to improve the welfare of calves used for veal production, and expressed the Commission's hope that this would proceed as quickly as possible.

SOCIAL SECURITY

State Earnings-related Pension

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide estimates of the SERPS additional pension payable weekly to men and women on (a) average earnings and (b) earnings below £12,000 per annum relative to the weekly state retirement pension in each year to 2040. [18338]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table. The table gives estimates of the weekly additional pension that men and women on (a) average earnings and (b) half average earnings will accrue relative to the rate of basic state retirement pension. The estimates cover the period from 1995 to 2040.

1. It is assumed that earnings are at, or half of, the average for each year throughout the working life. Weekly average earnings for 1996 are assumed to be £397.40 (Male) and £288.90 (Female).
2. The basic rate of retirement pension is assumed to be £61.15.
3. Figures for weekly additional pension entitlement are in 1996 prices, and are rounded to the nearest 10p.
4. Figures for the weekly additional pension relative to the rate of basic retirement pension are rounded to two decimal places.
5. The future level of real earnings growth is assumed to be 1.5 per cent. per annum.

National Insurance

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the value of national insurance contributions unpaid by employers (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of total contributions owed and (c) the approximate number of employees affected for the latest year for which information is available. [18913]

Mr. Heald: Social security regulations provide that all employees are liable to pay class 1 national insurance contributions—provided that their earnings reach or exceed a minimum amount. They further provide that it is the responsibility of employers, in the first instance, to pay both their own, secondary, and their employees' primary share of the contribution at the time earnings are paid.

Estimates of the underpayment of NICs have been made through an employer survey, conducted by the Contributions Agency, looking at the 1992–93 tax year. From the results of the survey, it is estimated that £111 million of NICs, both primary and secondary, were unpaid in 1992–93. The total amount of NICs paid by employers for 1992–93 was £35,473 million. The survey therefore indicates that the amount underpaid was 0.31 per cent. of the total amount paid.

The survey also estimates that 3 per cent. of employees were affected by underpayment of primary NICs. The underpayment of secondary contributions does not affect the employee.

The survey looked at a random sample of 2,336 employees and the results are therefore subject to wide margins of error. The survey has been followed up by a survey of employer compliance levels for 1993–94 with a larger sample size. The results of this survey will be placed in the Library when available.

Agencies (Running Costs)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the budgeted running costs of each of the agencies that report directly to his Department for financial years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99. [19261]

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table:

Department of Social Security—Agency running costs

£ million

Agency	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99
Information Technology Services Agency	nil	nil	nil

Department of Social Security—Agency running costs

Contributions Agency	225	216	193
Child Support Agency	209	212	191
War Pensions Agency	34	33	29

Notes:
1. The Information Technology Services Agency has a nil net running costs limit.
2. From 1996–97 the residual functions of the Resettlement Agency have been absorbed within Social Security Headquarters.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out the public expenditure survey figures for his Department's administration over the years (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99 identifying separately the running costs element. [19262]

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table:

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the suitability of Warrington weather station for assessing temperature for cold weather payments in the Mexborough area of the Don Valley constituency; and if he will make a statement. [19344]

Mr. Roger Evans: Each year, after the end of March, the cold weather payment scheme is reviewed. The Meteorological Office advises on the availability of weather stations and the appropriate linkages with postcodes.

The postcode areas in Mexborough are linked to the weather station at Leeds. This linkage is considered to be the most appropriate based on advice from the Meteorological Office.

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those areas of executive action where he has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for his decision. [20534]

Mr. Burt: In many areas, the reasons for a decision will be self-evident. In other areas, individuals are notified of the decision, and may be given reasons if it is not clear to them why it has been made.

Child Support Agency

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what computer package was used by the Child Support Agency when calculating travel-to-work distances; and which parts of the postcode are taken into account. [19487]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 19 March 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency computer packages.

There are two computer packages utilised to calculate the travel-to-work distances. The first computer package is the Post Office Address File produced by the Royal Mail and the second is a bespoke system, called TravCost, based on the computer package DataEase. The TravCost System was developed and is currently supported by the Child Support Agency Small Systems Team.

The complete postcode of an address, which may be composed of between five and seven alphanumeric characters, is used to obtain an Ordnance Survey North and East Grid Reference from the Post Office Address File computer package. The package utilises grid references assigned by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, and is updated every three months with the latest post code and grid reference information. The grid references for both the client's home and work address are then entered onto the TravCost System, which calculates allowable travel-to-work costs.

I hope this is helpful.

Capacity for Work Tests

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people are exempt from the all-work test (a) in total and (b) during each of the months since April 1995, for each of the 11 medical services centres; [20178]

(2) how many people are currently exempt from the all-work test by virtue of (a) receipt of the highest rate of the disability living allowance care component, (b) receipt of invalidity benefit and being aged 58 years or over on 13 April and (c) a serious, medical condition. [21077]

Mr. Burt: Information is not available in the format requested. An estimated 705,000 claimants are currently treated as satisfying the all-work test because they were receiving invalidity benfit between 1 December 1993 and 12 April 1995 and were aged 58 or over on 13 April 1995. National figures on exemptions are in the table.

	April 1995	May 1995	June 1995	July 1995	August 1995	September 1995	October 1995	November 1995	December 1995	January 1996	Total
In receipt of disability living allowance higher care component	8,956	4,143	1,940	1,626	1,302	1,286	1,723	1,999	1,291	2,192	26,458
Severe medical condition	9,929	21,743	26,086	23,278	18,555	17,698	21,539	21,755	14,623	19,687	194,893
Total	18,885	25,886	28,026	24,904	19,857	18,984	23,262	23,754	15,914	21,879	221,351

Figures are provisional and do not include clerically processed claims.

Independent Tribunal Service

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what communications he received from Mr. Richard Allen of the Independent Tribunal Service before his decision to close local tribunal service offices. [20224]

Mr. Roger Evans: None. The provision of suitable accommodation for social security appeal tribunals and disability appeal tribunals is the responsibility of the Independent Tribunal Service. As suitable premises in Huddersfield are not currently available, arrangements have been made to hear appeals at the Wakefield venue.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what (a) advice and (b) guidance his Department have issued on the retrieval of overpayment of attendance allowance from the spouse following the death of the recipient; and if he will make a statement. [20800]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The advice and guidance involving the recovery of an overpayment under these circumstances is common to all benefits. Each case is treated on its merits, although recovery is sought only if the amount exceeds £25.

If there is a recoverable overpayment outstanding at death, it can be recovered from the deceased's estate under social security legislation. If the overpayment arises after death, for example an automated credit transfer, ACT, payment continues directly into a bank account, as entitlement ceases on death, the deceased's estate has no title to the payment and repayment is then sought either from the estate or a beneficiary of that estate. This is under the established principle of common law, that if a person who finds himself in receipt of money to which he is not entitled, he should return the sum involved.

There are specific instructions not to seek recovery within three weeks of bereavement to avoid causing unnecessary distress and anxiety to the bereaved.

If the hon. Member wishes to write to me separately concerning an individual case, I shall provide a detailed reply.

Tribunals (Disabled People)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representation disabled people have on tribunals dealing with appeals on claims for benefits for the disabled; and if he will make a statement. [20801]

Mr. Burt: The membership of tribunals is a matter for the president of the Independent Tribunal Service. He has written to the hon. Member.

Social Fund (Merthyr)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his estimate of the amount paid within the Merthyr district benefit area under the social fund in 1994–95; and what proportion of these funds were (a) community care grants and (b) crisis loans; [20861]

(2) what was the allocation under the social fund to the Merthyr benefit district in 1994–95. [20862]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Ted Rowlands, dated 19 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking what is his estimate of the amount paid within the Merthyr District benefit area under the Social Fund (SF) in 1994–95; and what proportion of these funds were (a) community care grants (CCGs) and (b) crisis loans and what was the allocation under the SF to the Merthyr Benefit District in 1994–95.

When the Benefits Agency was formed in April 1991, existing benefit offices were grouped into Districts. Merthyr Tydfil office forms part of the Eastern Valleys District which also includes Blackwood, Caerphilly and Ebbw Vale offices and Bargoed One Stop Shop.

The total amount paid under the discretionary SF in 1994/95 for Eastern Valleys District was £2,268,189.02, of which 27.87% (£632,101.87) was for CCGs and 8.72% (£197,731.77) was for crisis loans. The total amount paid under the non-discretionary SF in 1994/95 for Eastern Valleys District was broken down as follows:-

Funeral Payments: £557,044.20

Maternity Payments: £140,400.00

Cold Weather Payments: None

Total: £697,444.20

The District allocation for 1994/95 was £2,281,469 comprising £1,643,671 for loans and £637,798 for grants. These figures are provisional and subject to change.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Competitive Tendering (Contracts)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by his Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21034]

Mr. Burt: It is not possible to say how many contracts have been awarded in each of the last three years since information on the number of contracts is not kept centrally. Framework agreements are let on a competitive basis. Contracts arising from those agreements are entered into by budget holders when orders are placed.

With the exception of the Information Technology Services Agency, the authority to make purchases and place orders in the DSS is devolved to local budget holders. Current guidance to managers requires every purchase of over £5,000 to be subject to formal tendering procedures.

DSS policy is to give equal opportunity in competitive bidding to all firms invited.

State Pension Entitlement

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review the rules on date of entitlement to state pensions. [21258]

Mr. Heald: We have no plans to do so.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average cost of answering an

(a) oral and (b) written parliamentary question from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each Session since 1989–90. [21793]

Mr. Burt: This Department does not collect the information in the format requested.

Income Support (Student Loans)

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if an individual's income support entitlement is changed if their spouse is a mature student and takes out a full student loan from the Student Loan Company; and if the individual's income support entitlement is based on the assumption that the spouse will automatically take out a full student loan from the Students Loan Company when the spouse becomes a mature student. [21275]

Mr. Roger Evans: For income support purposes, student loans are treated as income and attract a disregard of £10 per week.

An individual's entitlement to income support would be affected if their spouse or partner was eligible for a student loan regardless of whether the loan had been taken out.

The individual's income support entitlement would be reassessed to take into account the maximum student loan that their spouse/partner could acquire by taking reasonable steps to do so.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the numbers of the long-term sick and those claiming invalidity benefit who are in receipt of an occupational pension; if he will sub-divide these data according to the age of the recipient (a) up to 55 years, (b) 55 to 60 and (c) 60 years plus; and if he will denote the average size payments to each age group. [12963]

Mr. Burt [holding answer 1 February 1996]: Estimates of the numbers of invalidity benefit recipients also receiving occupational pensions at 2 April 1994 and of the average weekly pension payment, at 1993–94 prices, to these groups are in the table. Estimates are based on survey data and are subject to a wide margin of uncertainty.

	(a) Under 55	(b) 55 to 59	(c) 60 years plus
Estimated number of Invalidity Benefit recipients also receiving occupational pension at April 1994	130,000	135,000	360,000
Estimated average weekly amount of occupational pension	£75	£80	£65

1. Numbers are rounded to the nearest 5,000 and amounts are rounded to the nearest £5.
2. Estimates are based on data from the 1993–94 Family Resources Survey.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a list of all overseas visits made by all Ministers of his Department since 1990, including (a) details of the places visited and brief reasons for the visit, (b) details of the size, composition and cost to public funds of the delegation and (c) the names of non-ministerial members of each delegation and the capacity in which each was present. [17486]

Mr. Burt [holding answer 1 March 1994]: The available information is in the tables. Information on visits made before 1992 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Benefit Payment Card

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure that information currently contained in the pension book will be preserved and improved with the proposed new benefit payment card system with particular reference to (a) a permanent record of pension payments received, (b) details of how the pension is made up, (c) clear information on the amount due and the date available, (d) information on change of circumstances and (e) details of claiming income support. [11750]

Mr. Heald [pursuant to his reply, 31 January 1996, c. 947]: I am advised that Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, is writing again to clarify his reply of 31 January 1996.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 20 March 1996:

I am writing to clarify the information provided to you in my letter of 31 January 1996 in response to your Parliamentary Question. You asked the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure that information currently contained in the pension book will be preserved and improved with the proposed new benefit payment card system with particular reference to (a) a permanent record of pension payments received, (b) details of how the pension is made up, (c) clear information on the amount due and the date available, (d) information on change of circumstances and (e) details of claiming Income Support (IS).

The potential service suppliers have been asked to produce a receipt which will only include the following information; details of the type(s) of benefit paid, the amount(s) payable and the due date and the date of payment, but not the date of the last payment(s) made, as indicated in my earlier reply. As I explained in my earlier letter, customers should have no difficulty keeping a record of payment collected from the post office as a receipt will be given and the facility to request a full statement of the benefit account will be retained. This statement will be available on request from the local benefits office.

I hope this explains the position and I apologise for any confusion.

HEALTH

Hertfordshire Health Authorities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional costs to public funds will result from the division of the Hertfordshire health authorities. [17955]

Mr. Malone: The costs of running health authorities in Hertfordshire, to be met from within the allocation is planned to increase for £7.66 million in 1995–96 to £8.16 million in 1996–97.

Doctors and Nurses

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many doctors and nurses have been employed in NHS hospitals in (a) West Yorkshire and (b) Leeds since 1990; [18433]

(2) how many vacancies for doctors and nurses in (a) West Yorkshire and (b) Leeds remained unfilled in 1995. [18434]

Mr. Malone: Information about the number of vacancies for doctors and nurses which remained unfilled in 1995 in West Yorkshire and Leeds, and the number of doctors in hospitals in these areas for the last five years is not available centrally.

Figures for medical staff working in the hospital and community health service (HCHS) are collected by the Department of Health's medical and dental work force census. Copies of the census results at national and regional level, including figures on the number of vacancies at September each year, are in the Library.

Figures on vacancies for HCHS nurses and midwives are collected by the Office of Manpower and Economics and published in the annual reports of the Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives, Health Visitors and Professions Allied to Medicine; copies are in the Library.

Information on vacancies for general medical practitioners and general medical services practice staff is not available centrally.

The number of HCHS nursing and midwifery staff is collected by the Department of Health's non-medical work force census; the latest figures available are for 1994. Individual hospital units cannot be separately identified in the census, but nursing and midwifery staff can be sub-divided between those working in hospitals and those working in the community on the basis of their area of work.

The table gives the number of nursing and midwifery staff working in hospital areas of work in Leeds district health authority, formerly Western Leeds, Eastern Leeds and Leeds DHAs and West Yorkshire health authority, formerly Huddersfield, Dewsbury and Calderdale DHAs, from 1990 to 1994. It is not possible to sub-divide other HCHS non-medical staff groups between hospital and community areas of work. Also, the sub-division of nursing and midwifery staffs between hospital and community areas of work will not be possible for the 1995 non-medical work force census and future censuses because of the introduction of new occupation codes.

NHS hospital and community health services nursing and midwifery staff, excluding agency staff and learners, in hospital areas of work, Leeds and West Yorkshire district health authorities at September 1990 to 1994

West Yorkshire DHA	820	720	540	[2]—	[3]—

Notes:

[1] Learners are nurses on traditional nurse training courses and are directly employed by the NHS HCHS. Project 2000 training was introduced in 1989 and has gradually replaced traditional pre-registration nurse training. Project 2000 students are funded by bursaries, they are supernumary not employees, and are thus excluded from the count of NHS HCHS nursing staff. Figures for Project 2000 students are not available by DHA.

All figures are rounded to the nearest ten whole-time equivalents.

Executive Agencies

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions in each of the past five years Ministers in his Department have passed (a) hon. Members' letters and (b) hon. Members' questions to agencies for response; and what this figure is as a percentage of the total number of letters and questions received. [19425]

Mr. Horam: The information requested on questions passed to agencies for response is shown in the table.

Session	Number of questions passed to agencies	Percentage of questions passed to agencies
1992–93	5	0.08
1993–94	2	0.04
1994–95	17	0.35
1995–96[1]	12	0.63

[1] Figures as at 18 March 1996.

The other information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Anaesthetists

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the shortages of qualified anaesthetists in NHS trusts. [20325]

Mr. Malone: Representations have been received from various trusts and the Royal College of Anaesthetists.

I recently announced additional funding of £5.7 million in 1996–97 to provide a significant increase in training opportunities for doctors wishing to become consultants. In anaesthetics, the increase for 1996–97 is substantial and regional postgraduate deans will be expected to target the available resources on those specialities such as anaesthetics which are most in need.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many questions were tabled to his Department in each Session since 1987–88; and how many were not answered on the grounds of disproportionate cost; what percentage of the total number of questions this represented; how many were not answered on the grounds that the information was not centrally available; and what percentage of the total number of questions this represented. [21145]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health was not formed until July 1988, so information is not available for the Session 1987–88. The number of questions answered since the 1988–89 Session are shown in the table.

Session	Number of questions
1988–89	3,311
1989–90	4,588
1990–91	3,072
1991–92	1,523

Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 12 December 1994, Official Report, cols. 470–71, for information on replies stating that information is not held centrally, for the 1989–90 to 1993–94 Sessions.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 1 February 1995, Official Report, column 722, for information on replies stating that information could not be provided on grounds of disproportionate cost, for the 1989–90 to 1993–94 Sessions.

Information for the 1988–89 and 1994–95 Sessions is shown in the table

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average cost of answering an (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary question from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each Session since 1989–90. [21796]

Mr. Horam: This Department does not collect the information in the form requested.

Drug Prescribing (Taxol)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines apply in respect of consultants who wish to prescribe Taxol for the treatment of ovarian cancer but are refused funding for it by their trust or health authority. [20860]

Mr. Horam: Guidance on the rational and cost-effective use of drugs for the maximum benefit of patients takes full account of the need to secure the agreement and commitment of clinicians when decisions are made. HC(88)54 recommends that this input be made through local drug and therapeutic committees.

Paperwork Initiative

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much administrative time per week he estimates his initiative on paperwork in general practice will save each general practitioner. [21011]

Mr. Malone: We estimate an annual reduction of 260 claim forms and 380 prescription forms for each general practitioner, comprising some 17 million forms in total. Time savings in individual general practices depend on how duties are assigned and organised.

Abortion

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions were carried out in each month from January 1995 to March 1996. [21012]

Mr. Horam: The data presented are provisional as they are based on quarterly returns. Data for the remainder of 1995 through to March 1996 are not currently available for release.

	Total terminations performed in England and Wales
1995
January	13,913
February	13,938
March	14,890
April	12,138
May	13,403
June	14,191
Total	82,473

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women died as a result of abortion operations in each of the last five years. [21014]

Mr. Horam: The latest data are available for the years 1989–1993 inclusive.

	Number of deaths (England and Wales)
1989	1
1990	1
1991	0
1992	1
1993	1

The data are presently published in the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys annual reference volume "Abortion Statistics 1993", Her Majesty's Stationery Office publication 1994.

Family Planning

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many appointments (a) at family planning clinics and (b) on family planning domiciliary visits there have been in each of the last five years (i) by region and (ii) nationally. [20880]

Mr. Horam: Information on the number of appointments at family planning clinics and domiciliary visits in each of the last five years is shown in the table.

Breast Cancer Screening

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the breast cancer screening programme pilot project for women aged 65 to 69 years, in East Sussex, will be funded; and what additional (a) local, (b) regional and (c) national funds will be allocated to the pilot project in addition to existing breast cancer screening programme funding in East Sussex. [21677]

Mr. Horam: South Thames regional health authority has made some £700,000 additional capital and revenue funding available for the three years 1996–1999 to undertake the breast cancer screening programme pilot for women aged 65 to 69 in East Sussex. National funding for evaluation, at an amount yet to be agreed, will also be made available.

Tuberculosis

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the rates of TB for each health authority in England and Wales in (a) 1994 and (b) 1995. [21668]

Mr. Horam: The figures are shown in the table:

New Hospitals

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new hospitals have been built in each of the last six years. [21669]

Mr. Horam: Information is collected on reported major capital projects. I refer the hon. Member to the reply that the then Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, West (Mr. Sackville), gave to the right hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 26 October 1995, Official Report, column 783. In the calendar year 1995, 53 schemes finished on site.

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much each health authority spent on private nursing home provision in each of the last five years. [21643]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not available centrally.

Employment of Children

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the results of the recent consultation paper on the employment of children. [20138]

Mr. Bowis: We have received an encouraging number of responses to the consultation paper and we are now considering these.

Paediatric Units

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the consultant-led in-patient paediatric units in NHS hospitals and the number of patients admitted in the latest year for which information is available in descending order of number of admissions. [20925]

Mr. Horam: The latest information available centrally is contained in the booklet "Ordinary and day case admissions for England, Financial year 1994–95". This shows the number of paediatric in-patients for individual trusts and directly managed units. Copies are available in the Library.

Information on admissions to units in individual national health service hospitals is not available centrally.

Maternity Units

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the midwife and general practitioner-led maternity units in NHS hospitals and the number of deliveries in the latest year for which information is available in descending order of number of deliveries; [20926]

(2) if he will list the consultant-led maternity units in NHS hospitals and the number of deliveries in the latest year for which information is available in descending order of number of admissions. [20927]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Public Transport

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what powers are available to health commissions to subsidise public transport services to NHS facilities. [21500]

Mr. Horam: A district health authority may exercise my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's power under section 2(b) of the National Health Service Act 1977 to do anything which is calculated to facilitate, or is conducive or incidental to, the discharge of a duty under that Act, but only to such an extent as is necessary for the proper exercise of other functions which are its responsibility.

Health commissions will decide in the light of local circumstances whether they may subsidise public transport services.

Children from Former Yugoslavia

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children from the former Yugoslavia have been (a) adopted, (b) taken into local authority care and (c) placed with foster parents in the United Kingdom each year since 1991; and what estimate he has made of the number of children from the former Yugoslavia living in informal foster families in the United Kingdom.[21493]

Mr. Bowis: Adoption figures for England and Wales are collected by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. The figures are shown in the table. Information relating to adoptions in Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively. Figures on the country of birth of children looked after by local authorities or privately fostered are not available centrally.

The numbers of children who were born in the former country of Yugoslavia and adopted by means of adoption orders made by courts within England and Wales were:

1992: 0
1993: 1
1994: 2
1995: 5

(1) These figures do not include any children who were adopted in the former Yugoslavia and who subsequently came to live in England and Wales.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

House of Commons Notepaper

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 18 March, Official Report, column 692, if he will specify the nature and duration of the Wilprint contract. [22132]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The contract referred to in my answer of 18 March is for the provision of judge's stationery and envelopes. The Department places orders with HMSO. HMSO made its contractual arrangements with Wilprint independently of the Department. I have asked HMSO to inform the hon. Member directly of the details of its contract.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied by them. [21860]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Of the Lord Chancellor's Department's advisory bodies, the Insolvency Rules Committee and Land Registration Rule Committee have to be consulted about relevant rules and the Council on Tribunals must be consulted before procedural rules are made for any tribunal specified in schedule 1 to the Tribunals and Inquiries Act 1992 and on procedural rules made by the Chancellor or the Lord Advocate concerning statutory inquiries.

The Government are not required to publish their response to advice from these bodies. Although there is no legal requirement to consult the Advisory Council on Public Bodies, it generally is consulted on legislation affecting public records. The County Court Rule Committee, Supreme Court Rule Committee, Family Proceedings Rule Committee and Crown Court Rule Committee actually make rules and the Lord Chancellor is a member of all but the first.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Interest Immunity Certificate

Mr. Allason: To ask the Attorney-General if a public interest immunity certificate was issued in the case of R. v. Roche at Plymouth Crown Court in July–August 1991. [21692]

The Attorney-General: So far as I am aware, no public interest immunity certificate was issued in this case.

SCOTLAND

Cairngorm Plateau

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department first received a recommendation from his statutory advisers for the designation of the Cairngorm plateau as a special protection area under EC directive 79/409; when he expects to designate this area; and what consideration he has made in the intervening period. [20320]

Mr. Kynoch: An initial recommendation without supporting data was received from the former Nature Conservancy Council in 1987. SPA classification has significant long-term implications for both nature conservation and other legitimate land use interests. Officials have, therefore, been involved in detailed discussions with Scottish Natural Heritage on the scientific case for classification. SNH will be commencing consultations very shortly with owners and occupiers and other local interests. Subject to the outcome of these, I expect a decision on classification to be taken later this year.

Poverty

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to reduce the levels of poverty in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [21101]

Mr. Kynoch: We shall continue our policies of promoting sustained economic growth and helping those in greatest need.

Cervical Smear Tests

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 878, if the women pursuing claims against the Argyll and Clyde health board in respect of the mis-reading of cervical smear slides at the Inverclyde Royal hospital have recourse to the newly instituted complaints procedure; and if he will make a statement. [21691]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The new complaints procedure to which I referred in my answer of 28 February will become operational on 1 April 1996. There will be a transitional period during which existing complaints procedures will run in parallel with the new procedure, and it has been decided that non-clinical complaints, such as those referred to by the hon. Gentleman, received before 1 April 1996 will be dealt with under the old procedures. The women pursuing claims against the Argyll and Clyde health board in respect of the mis-reading of cervical smear slides at the Inverclyde Royal hospital will not therefore have recourse to the new complaints procedure.

Fire Service

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many fire brigades failed to meet the statutory minimum standards for their rescue and firefighting role in 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [21577]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am satisfied that the fire brigades in Scotland are able to meet the nationally recommended standards of fire cover. Her Majesty's inspectorate of fire services for Scotland draws attention to any localised exceptions in the course of its inspections of brigades. It is for the fire authority concerned to take the appropriate action in any such case.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21463]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In procuring goods and services, the Department's prime objective is to obtain value for money from public expenditure. To this end, we encourage and use competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between the contractors or suppliers and their employees, subject of course to any relevant legal requirements. In the case of workplace health and safety, compliance with relevant regulations is a legal requirement for contractors or suppliers although in practice the Department draws the regulations to the attention of any contractors or suppliers whose staff will be working on our premises.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average cost of answering an (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary question from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each Session since 1989–90. [21789]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This Department does not collect the information in the form requested.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what mechanisms exist in respect of a further education college becoming insolvent. [20589]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Provisions in the Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992 allow for my right hon. Friend to make an order for the closure and dissolution of boards of management. Such an order may include provision on the transfer and vesting of property, rights, liabilities and obligations.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (a) which principals and (b) which boards of management of further education colleges have met his Department to discuss the finances of their colleges in the current year. [20590]

Mr. Robertson: Officials maintain regular contact with the principals and boards of management of further education colleges on financial and other matters. Meetings took place with North Glasgow and Clydebank colleges in 1995 to discuss their forward development plans.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which aspects of further education colleges' financial affairs are (a) open and (b) not open to public scrutiny. [20591]

Mr. Robertson: The Further and Higher Education (Scotland) Act 1992 requires the agenda, minutes and papers of board of management proceedings to be available for public inspection, except where it appears to the board that matters should be treated as confidential because of their commercial nature or otherwise. Audited annual accounts are publicly available from colleges and annual reports with financial information are published.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [21829]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All national health service bodies in Scotland have a statutory basis. Health boards and special health boards are statutorily required to admit members of the public to their meetings, unless by resolution they exclude the public to all or part of their meetings for a specific reason, such as security considerations. NHS trusts are statutorily required to hold an annual public meeting and many trusts voluntarily admit the public to their board meetings. The Mental Welfare Commission, the Common Services Agency and the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Scotland are not required to hold any board meetings to which the public are admitted.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) minutes of meetings, (d) agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [21835]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is a statutory obligation on national health service trusts to publish an annual report; all other NHS bodies are required to do so by the codes of conduct and accountability and the code of practice on openness in the NHS in Scotland. There is a statutory obligation on all NHS bodies to publish annual accounts but no obligation on them to publish minutes of their meetings, although many do. Health boards and special health boards are statutorily required to publish the agendas of their meetings. All NHS bodies are required by the codes of conduct and accountability to maintain a register of members' interests.

Dunblane (Shootings)

Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what basis the inquiry into the Dunblane shootings will be established; and what will be its terms of reference. [22729]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The inquiry will be established under the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act 1921. This procedure, which was followed in the case of the Aberfan inquiry, will enable evidence to be taken on oath, as Lord Cullen wishes, and will attract the provisions of the Contempt of Court Act 1981. I propose that the inquiry's terms of reference should be:

> "To inquire into the circumstances leading up to and surrounding the events at Dunblane Primary School on Wednesday 13 March 1996, which resulted in the deaths of 18 people; to consider the issues arising therefrom; to make such interim and final recommendations as may seem appropriate; and to report as soon as practicable."

It is important that adequate preparation time is allowed as this will enable the inquiry itself to be shorter and more focused. I anticipate that, after initial procedure, the inquiry will begin to take evidence in public in June with a view to reporting by about the end of September.

Meanwhile, work will be carried forward within Government to review relevant aspects of firearms legislation, school security and the supervision of adults working with children so that we will be in a position to respond promptly to recommendations from the inquiry.

TRANSPORT

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those rail track renewal and maintenance companies that have been sold to date indicating the sale price, the number of bidders and the successful purchaser. [21221]

Mr. Watts: The table lists those track renewal and infrastructure maintenance company sales which have been completed, or where sale contracts have been exchanged. It would be contrary to the commercial interests of the British Railways Board and the taxpayer to publish price and bidding details at this stage; this could prejudice sales still in progress.

Company	Purchaser
Scotland Track Renewals Company Ltd.	Relayfast Ltd.
Scotland Infrastructure Maintenance Company Ltd.	Track Action Ltd.
Central Track Renewals Company Ltd.	Tarmac Construction Ltd.
Central Infrastructure Maintenance Company Ltd.	GT Railway Maintenance Ltd.
Western Infrastructure Maintenance Ltd.	Amey Railways Ltd.
Eastern Track Renewals Company Ltd.	Fastline Rail Services Ltd.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the track renewal and maintenance companies whose sale is currently being negotiated and, in each case, the number of bidders; [21226]

(2) what is the timetable for the sale of the remaining rail track renewal and maintenance companies. [21224]

Mr. Watts: The British Railways Board is pursuing sales of the following businesses and expects to conclude them over the coming months:

Western Track Renewals Company Ltd.

Northern Infrastructure Maintenance Company Ltd.

Northern Track Renewals Company Ltd.

Eastern Infrastructure Maintenance Company Ltd.

Southern Track Renewals Company Ltd.

South West Infrastructure Maintenance Company Ltd.

South East Infrastructure Maintenance Company Ltd.

It would be contrary to the commercial interests of the British Railways Board and the taxpayer to give the number of bidders for each company at this stage.

Royal Train

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, 1996, Official Report, column 572, on what basis he considers the period of the contract awarded to Wisconsin Central to operate the royal train to be commercially confidential. [21589]

Mr. Watts: The royal train is operated by Rail Express Systems Ltd. under a contract with Railtrack. Details of all Railtrack's contracts with private sector suppliers are a matter of commercial confidentiality between the parties.

Doncaster, Selby and York Rail Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons there was no rail service between Doncaster and Selby and Selby and York on the morning of 12 March. [21730]

Mr. Watts: On the morning of 12 March, the 06.16 service from Selby to Doncaster and the 06.52 service from Selby to York were cancelled due to points failure.

TREASURY

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those areas of executive action where he has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for his decision. [20531]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Records are not kept in the form requested.

Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by his Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21027]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The total number of contracts awarded by the Treasury after competitive tender for the years in question are shown in the table. It is Treasury policy that all contracts with a potential value of over £10,000 be the subject of competitive tender. The total value of orders over £10,000 placed in these years is also given. These relate not only to the contracts placed in the same year but to those continuing from previous years.

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96 (to date)
Total number of contracts subject to competitive tender	36	32	20
Total value of orders of over £10,000 placed excluding VAT (£ million)	6.8	14.0	7.3

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many questions were tabled to his Department in each Session since 1987–88; how many were not answered on the grounds of disproportionate cost; what percentage of the total number of questions this represented; how many were not answered on the grounds that the information was not centrally available; and what percentage of the total number of questions this represented. [21144]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The table gives the number of written and oral questions tabled to Treasury Ministers since 1987–88:

Session	Written	Oral
1987–88	3,244	464
1988–89	2,694	330
1989–90	2,145	338
1990–91	1,465	251
1991–92	859	148
1992–93	2,857	402
1993–94	1,742	217
1994–95	2,031	246
1995–96[1]	677	143

[1] To 10 March.

The analyses sought of questions not answered substantively are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on public services in Wales of measures necessary to meet the Budget deficit criteria for membership of the EMU. [19400]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 18 March 1996]: I have made no such estimates. The Government's plans for spending on public services in Wales reflect the importance they attach to controlling overall public expenditure while shifting more money towards hospitals, schools and the police. The plans help to keep the budget deficit on a clear downward path, so that the recovery will be sustained.

Housing Associations

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from Wirral-based housing associations about the Registrar of Friendly Societies having allowed the establishment of new housing associations with similar names to existing housing associations. [21237]

Mrs. Angela Knight: None.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied to them. [21867]

Mrs. Angela Knight: There are none.

Office for National Statistics

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchquer if he will make a statement about his plans for the new Office for National Statistics. [22582]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The new Office for National Statistics will be created on 1 April. I am today placing in the Libraries of the House copies of its framework document, its first business plan and policy statements on confidentiality, pricing and dissemination and release of data.

The creation of the new office is a significant milestone in the development of official statistics in the United Kingdom. These documents set out its constitution, key policies and future plans, including performance targets for the coming year. They will guide the office in meeting its aims to serve Government and the wider community. I am confident that rapid progress will be made both in the field of national statistics and in the registration activities to be undertaken by the office.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cable Television (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the speed at which cable television will be introduced to Northern Ireland; if telephone services will be available via this cable network; and what assessment he has made of the effect on householders and businesses. [21433]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Cable Tel Northern Ireland Ltd., which was awarded the franchise for the whole of Northern Ireland in May 1995, has committed to offer service to at least 428,000 homes in the province by the end of 2003. The company is expected to build past some 60 per cent. of homes in the franchise by the end of 1999. I am pleased to confirm that telephone services will be available via this cable network, which means that domestic and commercial customers alike will be able to benefit from the choice and competitive prices which are already available to more than 6 million homes in mainland Britain where cable networks pass.

Ministerial Visit (South Africa)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list in the Official Report the names of the business men who accompanied his predecessor to South Africa in July 1994; and if he will list the companies represented by those business men. [21665]

Mr. Lang: The information requested is as follows:

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the average cost of answering an (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary question from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each Session since 1989–90. [21791]

Mr. Lang: This Department does not collect information in the form requested.

Trade Delegations

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list, with location and dates, all trade delegations which took place in (a) 1994, (b) 1995 and (c) 1996 to date, and those which are planned for the remainder of 1996. [21064]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 18 March 1996]: The number of trade delegations supported under the outward mission scheme were 151 in 1994, 184 in 1995 and 49 so far in 1996. In the remainder of 1996, it is anticipated that more than 190 additional supported missions will take place.

I have arranged for a full list of the details of these mission giving locations and dates to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

AST Group, Aylesbury

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investigative action he has initiated into the collapse of the AST Group of Aylesbury under the Companies Act. [21496]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 20 March 1996]: It is not the policy of the Department of Trade and Industry to comment on the affairs of individual companies.

Electrical Goods Supply Industry

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 12 March 1996, Official Report, column 526, (1) what consultations his Department has had with the electrical goods supply industry on the extension of time for the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to report on the supply of certain goods; [21233]

(2) what were the reasons given by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for its application for an extension of time to report on the supply of certain electrical goods. [21232]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission requested an extension because of the complexity of the inquiry. The scale of the exercise is exceptional in terms of the number of referred markets—eight—and interested parties. It is important that all those with a significant interest are given the chance to give evidence to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. Section 55 of the Fair Trading Act 1973 does not require the Secretary of State to consult on extensions given to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to complete reports and he did not do so.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21513]

Mr. Hanley: Records of the number of hours worked by each employee are not kept centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied by them. [21857]

Mr. Hanley: None.

European Commission Publications

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs through which directorate of the European Commission funds are allocated for the production of "Social Europe Magazine"; how much is spent annually upon this publication; upon what authority that money is allocated; upon what basis Mr. Padraig Flynn was appointed editor; if he is consulted about the content of that magazine; whether the statement in that publication relating to the AIDS campaign mounted by CSV Media constitutes European Union policy; and if he will make it his policy to ensure that in future the European Commission publishes only magazines which are essential to its core purpose. [20506]

Mr. David Davis [holding answer 12 March 1996]: The Commission is responsible for the preparation and presentation of Community information and communication policy, for which it has a budget of 78 mecu—£65.6 million—in 1996.

"Social Europe Magazine" is published by Directorate General V of the European Commission. I understand that the hon. Member has asked the European Commission separately about its cost and editorial content, and a reply is in preparation.

I can confirm that it is European Union policy to promote AIDS awareness.

Mrs. Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those magazines, journals, periodicals, and leaflets which are published by each directorate of the European Commission, indicating for each the size of budget, the proportion of that budget which statistically would be represented by United Kingdom contributions and the specific steps which are taken to ensure that his Department is consulted in advance about the content of such publications. [20509]

Mr. Davis [holding answer 12 March 1996]: A list of such publications and their costs will be placed in the Libraries of the House in due course.

The Commission is responsible for the preparation and presentation of Community information and communication policy, for which it has a budget of 78 mecu—£65.6 million—in 1996.

The UK contribution to the EC Budget is calculated on the basis of the whole of the budget and is not attributed to specific items.

The UK gross contribution after abatement to the 1996 EC budget is expected to be 8.8 becu—£7.4 billion. The total 1996 EC budget is 81 becu.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Hampstead Garden Suburb Institute

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what grants were paid to the Hampstead Garden Suburb Institute in each of the last three financial years. [19653]

Mr. Paice: Funding of the Garden Suburb Institute by the Further Education Funding Council for the period from April 1993 to July 1995 was as shown in the answer of 2 November 1994, Official Report, column 1160. The institute's recurrent funding for the 1995–96 academic year has yet to be finalised, but core funding is expected to amount to £127,958.

Capital Spending

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 7 March, Official Report, columns 343–47, on local education authority capital spending, what have been the Government (a) credit approvals and (b) announced total capital allocations to each local education authority in each of the years for which spending figures were given. [20551]

Mrs. Gillan: The data are contained in a number of tables, copies of which will be placed in the Library.

Table 1(A) gives total education annual capital guidelines for the years 1990–91 to 1995–96 inclusive, while data for 1996–97, when several new local education authorities will exist, are given in table 1(B). Table 2 gives details of supplementary credit approvals from 1993–94 to 1995–96. A sum of approximately £42 million will be distributed as SCAs in 1996–97. Comparable data on SCAs for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

A-level Examinations

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students sat A-level examinations in the summer terms of 1994 and 1995 in each secondary school and further education college in England. [21524]

Mr. Paice: The school and college performance tables for the 16 to 18 age group for 1994 and 1995, published by the Department in November 1994 and 1995 respectively, give details of the numbers of students aged 16 to 18 who sat GCE A-AS examinations in each secondary school and further education college in England. They show separately the numbers who sat fewer than two GCE A-AS examinations and those that sat two or more.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those of her Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied by them. [21855]

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not available centrally other than in the relevant statutory provisions. A comprehensive list cannot, therefore, be assured. The Department is, however, aware of the following.

In relation to the national curriculum, section 20 of the Education Reform Act 1988 requires the Secretary of State to refer certain proposals for regulations to the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority, which then reports back to the Secretary of State. That report is published. There is a subsequent statutory consultation on the proposed order or regulations.

In relation to certain procedural rules—for instance, for the special educational needs tribunal or appeal committees relating to admission to and exclusion from schools—the Secretary of State is required to consult the Council on Tribunals.

Section 3(3) of the Activity Centres (Young Persons Safety) Act 1995 obliges the Secretary of State to consult the Health and Safety Commission in certain circumstances before making regulations.

In a number of cases the Secretary of State is under a statutory obligation to consult before making regulations. Such consultation might involve one of the Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies but such consultation is not specified.

Under section 80 of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975, the Secretary of State has power to amend certain sections of the Act by order subject to draft affirmative parliamentary procedure. Section 80(2) requires her to consult the Equal Opportunities Commission before laying any such draft order before Parliament.

Section 73 of the Race Relations Act 1976 makes similar provision in relation to that Act, requiring the Secretary of State to consult the Council for Racial Equality before laying a draft order before Parliament.

Except to the extent described in relation to the national curriculum, the Department is not aware of any requirement placed on the Government to publish its response to advice supplied by the advisory body.

Schools (Access Audit)

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will publish the results of the recent access audit on mainstream schools. [22530]

Mr. Forth: Nationally, some 46 per cent. of primary and secondary schools have wheelchair access to more than 50 per cent. of teaching accommodation. The following table shows the proportion of schools in each local education authority which do so. This information will be useful to local education authorities and schools in assessing where there is a particular need for greater access for disabled pupils. A more detailed analysis of the data collected will be placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Telecommunications Masts and Wind Turbines

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning restrictions there are on the number of telecommunications masts erected in a particular area. [21415]

Sir Paul Beresford: The erection of masts by telecommunications code system operators is subject either to full planning control or the prior approval procedure under part 24 of schedule 2 to the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995, depending on the size and location of the mast. There are no specific limits on numbers.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received from (a) South Somerset council and (b) Ryedale council in Yorkshire about planning applications for telecommunications masts. [21416]

Sir Paul Beresford: In the past two years, the Department has received one representation each from South Somerset district council and Ryedale district council.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the impact of (i) telecommunications masts and (ii) wind farms on the number of visitors to rural areas. [21410]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department has not commissioned or evaluated research of this nature.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to review the section of planning policy guidance note 8 dealing with the erection of telecommunications masts. [21406]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department has no plans for reviewing this guidance. However, we shall shortly be publishing a code of practice on the planning procedures for the erection of masts under permitted development rights. This has been prepared jointly with local authority associations and the major operators who erect masts.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning regulations apply to telecommunications masts which are under 15 ft high. [21413]

Sir Paul Beresford: Part 24 of schedule 2 to the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted development) Order 1995 gives permitted development rights for telecommunications code system operators' masts up to 15 m high, except in protected areas such as conservation areas, national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty, where full planning control applies. These rights are subject to a prior approval procedure which enables a local planning authority to give or refuse approval for the siting or appearance of a mast within 28 days of receipt of an application from an operator.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statutory protection is provided to areas on the outskirts of areas of outstanding natural beauty from (a) telecommunication masts and (b) telecommunications masts less than 100 ft high. [21417]

Sir Paul Beresford: The erection of masts by telecommunications code system operators in these adjoining areas is subject to either to full planning control or the prior approval procedure under part 24 of schedule 2 to the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995, depending on the size and location of the mast. The fact that it is visible from a specially protected area could be a material consideration in a planning decision relating to a mast.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to require companies which erect telecommunications masts to share these masts with other companies. [21405]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department already encourages mast sharing in planning policy guidance note 8, "Telecommunications". It is also a condition of the licences granted by the Department of Trade and Industry to mobile operators that the possibility of sharing an existing radio site must be explored.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent to which satellite technology will supersede telecommunications masts and over what time scale. [21407]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department understands that, because radio frequencies are limited, satellite technology is unsuited to telephone systems which handle a great many calls simultaneously.

Tree Felling

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals he has considered in each of the last five years under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 against refusals of local authorities to grant consent to fell trees; how many of these appeals he has upheld; and how many of his Department's staff are involved in work on these appeals. [21573]

Mr. Clappison: Separate information on appeals relating to felling only is not readily available. However, the table shows all appeals on tree-related matters considered by the Secretary of State under the 1990 Act in each of the last five financial years, and those upheld by him in the years for which figures are available. Work on these appeals forms a part of the responsibilities of several staff in the Department, and especially in the Government offices for the regions. The total annual staff effort currently involved is about 10 person years.

Year	Appeals considered	Appeals upheld
1995–96 (to date)	396	141
1994–95	401	120
1993–94	383	not applicable
1992–93	349	not applicable
1991–92	331	not applicable

Mining and Quarrying Waste

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what joint working groups he has established with the mining and quarrying industries on the subject of mining and quarrying waste. [21735]

Mr. Clappison: There have been two formal joint working groups in the past to look at disposal of quarrying spoil and underground stowage in North-East Leicestershire. Other mining and quarrying issues, including waste, are covered in less formal discussions between the Department, the mining and quarrying industries and other interested parties where necessary as they arise.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average cost of answering an (a) and (b) written parliamentary question form (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members to each Session since 1989–90. [21813]

Sir Paul Beresford: This Department does not collect the information in the form requested.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to enable local authorities to (a) quantify the extent of rough sleeping in their areas, (b) examine the causes of rough sleeping in their areas, (c) analyse the extent to which the needs of the homeless are catered for and (d) review the effectiveness of existing local strategy and the role of the public, private and voluntary sectors. [20874]

Mr. Clappison: It is the responsibility of every local authority to consider the housing needs of all its residents. The current "Housing Strategies" guidance advises local authorities to assess the resources within their area for single homeless people, including authorities' own provision and the contribution being made by others, including the private sector, housing associations, and voluntary sector organisations. The guidance also advises that, to assist this assessment, local authorities may wish to consider undertaking a count of rough sleepers, involving street agencies as appropriate.

The strategy paper "Rough Sleepers Initiative: The Next Challenge", issued by the Government on 4 March 1996 announced that the successful rough sleepers initiative would be extended outside central London to Bristol where a recent single night head count had found 84 people sleeping rough. Twenty-three other local authorities were invited to let my Department know if they would like assistance in undertaking a detailed evaluation of the number of people sleeping rough in their area, including an assessment of current services available. These counts will be undertaken in partnership with local agencies wherever possible.

South Oxfordshire (Computing Services)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the cost to public funds of (a) South Oxfordshire district council's failed contract for computing services and (b) earlier development work by John McLintock's company; [21106]

(2) what reasons have been given by South Oxfordshire district council for terminating the contract for computing services; and what was the original expiry date; [21107]

(3) what severance arrangements South Oxfordshire district council has made with the contractor for computing services; and what payment has been made to (a) the owner and (b) his company; [21108]

(4) if the district auditor has been asked to report on the quality of computing services purchased by South Oxfordshire district council. [21109]

Sir Paul Beresford: These are matters for South Oxfordshire district council to whom these questions should be put in the first instance. If there are doubts about the propriety or value for money for the contract in question they should be raised with the authority's external auditor.

Mrs. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the implications for the privatisation of local government services of the contracting out of computing services by South Oxfordshire district council. [21105]

Sir Paul Beresford: Authorities are free to contract out elements of their computer services subject to their obligations under EU and domestic legislation. As from 1 April 1999, South Oxfordshire district council will be required to subject part of its information technology services to compulsory competitive tendering.

Rateable Values

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on linking rateable value of property to changing house prices. [21281]

Mr. Clappison: I take it that the hon. Member is referring to the banding of dwellings for council tax. The bandings reflect the relativities between the values of dwellings, based on 1991 property values. These relativities are not necessarily affected by subsequent changes in absolute house prices, and the Government have no current plans to review the bandings.

Water Bills

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from individuals and organisations on the payment of water bills by pensioners and low-income households. [21282]

Mr. Clappison: Over the past 18 months my right hon. Friend has received representations on the payment of water bills by pensioners and low-income families from individuals, consumer groups, charities, pensioners' associations and local authorities.

Severn Trent Water (Salaries)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from residents in Conventry concerning Severn Trent Water and the salaries paid to the company directors. [21283]

Mr. Clappison: My right hon. Friend has not received any representations from residents of Coventry about the salaries paid to directors of Severn Trent Water.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with Severn Trent Water regarding the level of salaries of the company's directors. [21284]

Mr. Clappison: My right hon. Friend has not held any discussions with Severn Trent Water about the salary levels of its directors. This is a matter for the company and its shareholders.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for the highest paid employee of Severn Trent Water from 1979 until privatisation (a) in real terms and (b) percentage change from the previous year. [21285]

Mr. Clappison: Information about the salary levels of Severn Trent water authority's board members for the years 1984 to 1989 is given in the annual editions of "Public Bodies", published by the Cabinet Office (Office of Public Service and Science). Salary levels of the authority's chairmen only are given in the 1982 and 1983 editions of this report. Copies of these publications are available in the Library. Comparable information for the period 1979 to 1981 is not available.

Leicester City Council (Home Improvements)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much Leicester city council has received towards home improvements for each year since 1986; and how much its bid for each year was since 1986. [22068]

Mr. Clappison: Since 1986–87, Leicester city has received the following housing investment programme allocations to spend on the whole of its housing programme, a substantial amount of which would have been spent on improvements to both the public and private sector stock. These allocations have been supplemented by expenditure from the council's capital receipts.

£ million

	HIP received	HIP bid
1986–87	13.375	47.735
1987–88	12.909	52.091
1988–89	12.407	57.369
1989–90	9.165	62.037
1990–91	18.320	54.392
1991–92	18.300	54.035
1992–93	19.830	49.416
1993–94	21.545	29.393
1994–95	14.998	22.500
1995–96	9.345	17.400

In addition, the city has benefited from the following additional resources to improve housing stock under the following three programmes:

The estate action programme

1986–87: £0.226 million

1987–88: £0.650 million

1988–89: £1.979 million

1989–90: £2.549 million

1990–91: £1.773 million

1991–92: £3.455 million

1992–93: £2.779 million

1993–94: £1.257 million

1994–95: £2.599 million

1995–96: £5.309 million.

City challenge

1993–94: £1.608 million

1994–95: £0.836 million

1995–96: £0.897 million.

Housing association grant for new rehab units

1986–87: not available

1987–88: £6.062 million

1988–89: £5.809 million

1989–90: £2.713 million

1990–91: £1.512 million

1991–92: £2.348 million

1992–93: £4.362 million

1993–94: £5.078 million

1994–95: £4.051 million

1995–96: £2.051 million.

Information on how these resources relate to the bids for each of the three programmes is not readily available.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what schemes for home improvements have been in receipt of housing grant in the City of Leicester since 1986. [22067]

Mr. Clappison: It is primarily for the city council to determine what schemes grant resources are spent on and the council should be able to provide full information. In the main, these resources will have funded the repurchase of defective dwellings, enveloping, group repair, homes insulation, environmental and other general improvements to the private sector stock in five housing action areas, 10 general improvement areas, and six renewal areas.

Departmental Staff (Salaries)

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff in his Department earn salaries in each band of £10,000 above £40,000 per annum where salary is defined on the same basis as the draft accounts and audit regulations require of local authorities; and if that definition when applied to his Department's staff includes an element for the non-contributory civil service pension. [21880]

Sir Paul Beresford: The number of staff in my Department—excluding Ordnance Survey, PSA Services and the Health and Safety Executive—in each salary band above £40,00 is as follows:

Salary band	Number of staff
£40,000 to £50,000	252
£50,000 to £60,000	90
£60,000 to £70,000	22
£70,000 to £80,000	5
£80,000 to £90,000	1
£90,000 to £100,000	1

Salaries do not include sums due by way of expense allowances, nor any element for the non-contributory civil service pension.

Leicester City Council (Housing Grant)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amounts of housing grant were received by Leicester city council in each year since 1986 as (a) in cash terms, and (b) in 1986. [22066]

Mr. Clappison: In the four years from 1986–87 to 1989–90 the following housing grant was given at the rates of 75 per cent. or 90 per cent. against loan charges for improvements to private sector dwellings in Leicester:

£ million

	(a) In cash terms	(b) In 1986 terms
1986–87	6.782	6.782
1987–88	7.938	7.536
1988–89	8.954	7.968
1989–90	11.284	9.386

From 1990–91 a new financial control system was introduced under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, and for the first time a separate allocation, known as the SCG or specified capital grant allocation, was given for improvements to private sector dwellings as follows:

£ million

	(a) In cash terms	(b) In 1986 Terms
1990–91	4.502	3,466
1991–92	3.198	2.318
1992–93	4.732	3.296
1993–94	4.300	2.910
1994–95	3.089	2.052
1995–96	2.325	1.503

For the three years 1990–91 to 1992–93 grant was given at the rate of 75 per cent. From 1993–94 the rate has been 60 per cent.

In addition, the following city challenge grant was given for the renewal of private sector dwellings in Leicester.

£ million

	(a) In cash terms	(b) In 1986 terms
1993–94	0.328	0.221
1994–95	0.376	0.250
1995–96	0.300	0.193

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied by them. [21856]

Sir Paul Beresford: A list of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department can be found in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1995". A copy is available in the House of Commons Library.

There are statutory requirements for Ministers to consult the Advisory Committee on Hazardous Substances, the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment, the Building Regulations Advisory Committee and the Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council in specified circumstances. Proposals for secondary legislation to effect boundary and structural changes in local government can only be put forward by the Government after the Local Government Commission has made recommendations.

There is no statutory requirement for the Government to publish responses to advice from advisory bodies.

Bradford Metropolitan Council

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has considered the response by the City of Bradford metropolitan council to the notices served upon the authority on 3 October 1995 under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988; and if he will make a statement. [22703]

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend has considered carefully the responses which the City of Bradford metropolitan council have made to the notice served on the authority for alleged anti-competitive behaviour. He has today given the authority a direction under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 for anti-competitive behaviour.

After careful consideration, the Secretary of State remains of the opinion that the authority acted in an anti-competitive manner in awarding a contract for other catering work worth £112,516 to its in-house direct labour organisation. He considers that the authority required tenderers to have in place systems based on BS5750. He considers that the authority has not been able to demonstrate satisfactorily that the performance bond level was not too high. He is also of the belief that the authority did not consider a full analysis of the ways the contract could have been packaged and that such an analysis would have demonstrated the varying benefits to the authority from adopting different ways of tendering the work. He also notes that, contrary to the advice in paragraph 9 in the Department's circular 10/93, bidders were not allowed to bid for only parts of the contract.

The direction given to the City of Bradford metropolitan council requires the authority to retender the work so that new arrangements are in place by 1 August 1997. The authority will need to obtain the Secretary of State's permission if it is intended to award the work in-house and to consult the British Hospitality Association before drawing up the new contract specification.

Duty of Care (Code of Practice)

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to revise the code of practice on the duty of care; and if he will make a statement. [22704]

Mr. Clappison: Following public consultation, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment, for Wales and for Scotland have today issued a revised duty of care code of practice under section 34 of part II of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

The code of practice gives practical guidance to all waste holders on how to discharge their responsibilities under the duty of care. It has been revised to take into account changes to waste management legislation since it was first published in 1991 and in order to provide specific guidance to the metal recycling industry.

The duty of care applies to any person who produces, imports, carries, keeps, treats or disposes of controlled waste. It obliges waste holders:

to prevent the escape of waste in their control;

to transfer it only to someone who is legally authorised to accept it; and to ensure that it is recovered or disposed of lawfully by others.

Parties to any waste transfer must complete, sign and keep a transfer note which provides a "cradle to grave" audit trail of the waste transferred.

The code of practice is admissible as evidence in court in prosecutions for breach of the duty of care. Breach of the duty is an offence with a penalty of an unlimited fine if convicted on indictment.

As required by section 34(9) of the 1990 Act, a copy of the revised code of practice is being laid before the House and placed in the Library of the Houses.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will publish their response to the first report by the Environment Committee into the single regeneration budget. [22705]

Mr. Curry: The Government are today publishing their response. Copies of the response have been placed in the Library of the House.

North Lincolnshire District Council

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he is making to enable payment of the first instalments of grant under section 88A of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 to recompense North Lincolnshire district council for the income forgone as a consequence of the transitional reduction of council taxes under the Local Government Changes for England (Council Tax) (Transitional Reduction) Regulations 1996—S.I. 1996 No. 176 as amended by S.I. 1996 No. 333. [22706]

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend has already announced that some £2.182 million is to be paid to North Lincolnshire under section 88A of the Local Government Finance Act 1988. Parliamentary approval of this new expenditure is being sought in the 1996–97 main supply estimates for the local government and planning, England vote, class VI, vote 4. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure of £0.8 million on the first instalments of grant to the new North Lincolnshire district council will be met by a repayable advance from the contingencies fund.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Car Travel Expenses

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many hon. Members who claim car mileage allowance as set out in his answer of 17 July 1995, Official Report, column 914, only claim one rate at each of the three dates. [19268]

Mr. Newton: The Fees Office has advised me that the breakdown of the 478 Members who claimed only one rate at that date is as follows:

a) 11 Members claimed rate 1

b) 150 Members claimed rate 2

c) 317 Members claimed rate 3.

Dr. Jones: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his letter of 9 November, what was the total cost of car travel expenses claimed in 1994–95 by (a) hon. Members claiming only rate 3, (b) hon. Members claiming only rate 2 and (c) hon. Members claiming both rates 2 and 3. [19264]

Mr. Newton: The Fees Office has advised me that the costs of car travel expenses claimed for standard journeys in 1994–95 are as follows:

(a) £4,207,741

(b) £761.731

(c) £1,169,171.

Divisions

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the largest number of votes cast in a Division in the House since 1966. [20071]

Mr. Newton: This information is not held in the form requested, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Members' Salaries and Pensions

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will request the chairman of the Senior Salaries Review Body to present an interim report on hon. Members' salaries and pensions by 31 May if the report is to be published after that date. [21247]

Mr. Newton: The chairman of the Senior Salaries Review Body has been asked to aim to complete the review in time to make recommendations at the end of June. It would not be reasonable to ask the SSRB to produce a report before then.

Children's Act Exhibition

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition of children's art work in London to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [22433]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 24 June to Friday 28 June 1996.

Reflections of Life Exhibition

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to reflections of life to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [22440]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 20 May to Friday 2 May 1996.

House of Commons Notepaper

Mr. Morgan: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, pursuant to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 692, if Wilprint held the contract for the crested notepaper prior to February 1995; and what was the original agreed duration of the February 1995 contract. [22121]

Mr. Beith: Wilprint held the contract prior to February 1995; the agreed duration of the current contract is from February 1995 to October 1996.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 21 March. [20525]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 21 March. [20526]

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Ministerial Committee on the Co-ordination and Presentation of Government Policy

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Prime Minister which non-ministerial individuals, other than civil servants, attend meetings of the EDCP Cabinet Committee. [21588]

The Prime Minister: Some officials from Conservative Central Office and parliamentary private secretaries attend at the invitation of the Deputy Prime Minister, as chairman of this committee. They do not take part in any discussions, but are ready to follow up any issues of a party political nature. In this way, the civil servants present are protected from following up matters that do not properly relate to the presentation and co-ordination of Government policy.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Prime Minister what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21464]

The Prime Minister: For this purpose my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service, on 20 March 1996, Official Report, columns 194–95.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average daily attendance at each of his Benefits Agency offices covering the (a) Doncaster and (b) Mexborough area for each year since 1993, and the current year to date; and what were the staffing levels for each benefits Agency office. [19630]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, The chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 20 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what was the average daily attendance at each of his Benefits Agency (BA) offices covering the (a) Donacaster and (b) Mexborough area for each year since 1993, and the current year to-date; and what were the staffing levels for each BA office.

The information is only available for BA Districts. The Doncaster District comprises of Doncaster West (Castle House) and Doncaster East (St Peters House) offices and the Rother and Dearne District comprises of Goldthorpe, Mexborough, Rotherham North, Rotherham South and Wath on Dearne offices.

Annex A gives details of average daily attendance at each District and Annex B gives details of the staff in post at the dates indicated in the table.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Annex A: Average daily attendance at Doncaster and Rother and Dearne districts

	Number
1993–94

Child Support Agency

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Child Support Agency clients are paying in maintenance more than (a) £400, (b) £500 and (c) £900 a month. [20887]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. David Atkinson, dated 20 march 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency maintenance assessments.

Information is not available on the number actually paying maintenance. However, a statistically valid sample of live cases on the Child Support Computer System in August 1995 provided the following figures relating to the amount of full maintenance assessments;

CSA clients assessed to pay	Number
Over £400 per month	4,420
Over £500 per month	940
Over £900 per month	0

I hope this is helpful.

Benefit Payment Card

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure that information currently contained in the pension book will be preserved and improved with the proposed new benefit payment card system with particular reference to (a) a permanent record of pension payments received, (b) details of how the pension is made up, (c) clear information on the amount due and the date available, (d) information on change of circumstances and (e) details of claiming income support. [11750]

Mr. Heald [pursuant to his reply, 31 January 1996, c. 947]: I am advised that Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, is writing again to clarify his reply of 31 January 1996.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 20 March 1996:

I am writing to clarify the information provided to you in my letter of 31 January 1996 in response to your Parliamentary Question. You asked the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure that information currently contained in the pension book will be preserved and improved with the proposed new benefit payment card system with particular reference to (a) a permanent record of pension payments received, (b) details of how the pension is made up, (c) clear information on the amount due and the date available, (d) information on change of circumstances and (e) details of claiming Income Support (IS).

The potential service suppliers have been asked to produce a receipt which will only include the following information; details of the type(s) of benefit paid, the amount(s) payable and the due date and the date of payment, but not the date of the last payment(s) made, as indicated in my earlier reply. As I explained in my earlier letter, customers should have no difficulty keeping a record of payment collected from the post office as a receipt will be given and the facility to request a full statement of the benefit account will be retained. This statement will be available on request from the local benefits office.

I hope this explains the position and I apologise for any confusion.

War Pensions

Sir Peter Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many service personnel were awarded war pensions (a) between 1967 and 1987 and (b) since 1987; how many in (a) and (b) were awarded war pensions owing to disabilities or injuries sustained on active service; and how many in (a) and (b) were awarded war pensions for asbestos-related conditions. [21529]

Mr. Heald: The estimated number of war disablement pensions or lump sum gratuities awarded is as follows:

(a) between 1967 and 1987–76,000

(b) since 1987–297,770.

These figures include awards made to other groups such as civilians and mercantile mariners who sustained qualifying injuries since records of awards made solely to ex-service personnel for disablement due to service in the armed forces are not available.

The other information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

National Disability Council

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the minutes of the first meeting of the Government's new National Disability Council will be published. [21592]

Mr. Burt: This is a matter for the National Disability Council.

Departmental Staff (Working Homes)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21509]

Mr. Burt: Records of the number of hours worked by each employee are not kept centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

War Pensions Agency Helpline

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a breakdown of the lost incoming telephone calls recorded by the War Pensions Agency. helpline for each month since it was introduced. [21274]

Mr. Heald: This is a matter for Mr. Kevin Caldwell, chief executive of the War Pensions Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from K. C. Caldwell to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 20 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the number of lost incoming telephone calls recorded by the War Pensions Agency Helpline since it was introduced.

Although a Helpline has been in existence since February 1992, information on lost calls has only been available since we upgraded our telephone system in February 1994. The enclosed table shows the number of calls lost each month since then. These figures do not reflect the number of people attempting to contact us because enquirers often call back later if they cannot get through quickly at the first attempt.

The number of calls received by the Helpline rose significantly during 1995 for a number of reasons. We introduced a new computer system, reorganised the way we work and moved to a new building. All this is aimed at securing a better, more cost effective service but there have been some issues arising from the changes which have resulted in many pensioners contacting the Agency for a variety of reasons. There was also the special exercise in restoration of War Widow's Pensions to those widows who had remarried after the death of their first husband and subsequently became widowed again or divorced/legally separated.

Extra staff were drafted in to answer calls and our telephone system was upgraded further to divert automatically to an answerphone calls which have not been answered within 30 seconds. A message can then be left and the call is returned. These measures have led to a gradual reduction in lost calls since their peak in October 1995 and we are working to reduce lost calls to the pre-1995 level.

I hope you find my reply helpful.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied by them. [21864]

Mr. Burt: Except in circumstances prescribed in section 173 of, and schedule 7 to, the Social Security Administration Act 1992, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is required to refer proposed regulations to either the Social Security Advisory Committee or the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council for consideration and advice. If the committee reports on proposed regulations, he is required to lay before Parliament its report with his response to any recommendations when he lays the relevant statutory instrument.

Motability Scheme

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if, under the proposed Social Security (Disability Living Allowance) Amendment Regulations, hospital patients will be able to joint the waiting list for the hire or purchase of a vehicle through the Motability scheme while in hospital; [16623]

(2) what factors led to the decision to protect, under the proposed Social Security (Disability Living Allowance) Amendment Regulations, payments of the disability living allowance mobility component payable directly only to Motability when the agreement still has a period to run after a claimant has been admitted to hospital. [16709]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: Under the proposed legislation, which would align payment arrangements of the mobility component of disability living allowance with those of the DLA care component for people in hospital, people entering hospital with Motability agreements would have those agreements protected. This decision recognises that access to the Motability scheme depends entirely on payment of the higher rate mobility components of DLA—sufficient to meet the terms of the agreement—by the Department direct to Motability Finance Ltd.

The proposed changes would not prevent someone in hospital who expects to be discharged, from applying for a vehicle or wheelchair through the Motability scheme. Although payment of the benefit ceases during periods of hospitalisation, entitlement to the benefit continues. It would be for Motability to decide whether to accept such applications.

DEFENCE

Boarding School Allowances

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost to his Department for children whose parents have claimed boarding school allowances in (a) autumn term 1995 and (b) in spring term 1996 at (i) Finborough, (ii) Rodney and (iii) Lime House schools. [22024]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 14 March, Official Report, column 680, concerning Finborough, Rodney and Lime House schools. Information concerning how much my Department pays in boarding school allowance in respect of particular schools is not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Works of Art

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what disciplinary action has been taken or is planned against officials in his Department who moved works of art without official permission. [20836]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Moving works of art without official permission is not a specific disciplinary offence. Officials are warned that loans could be withdrawn if works of art are moved without official permission. Disciplinary action could arise if a work of art were damaged or lost as a result of being moved without permission.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list those works of art which have been loaned or which are currently on loan to Ministers or former Ministers; and how such loans are authorised; [20833]

(2) if he will list those works of art which have been loaned to members of the Defence Council; and how such loans are authorised. [20832]

Mr. Arbuthnot: A list of works of art on loan to the offices of current ministers and other members of the Defence Council has been placed in the Library of the House. To list the works of art loaned to other Ministers, while in office, would incur disproportionate cost.

Ministers and other Members of the Defence Council are entitled to borrow works of art from the Government art collection, subject to their conditions of loan, and from my Department's own collection. Other collections and museums may lend works at their own discretion.

Royal Navy Vessel Procurement

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to replace the Royal Navy's coastal survey vessels; which yards have been invited to tender for new vessels; when such tenders are due to be returned; what estimate he has made of the cost per ship; and when it is intended they will enter service. [21701]

Mr. Arbuthnot: In addition to the ocean survey vessel, HMS Scott, which was ordered in January 1995, my Department is currently considering plans to procure further survey vessels. I expect to be in a position to initiate discussions with industry later this year with a view to inviting tenders for a competitive procurement around the end of the year leading to an order later in 1997. I am not in a position to release estimates of cost as this information is commercially sensitive.

Foxhounds

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria his Department has set for the registering of packs of foxhounds which hunt on their land; and if such packs must also be recognised by the Masters of Foxhounds Association. [21756]

Mr. Soames: Foxhunting on the defence estate is regulated by the issue of licences to those hunts which are officially recognised and accepted by the committee of the Master of Foxhounds Association. The licence is issued to a hunt representative who must be a member of the Master of Foxhounds Association.

The registration of packs of foxhounds in the foxhound kennel stud book is a matter for the master of the hunt.

Upholder Class Submarines (Disposal)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the four Upholder class submarines currently at Barrow-in-Furness; and if he will make a statement on the steps he is taking to ensure that their disposal represents the best value for money to public funds. [22022]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The four Upholder class submarines are currently being marketed for sale or lease to a number of friendly countries. The cost of marketing is regularly assessed against the likely return to Her Majesty's Government to ensure that it is cost-effective.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about negotiations with foreign countries with which his Department is involved with regard to disposal of the four Upholder class submarines. [22023]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My Department is currently engaged in negotiations with the Governments of several friendly nations interested in acquiring the Upholder class submarines.

United States Bases

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the United States bases in the United Kingdom which are covered by (a) leases, (b) security of tenures and (c) other arrangements. [21842]

Mr. Soames: Bases are made available for use by United States forces in accordance with the NATO status of forces agreement of 1951 and confidential arrangements between the Governments of the United Kingdom and of the United States of America. It is not our practice to comment on the details of such arrangements.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what approaches he has received from (a) the US Government and (b) the US armed forces to renew the security of tenure arrangements at (i) Menwith Hill station and (ii) other US bases in the UK. [21850]

Mr. Soames: The administration arrangements governing the basing of United States forces at RAF Menwith Hill are confidential between the Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States of America. These include the security of tenure correspondence which applied solely to Menwith Hill.

RAF Brawdy

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United States personnel work at RAF Brawdy; and how many of them are employed by the National Security Agency of America. [21844]

Mr. Soames: None.

Menwith Hill Station

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the planned numbers of United States military personnel at Menwith Hill station will be in (a) the coming year, (b) the next three years and (c) the next five years. [21846]

Mr. Soames: It is not our policy to give details of personnel assignment.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) United States, (b) British and (c) Government communications headquarters personnel currently work at Menwith Hill station. [21848]

Mr. Soames: There are currently approximately 1,200 United States and 600 UK personnel employed at RAF Menwith Hill. This includes a significant GCHQ presence. It is not Government policy, however, to give more detailed information on the deployment of GCHQ staff.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) which members of the Intelligence and Security Committee visited Menwith Hill station; if the Committee took (a) oral and (b) written evidence before its visit; who the Committee met during the visit; what report the Committee plans to make about work undertaken at the station; and if he will make a statement; [21839]

(2) when the Intelligence and Security Committee visited Menwith Hill station; what was the purpose of its visit; if the proposal that Menwith Hill station should become an RAF station was discussed; who invited the Committee to visit; how long the visit lasted; to what parts of the station the Committee was denied access; what was the outcome of the visit; and if he will make a statement. [21840]

Mr. Soames: It is not the Government's practice to disclose details of the Intelligence and Security Committee's business. The Committee itself does this through its annual report to the Prime Minister which he lays before Parliament; the publication of other reports is dependent on their content.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into links between the operations of Menwith Hill station and local incidence of cancer. [21841]

Mr. Saomes: My Department has neither commissioned nor evaluated any such research. Health issues affecting the local population are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are taken to ensure that operations at Menwith Hill station (i) comply with the Interception of Communications Act 1985 and (ii) do not intercept the communications of British businesses. [21843]

Mr. Soames: All interception of communications on public telecommunications networks in the UK is subject to the provisions of the Interception of Communications Act 1985. It is not Government policy to comment on the detailed operations of the intelligence and security agencies.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what new building and construction work has been carried out or commissioned, at Menwith Hill station over the last six years; at what cost; to whom and what further work is planned over (a) the next year, (b) three years and (c) five years. [21845]

Mr. Soames: Over the past six years, there has been a variety of new building and construction work at RAF Menwith Hill including new radomes and operational structures as well as a range of social and domestic buildings including barrack accommodation and water towers. The total cost is a matter for the US authorities. Further planned development of the site will cover a new child development centre, an extension to the chapel, the erection of portable classrooms and extension of security fencing.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many US military personnel have started work at Menwith Hill station since 8 August 1995. [21847]

Mr. Soames: Since 8 August 1995, the overall manpower structure has not changed significantly.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what legal basis the US army occupies Menwith Hill station. [21849]

Mr. Soames: The basis on which the US army, along with other United States forces, is stationed in the UK is contained in the NATO status of forces agreement of 1951.

Redundancy Costs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the costs incurred by his Department as a result of redundancies in each of the three services in each of the last five years. [21886]

Mr. Soames: The "Options for Change" redundancy programme began in financial year 1992–93. In that year, redundancy payments of £232 million were made. In 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96 the payments totalled £509 million, £453 million and £187 million respectively.

These costs are split between the three services as follows:

£ million

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
RN	12	95	75	28
ARMY	209	328	281	16
RAF	11	86	97	143
Total	232	509	453	187

These payments include special capital payments, and early payment of terminal grants, commuted pension payments and the first year's payment of immediate pensions.

Merchant Vessels

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions merchant vessels chartered by his Department to transport troops and equipment to the UN implementation force operation in Bosnia have been inspected under port state control arrangements; and what vessel deficiencies have been identified by such inspections. [22001]

Mr. Soames: Neither of the two merchant vessels chartered for IFOR and used for deployment and sustainment was subject to a port state control inspection during the period of MOD charter.

USAF Lakenheath

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what emergency plans are in place in the event of an accident involving the American nuclear weapons store at USAF Lakenheath. [21851]

Mr. Soames: It has been the long-standing policy of both the United Kingdom and the United States Governments neither to confirm nor deny the presence of nuclear weapons at any particular place or time. Bilateral arrangements for responding to an accident involving a US nuclear weapon provide for a joint response in which US and UK military and civilian personnel would work in conjunction with the civil emergency services.

Recruitment Costs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the costs of recruitment in each of the three services in each of the last five years. [21887]

Mr. Soames: The costs of recruitment in each of the three services for each of the last five years is shown. Total recruitment figures for the Army are not available for the first year as they cannot be identified separately.

£ million

Year	Royal Navy	Army	RAF
1990–91	23.48	n/a	26.33
1991–92	26.83	42.20	27.98
1992–93	19.00	42.60	27.45
1993–94	21.10	48.61	27.60
1994–95	19.50	45.91	27.87

Reservists

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to replace those members of the Territorial Army and Army Reserve who were called out last December and February to support the United Kingdom's contribution to the NATO implementation force in former Yugoslavia. [22650]

Mr. Soames: Work has commenced to trawl for suitably qualified volunteers from the Army Reserve and Territorial Army who are willing to be called out for service in former Yugoslavia, and also to identify those reservists currently called out who are prepared to extend their period of service.

Munitions Dumping

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 March, Official Report, columns 510–11, what was the use of Bedenham quay in Hampshire in munitions dumping exercises; how long it was in use for those purposes; and what was the volume and type of material which was dumped in each area. [21954]

Mr. Soames: I am not aware of any surviving records that document any past sea dumping of munitions from Bedenham jetty, now part of the Royal Navy armaments depot, Gosport.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 11 March, Official Report, columns 510–11, what radioactive waste emanating from military establishments has been dumped or loose dumped into the English channel. [21955]

Mr. Soames: Details of the UK's sea disposal programme for low and intermediate-level radioactive wastes, including very low-level contaminated sludges generated by MOD establishments and disposed of at Hurd deep, were contained in a report commissioned by the Department of the Environment titled "Report of the Independent Review of Disposal of Radioactive Waste in the Northeast Atlantic" published in November 1984.

Boi de Mai Residence

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's asking price for the official service residence Boi de Mai; what was the original purchase price; in what year the property was purchased by his Department; and what was the total amount spent by his Department on improvements to the residence. [21964]

Mr. Soames: Boi de Mai was purchased in November 1992 and furnished for £2.4 million. The price of the house was £1.9 million. The economic recession in western Europe has affected the Belgian residential housing market. As a consequence, our agents advise an unfurnished asking price of £1.565 million. These prices are calculated at the Government accounting exchange rate prevailing at the time. A total of £683,000 was spent on improvements and maintenance to the property. This figure includes an initial refurbishment and "get you in" package of some £235,000—including the installation and subsequent repairs of a security system. Some £150,000 was also spent on other furnishings which will be removed.

Empty Quarters

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of empty Ministry of Defence quarters in southern England (a) by county and (b) by shire district or borough at the latest available date. [21381]

Mr. Soames: My Department has 4,976 empty family quarters in southern England. Of these, 558 are to be modernised, 1,454 have been identified for disposal, 316 are to be demolished and 630 are allocated for incoming service families.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Houses (Opening Hours)

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce legislation to allow public houses to stay open later. [21296]

Mr. Kirkhope: We are currently considering the scope for relaxing evening licensing hours. Any proposals for extending existing hours would be subject to public consultation.

Buckley Hall Prison

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the responsibilities of the Home Office representatives that are at present at Buckley Hall prison in relation to the decision to grant a prisoner a period of release on temporary licence under (a) prison rules and (b) young offenders institution rules; and if the responsibilities of a governor of a privately run prison are identical to those of a governor of a prison directly run by the Prison Service in making a decision to grant a prisoner a period of release on temporary licence under (a) and (b). [21882]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 21 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the respective responsibilities of the Home Office Controller and the Director of a privately-managed prison with regard to granting a prisoner release on temporary licence.

The decision to grant a prisoner a period of release on temporary licence under the Prison Rules or Young Offender Institution Rules is a matter for the Secretary of State. In practice, this will normally be taken on his behalf by the governor of the prison or, in the case of a contracted-out establishment, the Home Office Controller.

Any recommendation to grant a period of temporary release is passed to the Controller for authorisation. The Controller must be satisfied that the systems in place, to allow a risk assessment to be undertaken on all prisoners applying for temporary release, fulfil all contractual requirements.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what investigations the Prison Service has carried out into Buckley Hall prison; what information on these is in the public domain; what investigations are currently being carried out; and if details of these investigations will be made public. [21888]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 21 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about investigations the Prison Service has carried out into Buckley Hall prison; the information which is in the public domain; the investigations which are currently being carried out; and whether details of these investigations will be made public.

The Prison Service Controller has carried out six investigations. These dealt with: (a) an allegation that a member of staff had threatened a prisoner; (b) a member of staff had allegedly assaulted a prisoner; (c) the escape of a prisoner from within the prison; (d) an attempted escape; (e) an escape from an escort; and (f) a hospital break-in by prisoners. All the reports were submitted to the area manager. None are in the public domain and there is no intention to make such reports available.

Group 4 are currently examining the number and type of temporary release failures as a normal response to such incidents. Any report produced will also be for internal use only.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the objects that were stolen from the hospital in Buckley Hall prison following the break-in by prisoners in August 1995; and if he will list the objects that were subsequently recovered. [21891]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 21 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question requesting a list of objects stolen from the hospital at Buckley Hall prison following a break-in by prisoners in August 1995, and a list of the objects subsequently recovered.

The items stolen by prisoners from the hospital at Buckley Hall were:

Valium 2mg x 1000 tablets

Valium 5mg x 300 tablets

Coproxamol x 300 tablets

Diamorphine 5ml x 2 ampules

Temgesic x 28 tablets

DF118 x 460 tablets

Amitriptyline 50ml.

Many of the tablets are believed to have been recovered as a result of later cell searches. it is not possible to identify whether all the tablets recovered were stolen from the hospital or, if some were tablets issued to prisoners which they had failed to take.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many failed escape attempts have occurred at Buckley Hall prison since its opening; and what is the national average over the same period of time for male category C training prisons. [21889]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 21 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking how many failed escape attempts have occurred at Buckley Hall prison since its opening; and what is the national average over the same period of time for male category C training prisons.

Between its opening on 14 February 1992 and 29 February 1996, there have been three reported failed escape attempts from Buckley Hall prison by individual prisoners. In the same period, the reported average for the category C training estate is 1.68.

These figures refer to failed escape attempts from within the prison and exclude escorts.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the recorded number of assaults on prison officers at Buckley Hall prison since its opening; and what is the average number for male category C training prisons over the same period. [20919]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 21 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking for the latest figures of assaults on prison officers for Buckley Hall and all male category C training prisons.

The attached table provides provisional information on the number of assaults on staff of all grades, including prison officers, during the period January 1995 to February 1996.

The details of assaults on prison officer grades alone would only be available at disproportionate cost.

Number and rates of assault on staff[1] per 100 population
January 1995–February 1996

	Assaults on staff[1,2]
	Number	Rate per 100 population
1995
Buckley Hall	16	7.1
Male cat. C training prisons	322	2.5
January–February 1996
Buckley Hall	1	[3]1.8
Male cat. C training prisons	60	[3]2.7

[1] Includes assaults on staff of prison officer grade or another member of staff.
[2] Provisional.
[3] Based on population for end January 1996.

Fine Defaulters

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of sentence of a fine defaulter. [21114]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Anne Campbell, dated 21 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, what is the average length of sentence of a fine defaulter.

The average custody period imposed on prisoners received in 1995 for non-payment of a fine was about 17 days.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently in prison for (a) non-payment of fines, (b) non-payment of the community charge and (c) non-payment of council tax. [21244]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Gerry Steinberg, dated 21 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, how many people are currently in prison for (a) non-payment of fines, (b) non-payment of the community charge and (c) non-payment of council tax.

The latest available information is for 31 January 1996. On that date there were 358 persons in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales for non-payment of a fine and 42 for non-payment of community charge. No persons were recorded as being in custody for non-payment of council tax.

Fire Service

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of maps of the areas covered by each of the London, Birmingham, Manchester, Liverpool, Newcastle, Leeds and Bristol fire authorities showing the risk areas together with their minimum statutory response requirements. [21534]

Mr. Sackville: No. Categorisation of fire risk within a particular brigade area is a matter for the local fire authority concerned.

Replica Weapons

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions have been achieved since the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 came into force for possession of replica weapons as part of a criminal activity; and if he will make a statement. [21711]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 March 1996]: The Firearms (Amendment) Act 1994, which came into force on 21 September 1994, introduced a new offence under section 16A of the Firearms Act 1968 of possession of a firearm or imitation firearm with intent to cause fear of violence.

Information held centrally shows no record of any convictions under the aforesaid legislation in 1994. The 1995 data will not be available until the autumn 1996.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the total number of valid firearms certificates in respect of each police district of London for the current year. [21710]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 March 1996]: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The latest figures which are readily available relate to December 1994, when in the whole of the Metropolitan police area there were 9,345 valid firearm certificates on issue.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training is given to police officers in the evaluation of applications for firearms licences; and if he will make a statement. [21712]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 March 1996]: Nationally, all police officers are given training in the firearms administration process as part of their probation. Additional training is provided to those undertaking the evaluation of applications for firearms licences at the discretion of individual chief officers of police. In the majority of police forces, applications are evaluated either by dedicated trained police officers or civilian staff, or by nominated officers who are trained and experienced in firearms issues.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of firearms certificates (a) issued for new applications, (b) which are renewals and (c) which are valid for more than one year in England and Wales for each year since 1985. [21709]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 March 1996]: The latest available information is published in the annual Home Office Statistical Bulletin 'Firearm certificate statistics, England and Wales 1994', issue 11/95, table 1, copies of which can be found in the Library.

New firearms certificates granted prior to 1995 were initially made valid for three years and could be renewed after this time for further three-year periods. Since the Firearms (Period of Certificate) Order 1994 came into effect on 1 January 1995, the order has extended to five years the life of all firearms certificates granted or renewed after that date.

Gun Clubs

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of gun clubs in each local authority district of England and Wales indicating the total number of weapons held in each and the total membership for each year since 1985. [21714]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 March 1996]: There are currently 2,252 gun clubs in England and Wales approved by the Home Office under section 15 of the Firearms Act 1988 in which members may use firearms for target practice without holding a firearms certificate. More detailed information about these clubs could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information is not held centrally on gun clubs which do not fall within the section 15 scheme.

Firearms-related Crime

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he is taking to deal with the problem of firearms-related crime. [13872]

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 15 February 1996, c. 707) I and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland were in discussion with the police service before the Dumblane tragedy about the possibility of a firearms amnesty. It has now been agreed that such an amnesty will take place in England and Wales and in Scotland. The details are being worked out.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied by them. [21853]

Mr. Willetts: This Department responds publicly to reports of some NDPBs, such as the Standing Committee on Standards in Public Life and the Government panel on sustainable development. We are not, however, required by statute so to do.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the membership of the board of trustees of each national lottery distribution body, indicating for each (a) the salary of the chief executive, (b) the staff complement and (c) the overall annual budget; and if she will indicate the figures for (a) to (c) prior to introduction of the national lottery. [17224]

Mr. Sproat: The list shows the membership of the board of trustees of each national lottery distribution body. For the details of salary, staff complement, and overall annual budget, prior to the introduction of the national lottery, I would refer the hon. Member to the answers given on 29 February, Official Report, columns 697–700.

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many persons in her Department worked in excess for 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21582]

Mr. Sproat: The number of staff recorded as being paid for overtime which took their hours worked to over 48 hours in a week is 65, which represents 18 per cent. of the Department's staff.

No records are held centrally, however, of the hours worked either by senior staff not eligible for paid overtime or other staff who choose not to claim overtime, or those on flexible working schemes.

Sports Grounds (Taylor Report)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate she has made of the total cost of implementing the Taylor committee's recommendations on safety in sports grounds over the period 1990 to 2000. [21223]

Mr. Sproat: From 1990 to the end of 1994–95, it is estimated that around £400 million was committed to implementing improvements at league football grounds related to the recommendations of the Taylor report into the Hillsborough disaster. In 1993, it was estimated that, between 1995–96 and 1999–2000, a further £295 million would be needed to complete this work. The latest estimate by the Football Trust is that likely costs will be £358 million. To date, the Football Trust has contributed some £135 million towards the league clubs' costs, funded from a special 2.5 per cent. reduction in pool betting duty that will continue until 2000. A further 0.5 per cent. reduction in pool betting duty was announced in the last Budget, effective from May 1996, which it is estimated will generate an extra £2.5 million to £3 million a year for the Football Trust to grant aid Taylor-related works.

Princess of Wales (Accommodation)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 557, what the Princess of Wales's apartment consists of; what her staff's accommodation consists of; and what accommodation is available in other occupied royal palaces for the princess and her staff. [21360]

Mr. Sproat: Her Royal Highness's apartment at Kensington palace comprises five reception rooms, three principal bedrooms and bathrooms and three ancillary rooms, together with nine staff bedrooms, four bathrooms and shower rooms, five general staff rooms, three offices, and kitchen and utility areas.

Self-contained residential accommodation for Her Royal Highness's staff comprises one flat with a kitchen, bathroom living room and three bedrooms and one flat with a kitchen, bathroom, living room and one bedroom.

The Princess of Wales and her staff have no residential accommodation on the occupied royal palaces estate other than that referred to.

Prince of Wales (Accommodation)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, column 557, what the Prince of Wales's apartment consists of; what non-self-contained residential accommodation is available for His Royal Highness's staff; and what accommodation is available in other occupied royal palaces for His Royal Highness and his staff. [21361]

Mr. Sproat: His Royal Highness's apartment in St. James's palace comprises three reception rooms, one principle bedroom and two staff bedrooms, together with ancillary accommodation.

Accommodation for His Royal Highness's staff comprises three flats and one house at Kensington palace. Two flats have one bedroom and one reception room and one has one bedroom and two reception rooms. The house has four bedrooms, three reception rooms and ancillary rooms.

The Prince of Wales and his staff have no residential accommodation on the occupied royal estate other than that referred to.

Government Art Collection

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many works of art from the Government art collection are currently on loan to each Government Department or office. [20564]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The figures given relate to the core holding only. All works on loan to the Government art collection from public and private collections, all works owned by other Government Departments which the GAC includes on its computerised database to facilitate their administration and care, all works currently on public display in exhibitions and all reproductions are excluded. So too are all works at GAC headquarters—these include works in temporary storage during Government rebuilding projects, works awaiting conservation, photography or framing, works reserved pending transport and installation, as well as those available for reselection. Excluding works in those categories, the current figures for loans to Government Departments and offices from the Government art collection are as follows:

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if she will list by Government Department or office how many works of art on loan from the Government art collection are considered to have been (a) missing and (b) stolen for (i) less than five years and (ii) more than five years; [20562]

(2) if she will list by Government Department or office the number of works of art on loan from the Government art collection that are considered to be (a) missing and (b) stolen. [20563]

Mrs. Bottomley: The Government art collection, under different aliases, has existed since 1898 but it was not until after the second world war that a retrospective, and necessarily inaccurate, manual record of accessions was created. The first project to computerise the accession records and the current locations of works began in 1981. Given the distribution of the collection in, at the peak, around 600 different buildings in 300 cities across the world, computerisation was not completed until 1993. Tracing the consecutive history of individual works throughout the century, using inconsistent and incomplete manual records, has not always been possible and the fate of some may never be established. Thus, numerical accounts of works which have been long lost can only be approximate in that they reflect records which cannot be reconciled rather than actual lost works.

It is also seldom possible to state exactly whether works have been misplaced or deliberately stolen. The table listing the number of pictures considered to be missing and stolen over the past 98 years from the named Government Departments and offices reflects the GAC's best effort to decide the individual circumstances which caused a particular work of art to leave a particular room in a particular building in a particular city somewhere in the world. "Missing" is not an absolute status; it means a work is not in the room where it was last installed and recorded by the GAC. Each year "missing" works are found again, often in legitimate Government locations where they had been moved without GAC authority and knowledge. Efforts to trace works continue until and unless it can be established that they no longer exist.

Six of the 27 works listed below as missing since 1991 were lost during the emergency evacuations of British embassies in Belgrade and Baghdad. The 27 works include no paintings, 20 prints, two photographs and five watercolours. Of the 10 works stolen since 1991, five are prints, four are watercolours and one is a painting.

Millennium Exhibition

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage, pursuant to the answer of the Prime Minister of 28 February 1996, Official Report, column 568, for what purpose and to whom funds will be contributed by the private sector to offset the cost of mounting the millennium exhibition; and what advantages will such donors gain from their contributions. [19571]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer Friday 8 March 1996]: The Millennium Commission makes all decisions entirely independently of Government, and it is for the commission to determine the arrangements for a millennium exhibition. The commission has selected the ideas and concepts for an exhibition submitted by Imagination Group Ltd., and announced on 28 February its preference for the event to be located on the Greenwich peninsula site. The commission has made it very clear that it intends that an exhibition would be funded by a combination of private sector funds alongside a commission grant. The commission has stated that it will need to be fully satisfied as to the firm commitment of the private sector support and viability of the whole project before a final grant decision will be taken. This work is currently in progress, and it would be inappropriate for me to comment on the details of private sector involvement while negotiations are taking place.

The commission is inviting Sir Peter Levene to examine the work completed to date and the work which Imagination, in conjunction with British Gas—the owners of the site—and English Partnerships, to develop the final details of the project to the point where private sector funding is committed.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list those of her Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied by them. [21861]

Mr. Sproat: The answer is (a) None; and (b) None.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mitchell Commission

15. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress towards implementation of the Mitchell commission recommendations. [20423]

Sir John Wheeler: The Government have welcomed and accepted all the international body's recommendations, and has called on others to do the same. In particular, the Anglo—Irish communiqué of 28 February states that all parties

"would need to make clear at the beginning of discussions their total and absolute commitment to the principles of democracy and non-violence set out in the report of the International Body".

They would also need to address, at that stage, its proposals on decommissioning.

Children Order

16. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the impact the proposed reduction in the health and social services budget on the implementation of the children order. [20424]

Mr. Moss: The proposed reduction in the health and personal social services budget will have no detrimental impact on the implementation of the Children (Northern Ireland) Order. Indeed, I am pleased to say that redeployment of the reductions will enable me, among other things, to make available £4.928 million in 1996–97 for this purpose.

Peace Process

17. Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had regarding the system for elections leading to all-party talks. [20425]

27. Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress towards peace. [20436]

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the political leaders in Northern Ireland to discuss the peace process. [20429]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Members to the answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) and the hon. Members for Falkirk, West (Mr. Canavan) and for Lewisham, East (Mrs. Prentice).

International Fund for Ireland

18. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last communicated with the board of the International Fund for Ireland with regard to its operations in Northern Ireland. [20426]

Sir John Wheeler: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the board on 20 November 1995 and has had a number of informal meetings with the chairman of the fund since then, as have other ministerial colleagues. The Government are kept fully apprised of the work of the fund through its advisory committee of senior officials.

Rathlin Island

19. Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to compensate those who will lose their jobs on Rathlin island when the new ferry service is introduced. [20427]

Mr. Moss: It is my understanding that the vessels presently operating the Rathlin ferry service are crewed by their owners and their families. Our legal advice is that there is no liability for compensation for loss of business as neither is viable without the subsidy which we have paid since 1991. When the new service commences, probably in November 1996, opportunities will be created for a number of jobs, both full and part-time, and those presently involved with the ferry service will be able to compete for them.

Illegally Held Weapons

20. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has held recently with the Government of the Republic of Ireland concerning the recovery of illegally held weapons.[20428]

Sir John Wheeler: The Government regularly discusses security matters, including the question of illegal arms, with the Irish Government and will continue to do so as part of both Government's determination to maintain close and effective security co-operation. It would not be appropriate to reveal details of such discussions.

Social Security Fraud

22. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to introduce a strategy to combat fraud in the social security system. [20430]

Mr. Moss: The Social Security Agency is currently compiling a security strategy to tackle social security fraud, excluding housing benefit, the implementation of which will commence in April. The DHSS is also committed to the introduction of a housing benefit fraud strategy by the end of June.

Security Situation

24. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his assessment of the current security situation in Northern Ireland. [20432]

Sir John Wheeler: The announcement on 9 February by the Provisional IRA that it has ended its ceasefire, and the subsequent terrorist outrages, have rightly earned the condemnation of the world. Allied to this, the Combined Loyalist Military Council recently issued a statement declaring it will match PIRA violence "blow for blow".

Against this background, the security forces have introduced additional security measures and have responded in a proportionate manner.

The Government have consistently made it clear that they will not be deflected by terrorism from their determination to work towards a settlement which can win the allegiance of both communities.

Drug Dealing

25. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the influence of drug dealing on violence in the Province; and if he will make a statement. [20434]

Sir John Wheeler: An accurate assessment of the influence of drug dealing on the extent of violent crime is not available. Because of the influence of terrorist groups, victims and witnesses may sometimes be unwilling to make complaints or otherwise assist any form of police investigation. Between April 1995 and January 1996, seven alleged drug dealers were murdered by a group calling itself "Direct Action Against Drugs", a covername for the Provisional IRA. The RUC continues to pursue those responsible and in this it has the full support of the Government.

Economic Prospects

26. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the prospects for the Northern Ireland economy. [20435]

Mr. Ancram: Prospects for the Northern Ireland economy remain encouraging. Employment is at record levels, output and trade are increasing and we would wish this excellent progress to be maintained. Nonetheless, Northern Ireland's economic prospects would be significantly more assured through a permanent end to paramilitary violence.

Dairy Industry

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the dairy industry in Northern Ireland. [20431]

Mr. Ancram: The dairy industry contributes some £275 million or 2 per cent. of Northern Ireland's gross domestic product. There are up to 9,900 people employed on 6,050 dairy farms and 2,800 people are employed in 39 dairy processing plants. Liquid milk accounts for only 16 per cent. of production with the remainder being processed into butter, cheese and milk powders which are marketed world wide. The milk marketing scheme was revoked on 1 March 1995, thus effecting the deregulation of the industry. The average producer price for milk increased by 4p per litre in 1995.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the expenditure of his Department, agencies and non-departmental public bodies on all external consultants including management consultants for each of the years (a) 1979–80, (b) 1989–90, (c) 1991–92, (d) 1993–94, (e) 1994–95 and (f) 1995–96 (i) to date and (ii) as estimated for the whole year; what estimate he has made of such expenditure for 1996–97; and if he will estimate the savings accruing to his Department from the use of consultants in each of these years. [11399]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 25 January 1996]: The information in respect of the Northern Ireland Office, Northern Ireland Departments and agencies is listed.

1979–80: not available

1989–90: £12,996,000

1991–92: £25,239,000

1993–94: £30,382,000

1994–95: £26,388,000

1995–96: £11,190,000[1,2]

1995–96: £17,911,000[2,3]

1996–97: £16,058,000.[4]

[1]To date.

[2]Excludes DED who could only provide information for these years at disproportionate cost.

[3]Yearly estimate.

[4]Excludes DED, DHSS and DENI as estimates for such expenditure has not yet been made.

Information on non-departmental public bodies could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

As consultants are, in many instances, engaged to contribute particular skills to an element of a much larger process it is not possible to quantify savings which such expenditure has resulted in, but in each instance consultants were engaged on the basis of best value for money.

Computers

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all cases since 1987 in which his Department has bought computer capacity from (a) other Departments and (b) the private sector, giving the value of each contract and the name of the private sector contractors. [19451]

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office, Belfast have bought the following computer capacity from:

(a) Other Departments

The Department of Social Security Information Technology Services Agency provide systems relating to income support, unemployment benefit, pension strategy, family credit, disability working allowance, disability living allowance, social fund and child support services to the Social Security Agency and Child Support Agency.

(b) The private sector

In 1991 a contract was awarded to CFM by the Department of Finance and Personnel on behalf of the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments for the provision of a computer bureau and associated services. Other Northern Ireland Departments have also taken out separate contracts with CFM as follows:

Department of Health and Social Services provision of contingency service—commenced 1991;

provision of mainframe bureau services—commenced 1993; provision of a contingency support system for pensions system—commenced 1993.

Department of Agriculture provision of Accounting System—1994–1997.

Department of Economic Development provision of computing services for selected systems—commenced September 1992.

Department of the Environment provision of computerised printing of all communications excluding start of year rate demands—1995–1997.

In addition computer capacity has been purchased from the following:

(1) MVM Consultants, Bristol 1993–1998

(2) Kendrick and Jefferson, Birmingham 1987–1994

(3) Aluset Ltd, Dublin 1995

(4) Kendrick and Jefferson, Birmingham 1996–1998

(5) Datashield, Hoddleston, Herts. 1987–1995.

Individual contract values cannot be disclosed on grounds of commercial confidentiality.

Information from the Northern Ireland Office, London is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Anti-social Neighbours

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the current number of anti-social neighbours; and if he will make a statement. [20527]

Mr. Moss: It is not possible to provide an estimate of the number of anti-social neighbours in Northern Ireland.

Proposals for dealing with anti-social behaviour in the public sector are set out in the housing policy review document published on 19 December 1995, a copy of which is in the Library.

Law Commission Act 1965

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will amend the Law Commission Act 1965 to end the exclusion of Northern Ireland from its remit. [21682]

Sir John Wheeler: No. In my reply to the hon. and learned Gentlemen on 28 February 1996, Official Report, column 574, I set out the arrangements for review of the law for Northern Ireland, which include regular contact with the Law Commission. I am satisfied that the arrangements function efficiently.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in respect of how many new housing benefit claims in Belfast and North Down in 1995 the Housing Executive has recorded the name of an estate agent acting for a private landlord but not the landlord's name. [21683]

Mr. Moss: I understand from the chief executive of the Housing Executive that the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

North Down and Ards Community Trust

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff in the North Down and Ards community trust were employed on six-month contracts; how many have been on such contracts for more than two years; and will he make a statement. [21684]

Mr. Moss: The policy of the trust is to set each temporary contract to reflect the needs of the post. Eighty-nine staff are currently on temporary contracts. Ten of them have been employed for over two years.

Orders in Council (Debate)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 224, for the period since 1 January 1995, if he will list those Northern Ireland Orders in Council debated on the floor of the House. [21685]

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

	Date of debate
Children (NI) Order 1995	8 February 1995
Children (Northern Ireland Consequential Amendments) Order 1995	8 February 1995
Appropriation (NI) Order 1995	8 March 1995
Appropriation (No. 2) (NI) Order 1995	18 July 1995
Appropriation (NI) Order 1996	19 February 1996

Rathgael Centre

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 225, if he will specify the daily average number of residents at the Rathgael centre in Bangor in 1995 and the annual total, by type, and the percentage who absconded in that year, and the range of penalties that can be, and were imposed for going absent without leave; and if he will make a statement. [21686]

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is as follows:

(1) The annual average number of residents on campus at Rathgael in the year from 1 January 1995 to 1 January 1996 was 82. Of this total an average of 53 were the subject of order for care, protection and control and 29 were the subject of orders for offending.

(2) In that period Rathgael had a throughput of 285 children of which 166 were there for care reasons and 119 for offending.

(3) During the same one-year period 144 children—76 care and 68 justice—were responsible for 481 incidents of absconding. This represents an average of 1.3 per day or 1.6 per cent. per day of the average population. These statistics include all those suspected of leaving the campus without permission, even for a very short time.

(4) There is a range of sanctions available to staff to enable them to respond meaningfully to absconding and other misdemeanours. At the lowest level a young person may be given extra chores, lose recreation time, be sent to bed earlier for a specified period, suffer a reduction in pocket money and have restrictions placed on, or even lose, home leave privileges. At the higher level, where there are concerns about physical or moral welfare or where there is evidence of anti-social behaviour or persistent absconding, a child may be sent to one of the on-site close supervision units. In extreme cases a young person may be removed to the secure unit at Lisnevin or to the Young Offenders Centre at Hydebank.

Farm-reared Deer (Hunting)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to review the law on the hunting of farm-reared deer or stags; if he will set out the legal provisions on carting which are specific to Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [21687]

Mr. Moss: I have no plans to review the law on the hunting of farm-reared deer or stags.

Under the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985, it is illegal intentionally to kill, injure or take, without a licence, any species of deer during the close season or at night during the open season. It is also an offence, under that order, to take and remove any live deer at any time without a licence. These provisions do not apply to any person who keeps and breeds deer for the purposes of a trade or business certified by the Department of Agriculture or to veterinary practitioners in the course of their work.

In addition, the Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 provides for the general protection of all animals from cruelty. Under the Act, it is illegal to hunt any animal—other than a domestic animal—which is released for that purpose, if it is released in an injured, mutilated or exhausted condition or the animal is hunted in an enclosed space from which there is no reasonable chance of escape.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied by them. [21862]

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is as follows:

(a) The Drainage Council for Northern Ireland

The Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside

The Northern Ireland Buildings Regulations Advisory Committee

The Statistics Advisory Committee

The Health and Safety Agency

(b) None

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he first issued the export certificate, numbered EC400, for use by local veterinary inspectors to certify calves under the age of 42 days destined for France. [20774]

Mrs. Browning: The earliest available official records confirm that export certificate EC400 was in use in 1977 and applied originally to the export of calves under 15 days of age. It is not possible, however, to establish when it was first used. Records also confirm that the certificate was first used for the export of calves under 42 days of age to France in October 1980.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many consignments containing calves between the ages of 15 days and 42 days were exported on certificate EC400 to France in 1995. [20822]

Mrs. Browning: Precise information on the number of consignments containing calves between 15 and 42 days of age exported in 1955 to France on EC400 certification could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. We believe, however, that approximately 1,800 consignments were exported on certificate EC400 in 1995. An informal analysis of trade during 1995 indicated that the majority of consignments of calves exported to France included calves between 15 days and 42 days of age.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of livestock markets in England and Wales currently meet the approved EU standards for export purposes, such that they would qualify as departure points for calculation of overall journey times; and if he will make a statement. [21826]

Mrs. Browning: The percentage of livestock markets that meets the conditions for EC approval is not known since all livestock markets that want to be EC approved must apply for such status and be inspected by Ministry veterinary staff before approval may be granted.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many consignments of calves which started their export journey at Wix lairage in Essex are under investigation in respect of animal health certification and ear tag irregularities. [21757]

Mrs. Browning: This Department is not carrying out any investigations at Wix lairage in Essex. Enforcement of the legislation governing the health rules for consignments intended for export is the responsibility of the local authority.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the animal export certification procedures carried out by the local veterinary inspector at Wix lairage in Essex. [21758]

Mrs. Browning: Meetings have been held with the local veterinary inspector—LVI—for the Wix lairage in Essex to discuss the export certification procedures. In addition, export health certificates issued by the LVI are checked by local Ministry staff as part of the Department's audit procedures.

Fur Farms

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fox fur farms there are in each county of England and Wales. [21367]

Mrs. Browning: There is no requirement to register fox fur farms. However, I am not aware of any in England and Wales.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licences were issued for mink farms in each county of England and Wales in each of the last five years. [21366]

Mrs. Browning: No licences have been issued in Wales in the last five years. The number of licences issued in England is set out in the table.

Sheep Cloning Experiments

Mr. Alton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what inquiries he has made of the Roslin institute, Edinburgh, concerning the deaths of sheep during experiments into cloning and the excess growth of another animal; if he will publish a full report into the extent of publication of the outcome of the cloning experiments; if he will ban such experiments; and if he will make a statement. [21647]

Mrs. Browning: The Ministry encourages the full publication of scientific results and notes that the original scientific paper in Nature disclosed the deaths of three sheep during a cloning experiment. It is aware that the research team plans the publication of further details on the weights of the lambs at birth. The Ministry is aware of the large birthweight offspring and has commissioned research into this problem.

MAFF is guided by the recommendations of the 1995 report of the committee to consider the ethical implications of emerging technologies in the breeding of farm animals—the Banner report—which endorsed cloning, subject to safeguards. Experiments on animals are regulated by the Animal (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, which is administered by the Secretary of State for Home Affairs.

Selective Breeding

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect of the selective breeding of farm animals on the gene pool. [21480]

Mrs. Browning: The Ministry has commissioned work on the theory of genetics, which included specific studies on the effects of selective breeding of farm animals on the gene pool. The research concluded that any potential negative effects can be avoided by targeted breeding.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensure such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21453]

Mr. Boswell: The Department seeks to award contracts in accordance with chapter 31 of "Government Accounting" and the public procurement rules. In choosing its suppliers and contractors, the Department has regard to the eligibility, economic and financial standing, and the ability and technical capacity of its suppliers and contractors to deliver the contracted goods and services at the contracted charges. Terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between contractors or suppliers and their employees, subject of course to any relevant legal requirements. Compliance with health and safety regulations is a legal requirement for contractors or suppliers.

Ostriches

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans he has to protect the welfare at slaughter of ostriches in the United Kingdom; and on what scientific research those plans are based; [21759]

(2) by what methods and on what premises it is permitted to slaughter ostriches on a commercial basis in the United Kingdom; [21760]

(3) how many farmed ostriches have been slaughtered to date in the United Kingdom; by which method they have been slaughtered; and if he will make a statement. [21761]

Mrs. Browning: There is at present no commercial slaughter industry for ostriches in this country. Although small numbers of birds have been killed on farms in recent years, information on their number or on the methods used is not available. The state veterinary service continues to monitor developments.

The slaughter of ostriches for human consumption in the United Kingdom must be carried out in a slaughterhouse licensed under the relevant Great Britain or Northern Ireland hygiene legislation for the production of poultry meat or in exempt premises which comply with general food hygiene legislation.

The welfare at slaughter of ostriches bred or kept for the production of meat or other products is already protected in Great Britain by the Welfare of Animals (Slaughter or Killing) Regulations 1995, S.I. No. 1995/731. The regulations provide specific controls over the movement, lairaging, restraint, stunning, slaughter and killing of animals and make it an offence to cause any animal, which includes birds, any avoidable excitement, pain or suffering during these operations. The permitted methods of stunning are by means of a captive bolt, by concussion stunner or by electronarcosis—electrical stunning. After stunning, the birds must be bled without delay in accordance with the regulations. Similar regulations will be made in Northern Ireland.

Government-commissioned research into ostrich slaughter is due to provide a preliminary report and recommendations at the end of this month. In the light of the findings of this research, guidance on recommended slaughter practice will be made available to producers.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many ostrich farms operate in the United Kingdom; and what is the current size of the United Kingdom ostrich flock. [21762]

Mrs. Browning: The information is not available. The Ministry's agricultural and horticultural census does not separately identify ostrich farmers or the number of birds they keep. Ostrich farmers must hold a dangerous wild animals licence, issued by local authorities under the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976. I understand that the Department of the Environment, which is responsible for this Act, does not keep a central register of this information.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much ostrich meat was consumed in (a) 1994 and (b) 1995 in the United Kingdom; what were the countries of origin of that meat; and if he will make a statement. [21763]

Mrs. Browning: The information is not available. The consumption of ostrich meat is not identified separately in the national food survey. Only one establishment—in France—has been approved to export ostrich meat to the UK.

Pet Dogs and Cats (Illegal Imports)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of pet dogs and cats illegally imported in each year since 1986; and how many cases of such imports have been discovered. [22070]

Mrs. Browning: No estimates are made of the number of people who smuggle animals into the country undetected. However, figures are available for the number of animals reported as illegally landed since 1988.

Live Animal Transport

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what action he is taking to implement the EU directive on the welfare of live animals in transit in a way that ensures the future viability of livestock markets, including those in Wales, and if he will make a statement on the impact of these measures on farmers dependent on livestock markets; [21824]

(2) when he expects to be able to set out the terms on which the EU directive on the welfare of live animals in transit is to be implemented with particular reference to (a) rest periods and (b) the conditions for allowing time at markets to be discounted from time in transit; and if he will make a statement. [21825]

Mrs. Browning: We are developing our plans to implement this directive in the light of responses to our consultation paper and in full discussion with all those with an interest. We attach particular importance to developing provisions on journey time and rest, for example, which meet the requirements of the directive in a way that recognises the reality of livestock marketing practice in Great Britain. We shall set our detailed plans out in a further consultation document before finally deciding what approach to adopt.

Quarantine

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 727, what were the main recorded causes of death of dogs and cats held in quarantine in the United Kingdom in each year since 1986. [22071]

Mrs. Browning: No information is available on the causes of death of dogs and cats held in quarantine prior to 1995, other than those which died from rabies. The information collected from 1995 onwards shows that the causes of death were varied and no different from those that could be expected in a population of similar animals. Tumours/cancer accounted for around 25 per cent. of deaths. About a further 10 per cent. of the deaths in quarantine were where animals were euthanased at the owners request.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many imported (a) dogs and (b) cats have passed through United Kingdom quarantine in each year since 1986. [22069]

Mrs. Browning: It is possible to provide information only on the number of animals for which licences have been issued permitting their import. Information on the number of animals actually imported into the United Kingdom is not available for this period.

HEALTH

Factor 8

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the quantity of (i) recombinant factor 8 and (ii) plasma-derived factor 8, (a) produced and (b) used annually in the national health service. [19567]

Mr. Horam: This information is not collected by the Department of Health. Figures collected by the United Kingdom haemophilia centre directors, which may be incomplete, show that some 158 million units of factor 8 were used in the UK in 1994. Of the total, 4 per cent. were recombinant, 64 per cent. plasma-based products produced by the national health service and 32 per cent. plasma-based imported products.

Oral Contraceptives

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people died from thrombo-embolic complications arising form the use of the contraceptive pill in each of the last five years. [21013]

Mr. Horam: Mortality statistics are based on the cause of death as stated by the doctor or coroner. It may not be possible for the certifier to link definitely the thrombo-embolic episode to oral contraceptives and consequently oral contraceptives may not be mentioned on the certificate.

The table shows the number of deaths in England and Wales from thrombo-embolic complications, ICD[1] E932.2, stated to be associated with the use of the contraceptive pill in each of the last five years.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what external legal advice he sought on the implications of issuing the "Dear Doctor" letter of 18 October 1995 prior to the issuing of that letter. [20500]

Mr. Malone: None.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to (a) withdraw or (b) amend the advice to prescribers issued in the "Dear Doctor" letter of 18 October 1995. [20501]

Mr. Malone: None.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those members of the Spritzer team of investigators for the trans-national study of oral contraceptives employed to advise (a) the Medicines Control Agency and (b) the Licensing Authority since 18 October 1995 on safety concerns relating to third generation oral contraceptives; on what date they were recruited; what are their emoluments and if they were required to sign the Official Secrets Act. [20502]

Mr. Malone: None were employed.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment the Licensing Authority has made of the dangers of third generation oral contraceptives; and if the authority proposes to license these products. [20511]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the statement that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health made in the House on 23 October 1995, Official Report, columns 701–11. A number of third generation oral contraceptives are currently licensed; applications for subsequent licences will be considered under normal procedures.

Safety of Medicines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many yellow cards have been received by the Medicines Control Agency for each month since January 1994. [20499]

Mr. Malone: The information is shown in the table. A report of a suspected adverse drug reaction does not necessarily mean that the condition was caused by the medicine.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions and on what date or dates since the coming into effect of the Medicines Act 1968 the powers under section 3 (2) (c) of the Act have been used by Ministers to request the Medicines Commission to review the section 4 committees; and if he will not invoke those powers. [20503]

Mr. Malone: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who is the chairman of the Committee on Safety of Medicines for the period 1 January 1996 to 31 December 1998. [20504]

Mr. Malone: Professor Michael Rawlins.

Amphetamines

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make an announcement on the use of amphetamines for sliming purposes. [21053]

Mr. Malone: An announcement is expected to be made shortly concerning the availability for sliming purposes of a range of medicinal products known as anorectic agents.

Osteoporosis

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to take new measures to (a) increase public awareness of osteoporosis and (b) combat the disease. [21519]

Mr. Horam: We are continuing to implement the report of the advisory group on osteoporosis, which was published in January 1995. Work in clinical guidelines is under way, led by the Royal College of Physicians. The Department of Health has increased its financial support for the National Osteoporosis Society, which undertakes a wide range of public and professional education activities and launched a £9 million national exercise campaign on 19 March.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to increase the resources available in the north-west for the early diagnosis and treatment of osteoporosis. [21477]

Mr. Horam: Nationally, health authority general revenue allocations for the financial year 1996–97 will increase by 1.1 per cent. in real terms—£221 million—over 1995–96 allocations. Within these allocations, the provision of local services is a matter for local managers.

Clinical Waste

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the illegal dumping of clinical waste in Hertfordshire in 1995. [21291]

Mr. Horam: I understand that a quantity of clinical waste was found dumped on two sites in Hertfordshire and was cleared and made safe by the local waste disposal regulatory authority. Investigations are being undertaken and co-ordinated by the Hertfordshire county council waste regulation unit in collaboration with other waste regulators and with regional offices of the NHS Executive. Legal action against the contractor concerned is being considered by the waste regulation unit.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary for Health (1) how many of the NHS trusts which contracted for the disposal of the clinical waste found at Hertford checked the incineration procedures to be used by the contractors; [21301]

(2) if he will name the NHS health trusts which contracted with Green Environmental Services to handle infected clinical waste subsequently found dumped at various sites in Hertfordshire. [21292]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally. Investigations by the Hertfordshire county council waste regulation unit continue.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action he has taken to warn the public of the dangers arising from the dumping of infected hospital clinical waste; [21293]

(2) what representations he has made to the chief constables of Essex, Hertfordshire, Bedfordshire and Cambridgeshire about the need to alert their officers to the risk of infected clinical waste in unattended lorry trailers. [21294]

Mr. Horam: These are matters for waste regulation and environmental health authorities. The Hertfordshire county council waste regulation unit continues to co-ordinate the investigation of possible breaches of waste regulations in collaboration with other authorities in Hertfordshire and elsewhere.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the responsibilities of the NHS for the safe disposal of infected clinical waste. [21271]

Mr. Horam: As a waste producer, the national health service is bound by the "duty of care" requirements of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to ensure that clinical waste is properly disposed of, even when this work is contracted out. In particular, each waste producer must ensure that waste is transferred only to an authorised transporter. It must describe the waste accurately, ensure its safe disposal and keep records of waste consignments. It must also ensure that proper documentation is passed to the transporter.

NHS Magazine

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the costs to his Department of (a) publishing, (b) printing and (c) distributing each issue of the NHS magazine. [21384]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 15 January at columns 344-55 for information about production costs/gross revenues for issues Nos. 1 to 3 of the magazine.

Issue No. 4 was published on 13 March. Details of production costs are as follows:

Production (editorial/photography/design/reproduction/print)	49,486
Advertising revenue	25,417
Distribution	12,700

NHS Trusts (External Financing Limits)

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the external financing limits for each NHS trust in the current year; and on how much of this they have drawn. [21177]

Mr. Horam: Trusts do not draw on external financing limits. They meet them through a combination of borrowing and repaying debt, and drawing down or building up cash balances. Their responsibility is to ensure that, at the year end, their total expenditure is within their authorised external financing limit and they report their performance against this objective in their annual accounts which are audited and published.

The current external financing limit for each national health service trust will be placed in the Library.

Social Work Records

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken to implement the proposals on access to social work records set out in his Department's consultation paper of February 1992, following the European Court of Human Rights decision in the case of Graham Gaskin. [21674]

Mr. Bowis: The open government White Paper, Cm 2290, proposed a statutory access right to personal records, which will be introduced as soon as the parliamentary timetable allows. The Government are reviewing the scope for including in this measure provisions to implement the European Court of Human Rights decision in the case of Graham Gaskin.

Surplus and Underused Properties

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number and value of surplus and underused NHS properties. [21645]

Mr. Horam: Most operational national health service property is owned by NHS trusts. No information is available centrally about the number of value of properties identified as surplus by NHS trusts.

The non-NHS trust estate includes 876 properties identified as surplus, or potentially surplus, which will be sold over the next 10 years. They have an estimated open market value of £1.2 billion.

No information is available centrally on the number or value of underused NHS properties.

Asthma

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people suffered from asthma in east Lancashire for (a) 1989 and (b) 1994; and what were the national figures for these two dates. [21644]

Mr. Horam: Information on the number of people in East Lancashire suffering from asthma is not available centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the relevant family health services authorities, which hold some information on the number of people resident in east Lancashire who suffer from asthma.

There are no comprehensive national data on the number of people with a diagnosis of asthma. However, it has been estimated that the prevalence of asthma sufficiently severe to require regular medical supervision is from 4 to 6 per cent. in children and about 4 per cent. in adults. More information is given in "Asthma: An Epidemiological Overview", produced by the central health monitoring unit of the Department of Health and published on 22 March 1995, copies of which are available in the Library.

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21508]

Dr. Horam: Records of the number of hours worked by each employee are not kept centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Nursing and Residential Homes

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data his Department collate on the size of (a) nursing and (b) residential homes. [21646]

Mr. Bowis: The Department collects information on the number of registered beds in nursing homes registered under section 23 of the Registered Homes Act 1984, the number of registered places and residents in residential homes registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984 and the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 respectively and the number of places in staffed and unstaffed local authority residential homes.

More detailed information on these collections is contained—under the entries for returns KO36, RAC5, RAC5(S) and RAU1—in the personal social services statistical information directory, copies of which are available in the Library.

NHS Executive (Redundancy Costs)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the redundancy costs of reducing management and manpower at the NHS executive, Quarry house in each of the last three years. [21723]

Mr. Horam: The costs for the Department of Health's voluntary early severance/retirement scheme for national health service executive staff at Quarry house for each of the last three financial years is shown in the table. There have been no compulsory redundancies in the NHS executive during this period.

	1993–94 £	1994–95 £	1995–96 £
Total cost	0	388,406	3,812,635
Centrally funded	0	310,724	3,050,108
Net cost to DH	0	77,681	762,527

Fraud

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that fraud appears as a separate item in the losses statements of health authorities and trusts from 1 April. [21729]

Mr. Horam: With effect from December 1995 health authorities and trusts were already required to report the value of all frauds to the national health service executive separately.

Physical Activity Task Force

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the work of the physical activity task force has been completed; and if he will make a statement. [22730]

Mr. Horam: The work of the physical activity task force has now been concluded. The Government fully appreciate the valuable work of the task force, from which the Department of Health has developed a physical activity statement. Copies of this statement are available in the Library.

Darlington Memorial Hospital

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future of accident and emergency services at Darlington memorial hospital. [22074]

Mr. Horam: This is a matter for South Durham health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority, Dr. John Marshall, for details.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [21828]

Mr. Malone: All national health service bodies, as defined by the Cabinet Office, have a statutory basis. Health authorities and special health authorities are statutorily required to admit members of the public to their meetings. NHS trusts are statutorily required to hold an annual public meeting and many voluntarily admit the public to board meetings. There is no requirement on the Dental Practice Board to hold any meetings to which the public are admitted.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open Government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [21833]

Mr. Malone: National health service bodies, as defined by the Cabinet Office, are subject to investigation by the Health Service Commissioner (Ombudsman), and scrutiny by both the Audit Commission and the National Audit Office.

The principles of open government are incorporated in the code of practice on openness in the national health service, with which all national health service bodies must comply. The principles of the citizens charter apply to national health service bodies and have been incorporated into the patients charter.

The NHS executive monitors the performance of all national health service bodies.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) minutes of meetings, (d) agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests (i) under the statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [21838]

Mr. Malone: There is a statutory obligation on national health service trusts to publish an annual report, all other NHS bodies are required to do so by the codes of conduct and accountability. There is a statutory obligation on all NHS bodies to publish annual accounts but no obligation on them to publish minutes of their meetings, although many do. Health authorities and special health authorities are statutorily required to publish the agendas of their meetings. All NHS bodies are required by the codes of conduct and accountability to maintain a register of members' interests.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will break down by (a) element and (b) amount the emolument figure paid to NHS trust board members in 1993–94 in the NHS accounts; [22000]

(2) if he will break down the £985,000 compensation for loss of office by board members of NHS trusts in 1993–94 by (a) the number of individuals involved, (b) the amounts, and (c) the trusts concerned. [21994]

Mr. Malone: Information will be placed in the Library on the fees paid to non-executive directors, other emoluments of executive directors, compensation for loss of office and early retirement pensions paid to the directors of NHS trusts for 1993–94. Information on the number of individuals involved is not available centrally.

We do not recognise the amount of £985,000 quoted by the hon. Member.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will break down by (i) trust, (ii) element and (iii) amount the losses and special payments totalling £24,902,000 as set out in the NHS summarised accounts 1994–95. [21995]

Mr. Horam: The information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which NHS trusts no longer recruit senior managers on fixed-term contracts. [20901]

Mr. Malone: The information is not available centrally.

Play Schemes

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has either to suspend or abandon his proposed deregulation of supervised activities and holiday play schemes used by children under eight years of age. [22075]

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 18 March at column 82.

WALES

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those areas of executive action where he has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for his decision. [20530]

Mr. Hague: Comprehensive records are not kept in the form requested. I exercise discretion to act in respect of an individual without a legal obligation to give reasons in the following subject areas, which provide examples of such powers. However, as a matter of practice and in accordance with the Government's code of practice on access to government information, reasons are usually given when there is an exercise of any discretionary power.

The subject areas, with examples are:

1. Agriculture, fisheries and food:

eg section 18 Agriculture Act 1986

section 33(5) Plant Varieties and Seeds Act 1964

2. Industry

eg section 5 Thermal Insulation (Industrial Buildings) Act 1957

3. Employment and training:

eg section 84(1) Factories Act 1961

section 27 Children and Young Persons Act 1933

4. Education:

eg section 99 Education Act 1944

section 5 Education Reform Act 1988

5. Transport

eg section 51 Public Passenger Vehicles Act 1981

section 17(2) Transport Act 1982

6. Housing:

eg section 164 Housing Act 1985

7. Environment:

eg section 15 Environmental Protection Act 1990

section 44 Water Resources Act 1991

8. Health and social services

eg section 123 Mental Health Act 1983

section 86 National Health Service Act 1977.

Ministerial Visits (Nursery Schools)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which nursery departments and nursery schools he has visited. [21132]

Mr. Richards: Since our appointments, in addition to a number of my constituency visits, my right hon. Friend or I have visited the following infant and primary schools, many of which have nursery provision:

Palmerston County Primary School, Barry, South Glamorgan

Ysgol Caergeiliog (Grant Maintained), Anglesey, Gwynedd

St. Giles Infant School, Wrexham, Clwyd

Rhostyllen Primary School Rhostyllen, Clwyd

Pen Barras County Primary School, Ruthin, Clwyd

Ysgol Pen-y-Bryn (Grant Maintained), Colwyn Bay, Clwyd

Ysgol Bro Carmel, Holywell, Clwyd

Llanellen Primary School, Abergavenny, Gwent

Llanfihangel Rhydithon Primary School, Llandrindod Wells, Powys

Bryn Coch County Primary School, Mold, Clwyd

Ysgol Dewi Sant, Llanelli, Dyfed.

Ysgol Llys, Prestatyn, Clwyd.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average cost of answering an (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary question from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each Session since 1989–90. [21787]

Mr. Hague: This Department does not collect the information in the form requested.

Welsh Office Staff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 18 March, Official Report, columns 92–93, how many people were employed at the time of transfer in each of the services transferred out of his Department into other agencies. [22136]

Mr. Hague: The numbers of Welsh Office staff working for next steps agencies, for which the Welsh Office has some responsibility, were, at the time the agencies were set up as follows:

Cadw: 216

Planning Inspectorate: 20

ADAS: 45.

Additionally, 41.5 staff transferred to the Benefits Agency.

National Health Service

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [21827]

Mr. Richards: All national health service bodies, as defined by the Cabinet Office, have a statutory basis. Health authorities and special health authorities are statutorily required to admit members of the public to their meetings. NHS trusts are statutorily required to hold an annual public meeting and many voluntarily admit the public to board meetings.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) minutes of meetings, (d) agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [21836]

Mr. Richards: There is a statutory obligation on national health service trusts to publish an annual report, all other NHS bodies are required to do so by the code of conduct and accountability. There is a statutory obligation on all NHS bodies to publish annual accounts but no obligation on them to publish minutes of their meetings, although many do. Health authorities and special health authorities are statutorily required to publish the agendas of their meetings. All NHS bodies are required by the code of conduct and accountability to maintain a register of members' interests.

Pembrokeshire Islands Conservation Area

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when the consultation period ended on the proposed special area of conservation for the Pembrokeshire islands; and which individuals and organisations registered objections; [22018]

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the objections to the proposed Pembrokeshire islands special area of conservation including any maps of the area concerned. [22016]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The consultation period on the proposed Pembrokeshire islands special area of conservation ended on 22 June 1995.

It is not proposed to place copies of responses in the Library of the House. Copies of objections received following the national consultation exercise are kept in the Welsh Office library, and can be viewed on request. Responses to the local consultation were treated as in confidence by the Countryside Council for Wales.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library a map of the proposed special area of conservation known as the Pembrokeshire islands as recommended by the Countryside Council for Wales. [22020]

Mr. Jones: As I said in my letter of 29 March 1995 to the hon. Member, maps of all potential special areas of conservation on which we consulted last year have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the procedure for approving special areas of conservation under the EU habitats directive; and what are the deadlines relating to the Pembrokeshire islands special area of conservation; [22019]

(2) when he plans to forward to the European Commission his final recommendation on the special area of conservation for the Pembrokeshire islands; [22021]

(3) what is the current position of the Pembrokeshire islands proposed special areas of conservation under the EU habitats directive; and if he will make a statement. [22017]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Environment to my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Atkinson) on 9 January, Official Report, columns 6–8, in which he stated that further sites would be forwarded to the Commission when the remaining points raised during consultation have been fully considered. Discussions are continuing regarding Pembrokeshire islands; it is hoped that a further meeting of interested parties to be held shortly will enable an announcement to be made shortly.

Powys Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Powys Healthcare NHS trust concerning the cash management and year-end flexibility arrangements required by trusts reaching the financial year end without settling the 1995–96 wage claim; and if he will make a statement. [22072]

Mr. Hague: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the consequences on the administration of health care in Powys of the industrial dispute between Powys Healthcare NHS trust and its trade unions and professional associations. [22112]

Mr. Hague: There have been lengthy negotiations over pay but no industrial action has taken place. The performance of all NHS trusts is monitored against a range of measures, including patient charter standards, and the results for 1995–96 will be published in the summer.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to appoint the new chairman of the Powys Healthcare NHS trust. [22118]

Mr. Hague: I expect to make an announcement shortly.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for wales what consultations he has had and what representations he has received in relation to the Powys Healthcare NHS trust, corporate public relations contract with Golley Slater; and what is the latest estimate outturn for the value of that contract for the year 1995–96. [22076]

Mr. Hague: None. This is a matter for the NHS trust to manage.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what instructions he will give the incoming chairman of the Powys Healthcare NHS trust concerning (a) the payment of across the board annual wage increases and (b) the retention of Whitley Council arrangements; and if he will make a statement. [22119]

Mr. Hague: None. This is a matter for the NHS trust which has the power to use local pay bargaining to achieve greater flexibility and efficiency in delivering health services.

General Practitioners

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the numbers of trainee general practitioners on the first year of the general practice vocational training scheme. [22110]

Mr. Hague: The number of trainee GPs on their first year of general practice vocational training schemes as at 31 January 1996 was 64.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date the Merthyr and Neath general practitioner trainee schemes terminated. [22109]

Mr. Hague: The Merthyr Tydfil vocational training scheme was terminated on 30 September 1993. The Neath vocational training scheme terminated on 30 September 1994.

Performing Arts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the locus of (a) the Cardiff Bay development corporation, (b) the Welsh Arts Council, (c) the Institute of Welsh Affairs and (d) local authorities in taking the lead in providing a new home for the Welsh National Opera company (i) within and (ii) without a new lyric theatre for Wales; and if he will make a statement. [22114]

Mr. Hague: I am aware that a meeting was held on 8 March among a number of public and private bodies to discuss the possibility of a centre for the performing arts in Cardiff. I have made no assessment of their locus in this matter; the funding of any such centre would be an issue for the funding bodies.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has had from the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning its 1996–97 budget; and what resource will be allocated within it for the funding of a trust or other body to develop the proposed new lyric theatre or centre for the performing arts in Cardiff bay. [22111]

Mr. Hague: None. Financial support to a trust or other body for the development of a new theatre or centre for performing arts in Cardiff bay is, within delegated limits, an operational matter for the Cardiff Bay development corporation. I have asked the chief executive to reply and will place a copy of his response in the Library of the House.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent consultations he has had with the chairman of the Wales region of the National Rivers Authority concerning the safety of water sports in the impounded lake behind the Cardiff bay barrage. [22120]

Mr. Hague: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the current forecast gross out-turn cost of constructing the Cardiff bay barrage to its original specification relative to the gross cost cap he gave to the Cardiff Bay development corporation. [22116]

Mr. Hague: The estimated final cost of the barrage project announced to Parliament in April 1995 was £191 million. I have asked the Cardiff Bay development corporation to contain expenditure within that figure. The expenditure forecasts are monitored by the Welsh Office on a monthly basis.

The detailed assessments of the final cost of the barrage project, including the barrage construction contract, and changes to the original specifications are operational matters for the corporation. I have asked the chief executive to reply to the hon. Member on those aspects and will place a copy of his response in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the capital cost savings in (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98 in the budgets of the Cardiff Bay development corporation of the omission or postponement of the (i) third boat lock, (ii) sea-angling pier, (iii) environmental island and (iv) dredging to provide 2.5 m lake water depth; and if he will make a statement. [22115]

Mr. Hague: These are operational matters for the Cardiff Bay development corporation. I have asked the chief executive to reply and will place a copy of his response in the Library of the House.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from the Royal Yachting Association concerning the siltation of the current mooring areas of the Cardiff Yacht Club and its relationship to the construction of the Cardiff bay barrage. [22113]

Mr. Hague: None.

South-East Wales Ambulance Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 18 March, what proposals he has received from the Powys sub-section of the South and East Wales Ambulance NHS trust to break away from the trust. [22134]

Mr. Hague: None. I would expect any proposals for trust reconfigurations to come from the boards themselves with the full support of their commissioning authorities.

IMAX Theatre Project

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent consultations he has had with the President of the court of governors of the national museum of Wales concerning the location and funding of the expansion of the Welsh industrial and maritime museum with particular reference to its IMAX theatre project. [22108]

Mr. Hague: The National Museums and Galleries of Wale's ideas for museum development in Cardiff bay were raised with my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State, at a meeting with the museum's council to discuss its corporate plan on 28 July 1995; it may be further discussed at a meeting between my hon. Friend and the President on the museum's operational plan for 1996–97, to be held on 27 March. No specific proposals have been submitted to the Welsh Office.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 18 March 1996, Official Report, columns 92-93, what part of the £22 million additional running cost figure for his Department's 1995–96 budget relative to 1979–80 are attributable to (a) superannuation charges, (b) TEC management fees and (c) accommodation and other miscellaneous overheads. [22137]

Mr. Hague: My Department's running cost budget for 1995–96 includes £5 million for superannuation costs; £9 million for TEC management fees; and £8 million for accommodation costs. These items were not included in the Welsh Office running cost figures for 1979–80.

East Glamorgan NHS Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 18 March 1996, Official Report, columns 93–94, how the issue of public dividend capital to East Glamorgan NHS trust counts against the public sector borrowing requirement. [22133]

Mr. Hague: Public dividend capital advances, which are issued by the Government as a form of long-term finance on which the trust pays dividends, score within the public sector borrowing requirement.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the dates on which the NHS trusts in Wales agreed annual wage increases for 1995–96; [22073]

(2) what date each NHS trust in Wales agreed the annual wage increase for 1995–96 with (a) nursing staff, (b) auxiliaries and (c) professionals allied to medicine. [22117]

Mr. Hague: This information is not held centrally.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied by them. [21868]

Mr. Hague: There are no such bodies.

Emergency Medical Admissions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answers of 18 March, 1996, Official Report, columns 91–92, if the NH3 emergency admissions action plan recommendation that he discuss levels of community care with unitary authorities has been (a) rejected and (b) communicated as such to trusts and health authorities. [22135]

Mr. Hague: In the normal course of business, the Welsh Office will continue to discuss both the resourcing and implementation of community care with local authorities. Decision on the use of their resources are, however, the matter for individual local authorities.

It is for individual health authorities to agree with local authorities on how to manage their shared responsibilities for continuing care in the light of local needs and circumstances and Welsh Office guidance. This policy is well known to the NHS and local government, and will be confirmed when the Welsh Office responds formally to the final report of the NHS working group on emergency admissions.

DEFENCE

Personnel

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to issue rules regulating the secondment and recruitment of personnel from industry to his Department, and their responsibilities, salary and employment allowances. [21297]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The rules regulating the secondment of personnel from industry to this department are contained in the civil service management code and the booklet, "Guidance for Departmental and Agency Personnel Officers when arranging secondments". The latter was issued in September 1993 by the Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service and Science, and I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

The responsibilities of such personnel while on secondment and their actual secondment terms are a matter for negotiation between MOD, the parent company and the individual. However, salaries have to be kept within the maximum for the grade or management tier to which the secondee has been appointed. Guidance on salaries paid to secondees has been issued in the civil service management code.

Departmental rules concerning the appointment and payment of secondees will be published later this year.

Recruitment to the civil service is governed by the Civil Service Order in Council 1995. Selection must be based on fair and open competition. Recruitment may be to a grade or to a specific post, but the responsibilities and required skills will be clearly stated as part of the advertising and selection process. MOD's recruitment manual is being revised and will be reissued this year.

The rules regulating the salary—and allowances, if any—paid to a new recruit are set out in the civil service management code and my Department's pay manual.

US Bases

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to improve the accountability to Parliament of United States (a) military and (b) National Security Agency bases in the United Kingdom. [22416]

Mr. Soames: There are no proposals to change the existing arrangements which are perfectly satisfactory.

Defence Orders

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the total order values announced for defence equipment placed by his Department with (a) American and (b) British-based firms in (i) 1994–95 and (ii) 1995–96. [21885]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 21 March 1996]: The total value of contracts placed with (a) American and (b) British-based firms in 1994–95 and 1995–96 is as follows:

	£ million
Financial year 1994–95
American	1,261
British	6,163
Financial year 1995–96, to date
American	387
British	5,847

The values are the total of the prices agreed for the contracts placed. The value and location of sub-contract work has not been taken into account. However, as the Statement of Defence Estimates 1995, chapter 5, figure 13 indicates, some 91 per cent. of our equipment expenditure goes to UK industry.

Bosnia (Telephone Communications)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the availability of telephone communications to the United Kingdom and Germany for British service personnel in Bosnia giving (a) a list of the locations where telephones are available, (b) the number of calls that can be made by each service man and (c) the price charged for such calls. [22245]

Mr. Soames: Telephones are available for calls to the UK and Germany at the following locations:

(a) Tomislavgrad
(b) Bugojno
(c) Lipa
(d) Gornji Vakuf
(e) Vitez
(f) Sipovo
(g) Mrkonjic Grad
(h) Kupres
(i) Jajce
(j) Jezero
(k) Sanski Most
(l) Glamoc
(m) Banja Luka
(n) Sarajevo
(o) Kiseljak
(p) Split

Service personnel are not limited in the number of calls that they may make.

Where personnel are charged for telephone calls, the per minute prices vary from 75p to £1.20, depending on the system. A monthly welfare telephone allowance is payable towards the costs.

Joint Rapid Deployment Force

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the purpose of the joint rapid deployment force. [22427]

Mr. Soames: The aim of JRDF is to strengthen the United Kingdom capability to project effective military forces quickly worldwide in support of our interests. It will be a joint force of up to reinforced brigade size, with supporting air and maritime components, capable of fulfilling a wide range of combat or non-combat missions, whether mounted nationally or as part of the UK's contribution to operations mounted by NATO, the Western European Union or the United Nations.

Common New Generation Frigate

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress towards signature of the common new generation frigate Horizon/principal anti-air missile system memoranda of understanding. [22987]

Mr. Arbuthnot: In July 1994, with his French and Italian colleagues, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence signed the project Horizon memorandum of understanding concerning a programme for the joint definition, design, development, production and in-service support of a common new generation frigate, which will replace the type 42 destroyers early in the next century. This programme is made up of two projects—the principal anti-air missile system and project Horizon, which embraces the ship itself and all other weapon, command and communications systems. Each of these will be managed under the terms of separate programme MOUs and a series of supplements giving phased authority and release of funding for each phase of the project.

I am pleased to announce that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and his French and Italian colleagues have signed memoranda of understanding for the PAAMs programme and for the arrangements for PAAMS full-scale engineering development and initial production phase, together with the supplement to the Horizon programme MOU for the design definition phase for the ship and its other systems. The signature of these three MOUs is a major step forward and reaffirms the Government's commitment to this important co-operative project.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Non-EEC Seafarers

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what immigration rules concerning work permits apply to non-EEC seafarers sailing between two United Kingdom ports. [21749]

Mr. Kirkhope: I have been asked to reply.

Paragraph 128 of the Statement of Changes in Immigration Rules (HC 395) applies in the circumstances described.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base; and if he will list those bodies which (a) admit members of the public to all board or committee meetings and (b) hold open meetings for the public (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [21830]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 21 March 1996]: The information is as follows:

	Statutory base	Admit public to board/committee meetings	Open meetings for the public
Health and social services boards	Yes	No	[1]Yes
Health and social services councils	Yes	No	No
Health and social services trusts	Yes	No	[2]Yes

Northern Ireland Regional Medical Physics Agency	Yes	No	No

[1] On a voluntary basis.
[2] A statutory requirement.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [21832]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 21 March 1996]: The information is as follows:

	Investigation by Parliamentary Commissioner	Scrutiny by the Audit Commission	Scrutiny by the National Audit Office	Statutory provisions for open government	Performance indicators	Provisions under the citizens charter

[1] These bodies are scrutinised by the Northern Ireland Audit Office.
[2] Health and social services councils expenditure is identified in health and social services boards accounts.
[3] Not relevant in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department publish (a) annual reports, (b) annual accounts, (c) minutes of meetings, (d) agendas of meetings and (e) a register of members' interests (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [21837]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 21 March 1996]: The information is as follows:

	Publish annual reports	Publish annual accounts	Publish the minutes of meetings	Publish the agendas of meetings	Publish register of members' interests

ENVIRONMENT

Domestic Waste Recycling

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with local authorities and private waste contractors on the expansion of the blue bag scheme for the increased use of recycling domestic waste. [21739]

Mr. Clappison: Provision of local recycling facilities, including the choice between the many different practical approaches which are available, is a matter for local authorities and the private and voluntary sectors, in the light of local circumstances. My Department has regular contact with the local authority associations, individual local authorities and the waste management industry on matters related to recycling household waste, including practical approaches.

Filton Commercial Airport

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is able to announce the result of the planning industry into the application for Filton commercial airport. [22950]

Mr. Gummer: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and I have considered the report of the planning inspector, Mrs. Jean Brushfield, and have accepted her recommendation to dismiss the appeal.

Nitrate Vulnerable Zones

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on finalising the nitrate-vulnerable zone designations in England and Wales following the recommendations in the report by the independent review panel published in October last year. [22982]

Mr. Clappison: Environment and Agriculture Ministers have considered the report of the independent review panel. In the light of the panel's recommendations and following consultation with the National Rivers Authority, we have finalised the boundaries of the nitrate-vulnerable zones in England and Wales. Today we have placed in the Library of the House a set of maps showing the 68 zones we have identified, and we have laid before the House the regulations which transpose the formal requirements of the EC nitrates directive into domestic law and designate the zones.

We have also issued the decision document setting out the Government's final decisions on the zone designations following the panel's report. It presents our considered response to the panel's specific recommendations for boundary changes or for the further review of a small number of zones, and to their findings on issues of principle. In most cases we have accepted or acted on the panel's recommendations. The decision document is being sent to each farmer in the designated zones, and to other consultees who made submissions to the panel. I am placing a copy of the document in the House Library.

The measure that farmers will be required to take in the designated zones have been the subject of a recent consultation. Regulations will be drafted taking account of the responses received, and following further consultation these regulations will be laid before the House, and implemented in the zones by the end of 1999.

My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture will shortly be making an announcement on the re-introduction, in the designated zones, of grants for waste handling facilities.

The maps of the 68 designated zones will be available for inspection at MAFF regional services centres and Welsh Office agriculture departmental divisional offices.

Social Housing (Rural Areas)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many socially rented houses have been built in rural areas in each year since 1989. [20979]

Mr. Clappison: Between 1989–90 and the end of December 1995, more than 11,000 new social homes for rent and shared ownership were approved in rural settlements with a population of 3,000 or less through the Housing Corporation's rural programme. Figures for the number of completions arising from these scheme approvals are as follows:

Year	Rent	Shared ownership	Total
1990–91	137	14	151
1991–92	518	4	522
1992–93	1,601	109	1,710
Housing market package	201		201
1993–94	2,129	227	2,356
1994–95	1,503	391	1,894
1995–96, to the end of December 1995	1,270	240	1,510

The completions figures for 1993–94 and earlier years are higher than those previously quoted following improvements in data collection procedures.

In addition, local authorities also provide finance for new social housing in rural and non-rural areas.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Alan and Michael Guy

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his written answer of 15 January, Official Report, column 374, regarding Alan and Michael Guy, when the hon. Member may expect to receive a substantive reply to his letter of 7 August 1995 and subsequent letter of 24 November. [22131]

Mr. Kirkhope: We have nearly completed our consideration of these alleged wrongful convictions, but one point is still being checked with the police. I will send the hon. Member a substantive reply as soon as possible.

CS Gas

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has evaluated in respect of the rejection in other countries of the CS spray type currently under trial in the United Kingdom; [21991]

(2) which police forces declined to be included in the current trial period for CS sprays; [21993]

(3) What type of CS spray is currently under test by police forces in Britain; what is its country of origin; and what is the projected length of the trial period. [21992]

Mr. Maclean [holding answers 21 March 1996]: So far as my right hon. and learned Friend is aware, no other country has, in considering police use of incapacitant sprays, rejected the CS equipment currently being trialled by police forces in England and Wales. The forces participating in the trials volunteered to do so as a result of a general invitation by the Association of Chief Police Officers. The type of spray being trialled is a five per cent. CS solution dispensed in a stream from a small hand-held aerosol. It is manufactured in France. The trials will last for six months.

Firearms Control

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria for membership of the Firearms consultative committee; and how many members of the Firearms consultative committee are (a) holders of firearms certificates, (b) members of a gun club and (c) holders of shotgun licences. [21881]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 21 March 1996]: The criteria for membership of the Firearms Consultative Committee is set out in section 22(1) of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988. Seven members of the Firearms Consultative Committee are firearms certificate holders, seven are members of a gun club and eight are holders of shotgun certificates.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to strengthen current gun legislation. [21990]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 21 March 1996]: A Government review of the existing firearms controls has begun. This will provide evidence to the inquiry to be conducted by Lord Cullen into the tragic events in Dunblane and will enable early decisions to be taken on any recommendations for changes in the controls which might be made by the inquiry.

South Wales Police Authority

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what increase is proposed in the establishment of the South Wales police authority following the announcement made by him in autumn 1995. [21700]

Mr. Maclean: It is for the chief constable and police authority to determine the number of police officers in the force. The South Wales police authority's spending power for 1996–97 effectively increases by £7.7 million or 5.3 per cent. This includes £450,000 as its share of the additional funding to allow 5,000 extra officers to be recruited in the next three years. This would be sufficient to recruit 24 constables in 1996–97. Over the three years, South Wales' share of the 5,000 could total 118 constables.

Arrests (Durham)

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests were made by Durham constabulary in the latest year for which figures are available; and (a) how many of these arrests resulted in criminal prosecutions, (b) how many of those arrested received police cautions and (c) how many resulted in no further action being taken. [21236]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested is published in the annual report of the Durham constabulary for 1994–95, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of criminal injury compensation claims made by people who have suffered injury from violence in the home in each year since 1990; how many were successful; and what was the average award. [22404]

Mr. Maclean: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board advises that these data are not recorded separately and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

EU Data Protection Directive

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his consultation paper on the implementation of the European Union data protection directive will be published. [22926]

Mr. Sackville: The consultation paper is published today. It describes the content of the directive and invites views on the way in which the directive should be implemented in the United Kingdom. There is a four-month period for responses. I am placing a copy of the paper in the Library.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Competitive Tendering (Contracts)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by her Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21039]

Mr. Sproat: The total number and value of competitive contacts awarded by my Department and its executive agencies for the years in question is shown in the table:

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96, to date
Total number of contracts subject to competitive tender	164	323	400
Total value of contracts subject to competitive tender (£000s)	12,952	24,903	29,953

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage which former public sector research establishments in her Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in her Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21944]

Mr. Sproat: None.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what measures her Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if she will make a statement. [21466]

Mr. Sproat: My Department and its agencies have no formal policy regarding the wage rates of our contractors and suppliers.

We are concerned about health and safety regulations. All contracts which involve contractors' staff working on our premises have a clause requiring the contractor to comply with health and safety legislation and contractors' performance in this area is regularly monitored.

Outstanding Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what values of payments were outstanding within her Department on 5 March, which were beyond the date on the invoice and, where no date was specified, older than 28 days. [20482]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 12 March 1996]: While the information requested is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost, my Department is committed to the payment of invoices within agreed contractual provisions or within 30 days of the presentation of a valid invoice or delivery, if later. On the basis of a sample of invoices received by the Department of National Heritage during the current financial year, 91.2 per cent. were paid on time.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the average cost of answering an (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary question from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each session since 1992–93. [22140]

Mr. Sproat: This Department does not collect the information in the form requested.

National Lottery

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the total amount of grants from national lottery distributing bodies which has been provided to organisations within North Yorkshire; and what percentage this is of the total grants distributed nationally. [21973]

Mr. Sproat: To date, awards totalling over £15 million have been made to 83 projects in North Yorkshire. These awards account for 1.14 per cent. of all proceeds distributed to date.

Listed Buildings (Sprinkler Systems)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many grade 1 listed buildings in public ownership and open to the public do not have sprinkler systems installed. [21478]

Mr. Sproat: None of the grade I listed buildings directly managed by my Department and open to the public have sprinkler systems installed. I am not aware of any other grade I listed buildings normally open to the public under the management of other Government Departments that have such systems. Sir Alan Bailey's report, "Fire, Protection Measures for the Royal Palaces", recommended that the extra risk reduction that would be achieved by such systems would not justify the additional damage to the heritage fabric resulting from installation.

SCOTLAND

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many questions were tabled to his Department in each Session since 1987–88; how many were not answered on the ground of disproportionate cost; what percentage of the total number of questions this represented; how many were not answered on the ground that the information was not centrally available; and what percentage of the total number of questions this represented. [21140]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of questions tabled is as follows:

	Written	Oral
1987–88	4,305	495
1988–89	2,958	437
1989–90	2,713	349
1990–91	2,422	331
1991–92	857	155
1992–93	3,251	507
1993–94	2,834	347
1994–95	2,746	365
1995–96	[1]973	[1]186

[1] Figures for 1995-96 Session as at 20 March 1996.

The number of questions not answered on grounds of disproportionate cost or the information not being held centrally could itself be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Finance

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the rules governing the calculation of council house capital debt when a council house stock is being disaggregated between two new unitary authorities. [21219]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Housing debt in disaggregating areas is treated under the general rules governing debt transfer on local government reorganisation. We would expect housing debt generally to transfer under the Local Government (Transitional Financial Provisions) (Scotland) Order 1996.

That order gives authorities the freedom to reach local agreement wherever possible about the most appropriate treatment of the debts of disaggregating authorities and established lead authority arrangements where no alternative agreement is reached. In addition, I understand that the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities has produced guidelines for authorities on how housing-related debt should be allocated between successors.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many disputes have been referred to the Property Commission during recent local government reorganisation. [21220]

Mr. Kynoch: None. Councils have until 31 March to register any disputes.

Cairngorm Funicular Railway

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 14 March 1996, Official Report, column 730, what financial assistance for Highlands and Islands Enterprise in respect of the establishment of a new visitor uplift facility will be paid to (a) Cairngorm Chairlift Company and (b) Cairngorm Railway Company; and if any moneys given to the chairlift company can subsequently be transferred to the railway company. [21656]

Mr. Kynoch: The availability of financial assistance from Highlands and Islands Enterprise for the establishment of a new visitor uplift facility at Cairngorm has yet to be determined. I understand that the application for such financial assistance has ben made by the Cairngorm Chairlift Company Ltd; and it would be customary for any assistance awarded to be payable to the applicant. Any such assistance would be required to be used for the purposes specified in the application.

Incapable Adults Report

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when and how he expects to respond to the Scottish Law Commission report on incapable adults with special reference to recommendation 60 about electro-convulsive therapy. [20592]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Law Commission report on incapable adults is currently receiving careful consideration and no conclusions have yet been reached on individual recommendations. I cannot yet say when we will be in a position to respond.

Further Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland since incorporation, what reports he has published on the general financing of the further education sector. [20593]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: My right hon. Friend has published two annual reports for 1993 and 1994 on his duty to secure adequate and efficient provision of further education in Scotland. A report for 1995 will be published shortly.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the salaries of further education principals at incorporation; and what they are now in constant price terms. [20594]

Mr. Robertson: Information on further education college principals' salaries at incorporation is not held centrally. The latest information on salaries is set out in my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) of 30 October 1995, Official Report, column 116.

Scientists and Engineers

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many professional scientists and engineers of each category were employed at each grade in the headquarters division of the Scottish Office in each year from 1991 to the current year. [19795]

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 11 March 1996]: The numbers of professional scientists and engineers in post in the Scottish Office including its executive agencies other than the Scottish Prison Service are shown in the tables.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Credit

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, by region, for each of the past five years the total amount paid out in family credit, the number of family credit recipients, the average number of child dependants of each recipient, and the average weekly amount paid out to each recipient. [16622]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the tables.

1990–91

	Number of cases	Total number of children	Average number of children per family	Average weekly Family Credit award (£)	Estimated annual expenditure (£ million)
Midlands	60,000	131,000	2	29.88	90
North Eastern	59,000	128,000	2	30.33	90
London North	37,000	86,000	2	30.96	55
Wales and South Western	47,000	96,000	2	29.66	72
North Western	56,000	118,000	2	31.61	88
Scotland	39,000	75,000	2	29.16	58

1990–91

	Number of cases	Total number of children	Average number of children per family	Average weekly Family Credit award (£)	Estimated annual expenditure (£ million)
London South	29,000	63,000	2	28.15	42
Great Britain	328,000	697,000	2	30.11	495

Notes:
1. Figures for the number of cases and the number of children have been rounded to the nearest thousand.
2. Totals for Great Britain may not sum due to roundings.
3. Annual expenditure figures have been estimated by using the average monthly caseload and average weekly payments of family credit and, therefore, they are at variance with the outturn figures published in the departmental report. All other figures relate to March each year.
4. Regions used are DSS administrative regions.

Pensioners

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the current cost to public funds of increasing the 25p addition for pensioners over 80 years old by whichever was the highest of either earnings or prices since its introduction; and what would be its cost if its current value were increased by (a) 50p, (b) £1 and (c) £1.50. [22482]

Mr. Heald: The cost to public funds of increasing the age addition by the higher of earnings or prices is estimated to be £310 million.

The other costs are as follows:

(a) £40 million.

(b) £90 million.

(c) £130 million.

Note:

All costs are in 1996–7 prices, rounded to nearest £10 million.

Government Actuary's Department.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of paying from public funds the full cost of all standing charges for telephones, domestic electricity and gas bills, and water charges, for (i) all pensioners, (ii) pensioners on income support, (iii) pensioners over 75 years and (iv) pensioners over 80 years. [22483]

Mr. Heald: The estimated cost to the public funds of subsidising the full cost of all standing charges for telephones, domestic electricity and gas bills per annum is:

(i) £990 million

(ii) £260 million

(iii) £440 million and

(iv) £230 million.

Information is not available on water charges.

Notes:

1. Information for (i), (iii) and (iv) is based on pensioner units. A pensioner unit is defined as a single person over state pension age or a couple where the husband, or head is over SPA. The number of pensioner units in the various age groups and the proportion of pensioner units with utilities is taken from the Family Expenditure Survey 1993.

2. The number of pensioners on income support (ii) is based on the May 1995 Quarterly Statistical Enquiry and, therefore, a pensioner on income support is defined as those over the age of 60.

3. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £10 million and are in 1995–96 prices.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the value of the Christmas bonus for (a) single pensioners and (b) pensioner couples if it has been uprated in line with the higher of either earnings or prices, since its introduction; and what would be the cost to public funds if its current value was increased by (i) £5, (ii) £10 and (iii) £15 for (1) single pensioners and (2) pensioner couples. [22480]

Mr. Heald: The £10 Christmas bonus, introduced in 1972, is paid to individuals entitled to a qualifying benefit. If it had been uprated by the higher of earnings or prices since its introduction, it would be £120.20 at December 1996. The estimated cost to public funds of increasing the bonus by (a) £5, (b) £10 and (c) £15 would be (i) £50 million, (ii) £100 million, and (iii) £150 million respectively.

Notes

1. Estimated cost to public funds based on increasing the bonus for recipients of retirement pensions only.

2. Figures rounded to nearest £10 million.

Contributions Agency Review

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the locations of the feasibility study and trial periods as part of the 1995 review of the Contributions Agency; and if he will make a statement. [21572]

Mr. Heald: The administration of the Contributions Agency is a matter for Mrs. Faith Boardman, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mrs. Ray Mitchie, dated 21 March 1996:

As Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency, I have responsibility for answering questions about operational matters relating to the Agency.

I have been asked to reply to your question regarding the locations used for the feasibility study and trial periods as part of the 1995 review of the Contributions Agency.

The Business Unit Implementation Feasibility Study examined existing statistical data from all Field Operations locations and conducted research into specific work and organisation by statistically sampling locations across the entire Field network. Representatives from all five Sectors participated in the development of the proposed reorganisation.

The recommendations from the feasibility study were piloted in Kent and Severn Estuary Divisions from 19 June 1995, with the inclusion of Manchester Division from 24 July 1995. The locations chosen represented a mixture of rural and inner city offices. Initial evaluation of the pilots was conducted on 31 October 1995, with ongoing evaluation thereafter until 31 March 1996.

The locations involved in the pilots were:

Kent

Dartford

Chatham

Maidstone

Gravesend

Dover

Ashford

Sittingbourne

Tunbridge Wells

Ramsgate

Canterbury

Orpington

Severn Estuary

Cardiff

Bristol

Bridgend

Weston Super Mare

Manchester

Farnworth

Manchester

Rochdale

Bury

I hope you will find the information provided helpful.

TREASURY

Customs Waivers

Sir David Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to discontinue the use of waivers by customs officers in accordance with the recommendations of the Scott report. [21300]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: All administrative waivers operated by Customs which were still in use have already been replaced by open general export licences with two exceptions. These remaining two waivers—for goods exported to the continental shelf and for goods in transit mail—are in the process of being replaced by an open general export licence and by an amendment to the open general transhipment licence, both of which will be issued by the Department of Trade and Industry.

Paymaster Agency

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to announce the results of his review into the work of the Paymaster agency. [21442]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) 18 March 1996, Official Report, columns 53–55.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what response he has received from the Manufacturing and Construction Industries Alliance and the Housebuilders Federation in connection with his recent consultation about possible exemption from the landfill tax for contaminated land; if that response was supportive of his proposals; and if he will make a statement; [22291]

(2) if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government policy on the clearing and developing of contaminated sites; and what part the proposed landfill tax will play in implementation of this policy. [22292]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government wish to encourage the development of brownfield rather than greenfield sites and has concluded that the imposition of the landfill tax on certain wastes arising from contaminated land would be contrary to this objective. I therefore announced in the debate on the Finance Bill in Standing Committee E on 8 February 1996, Official Report, column 209, that we would consider whether we could identify and ring-fence an exemption from landfill tax for historically contaminated land. I said that if it proved possible to develop a suitable exemption, this would be introduced at Report stage on the current Finance Bill.

Customs have consulted widely on a draft clause linking the exemption to planning approval, in order to provide an objective criterion for eligibility to the exemption. This consultation included those involved in clearing up contaminated land and other interested trade concerns, including the Manufacturing and Construction Industries Alliance and the House Builders Federation. Although the House Builders Federation welcomed the intentions behind the drafting of the clause, it and other bodies concluded that the clause would not achieve its intended aims. This is because in most cases involving the removal of contaminated land for development, no planning permission is required. The view was also expressed in other replies to the consultation and it is now clear that the proposal would not meet all those cases where exemption is appropriate.

We now propose to provide an exemption for the waste from the clearance of contaminated land where clearance of all or part of the contamination is necessary to allow the land to be used for the intended purpose when the development or work on the land is complete. The exemption will apply to waste arising from the reclamation of the land but current polluters will not be able to benefit from it. To help landfill site operators to know whether or not waste qualifies for the exemption, we envisage that there will be a system of certification by Customs.

WALES

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21458]

Mr. Hague: Terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between the contractor or supplier and his employees, subject of course to any relevant legal requirements. Compliance with health and safety regulations is a legal requirement for that contractor or supplier, and this is one of the Department's contractual requirements.

Arts Funding

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales in what month of what year responsibility for funding the arts and the Arts Council for Wales was transferred to his Department. [22487]

Mr. Hague: Responsibility for funding the Arts Council for Wales transferred to the Welsh Office from the Department of National Heritage on 1 April 1994.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many projects for the establishment of new manufacturing industry were offered financial assistance under the regional selective financial scheme (a) in Wales, (b) in Gwynedd and (c) in Dyfed in each of the years 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94; [21451]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 5 March 1996, Official Report, column 207, how many new jobs were provided or existing jobs safeguarded in 1994–95 in (a) Wales, (b) Gwynedd and (c) Dyfed from the new manufacturing projects offered financial assistance by his Department under the regional selective assistance scheme. [21454]

Mr. Hague: The information regarding offers of regional selective assistance for new manufacturing industry in the years 1991–92 to 1995–96 is given in the following table:

	Wales	Gwynedd		Dyfed
	Number	Jobs	Number	Jobs	Number	Jobs
1991–92	57	4,422	3	27	7	278
1992–93	47	3,008	1	210	3	98
1993–94	32	3,046	—	—	1	16
1994–95	56	3,884	2	67	5	139
1995–96	46	2,631	3	44	1	11

1. 1995–96 data to March 1996.
2. Data concern only those RSA projects described as new manufacturing activities falling within classes 15 to 37 of the Standard Industrial Classification, 1992.
3. Job figures are forecasts provided by applicants at the time of the offer. Projects are generally expected to take from three to five years to reach forecast levels of employment.

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21583]

Mr. Hague: No Welsh Office staff have conditioned hours which exceed 48 a week. Information on overtime working is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Teachers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many teachers in Wales, having been afforded early retirement from posts as permanent teachers, have been employed during the past 12 months as supply teachers; and what guidance he gives to local authorities and to schools in Wales on this matter. [21587]

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not held centrally.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment issues guidance to local authorities and schools in England and Wales on the statutory pay and conditions of service for school teachers in maintained schools including that which relates to the salary of new appointments and appointments following a break in service. She has also issued guidance on the amount of premature retirement compensation and pension to be received by a retired teacher during a period of new employment.

Cardiff Bay (Theatre)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1996, Official Report, column 171, if the costs of winding up the Cardiff Bay Opera House trust will appear in the annual accounts of the Cardiff Bay development corporation for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [22419]

Mr. Hague: The costs of winding up the Cardiff Bay Opera House trust which are funded by Cardiff Bay development corporation, will be included in the corporation's relevant annual accounts in accordance with its accounting policies.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1996, Official Report, column 171, what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning the involvement of Sir Andrew Lloyd Webber and Cameron Mackintosh and their companies in the provision of a large-scale lyric theatre for Wales at Cardiff bay; and if he will make a statement. [22424]

Mr. Hague: The meetings at which the proposed Cardiff Bay opera house was raised with me were as follows: chairman, Cardiff Bay Opera House trust, 19 July 1995; chairman, Cardiff Bay development corporation 20 August 1995; deputy chairman; Cardiff Bay Opera House trust—the hon. Member for Cardiff South and Penarth (Mr. Michael), 20 January 1996.

I also met the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation on 14 March 1996 where the possible development of a Cardiff Bay theatre was raised with me; there was no discussion about the involvement on any particular commercial organisations in the possible project.

Eurofreight Terminal

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to receive the final report from the Welsh Development Agency on the Eurofreight terminal proposal. [22486]

Mr. Hague: Shortly.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 14 March 1996, Official Report, column 749, what was the duration of (a) the closed session and (b) public session of the 4 March meeting of the Council of Ministers; and for what duration he was present at each of the two types of session. [22490]

Mr. Hague: The duration of the closed session was four and a half hours and that of the open session one hour. I was present for almost all of the open session, and part of the closed session.

Gwent Health Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on the recent appointment of a senior manager to an internally advertised post with the new Gwent health authority; what investigations he is carrying out into the circumstances of this appointment; what rules apply in respect of the eligibility of those made redundant with severance pay from one senior national health service management post to apply after redundancy for posts internally advertised in the national health service; and if he will make a statement. [22422]

Mr. Hague: One representation has been received. My Department has asked for a report on the procedures adopted. In general terms a person who is no longer employed in the national health service would not be eligible for a job restricted to existing employees.

Urban Investment Grant

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date the urban investment grant panel will cease to function; and if he will make a statement. [22485]

Mr. Hague: Responsibility for the urban investment grant scheme is to be transferred from the Welsh Office to the Welsh Development Agency from 1 April 1996. The administrative arrangements for the scheme after that date, including the position of the UIG panel, are currently under discussion with the agency.

Departmental Functions

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the numbers employed and the budget of each of the sections transferred into his Department's responsibility since 1979. [22489]

Mr. Hague: Staff were transferred into the Welsh Office since 1979 as follows:

Regional development grant (1984): 82

Training, enterprise and education (1992): 67.

Staff costs in respect of training enterprise and education functions were £1.2 million; those in respect of the regional development grant function are not separately identifiable.

Estatecare (Privatisation)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1996, Official Report, column 172, if he will place in the Library a copy of the decision letter on privatising the Estatecare branch of the Welsh Health Common Services Authority. [22420]

Mr. Hague: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Korean Investment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to assist and induce Korean investment in the assisted areas in Wales; and how many visits have been made by (a) Korean industrial delegations, (b) individual Korean companies and (c) agents on their behalf in the past 12 months. [22488]

Mr. Hague: The measures that were successful in encouraging Halla to invest in Pentrebach will continue to be promoted. These include a flexible and loyal work force; a strong economy; a sophisticated industrial infrastructure; a positive approach by all of those with an interest in economic development.

During the past 12 months there has been one visit to Wales by a Korean industrial delegation. There were five visits by individual Korean companies, but reliable information on visits by agents is not available.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of the extent of (a) overspend and (b) underspend in his Department's budget for 1995–96; and if he proposes to return unspent allocations to the Treasury. [22423]

Mr. Hague: Planned expenditure within my responsibility for 1995–96 was shown in last year's Welsh Office departmental report, Cm 2815, as £6,778 million. The final out-turn for 1995–96 will not be known for some time but table 6.2 of the Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses 1996–97, Cm 3201, which was published last week by the Treasury, reports an estimated out-turn of £6,743 million.

Most of the £35 million estimated underspend has arisen on cash limited programmes where the underspends can be carried forward into 1996–97 under the Treasury's end-year flexibility arrangements.

Within this amount, it is estimated that my Department's demand-led programmes will underspend by around £3.5 million. This estimated underspend has arisen mainly in respect of pharmaceutical services, £2.5 million, where the underspend represents less than 1 per cent. of the total provision of £426.7 million. After all claims for payment have been met in full, any provision left will remain unspent.

Departmental Annual Report

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March 1996, Official Report, column 171, what were the principal factors underlying the move in 1994 to a March date for publication of the annual departmental report and the move to an end of March date in 1996. [22421]

Mr. Hague: Departmental reports for all Departments are published in the fortnight before presentation of the Supply estimates. In 1994, the Supply estimates were presented on 23 March. This year, the Supply estimates are to be presented on 26 March. The specific date within the fortnight chosen for publication of my departmental report is dependent upon preparation and printing schedules.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Funding (Legislation)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those Acts since 1966 which have changed the funding of (a) maintained schools and (b) pupils attending proprietorial educational establishments which did so without use of statutory instruments or other regulations laid before Parliament. [11545]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 23 January 1996]: The following Education Acts include provisions relating to the funding of maintained schools and of pupils attending proprietorial educational establishments which do not involve the use of statutory instruments or other regulations laid before Parliament. The list covers education Acts since 1966 which are currently in force.

Education Reform Act 1988: part 1, chapter III and sections 105 and 212

Further and Higher Education Act 1992: section 4

Education Act 1993: sections 113, and 281 to 283

Education Act 1994: section 5.

In addition, schools may receive funding under section 11 of the Local Government Act, 1966, which also does not involve the use of statutory instruments or other regulations laid before Parliament.

Teachers Pensions Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when customer organisation of the Teachers Pensions Agency were given notice in respect of proposals for its privatisation; and if she will make a statement. [21447]

Mr. Squire: We commissioned KPMG to consider the feasibility of letting a contract for the administration of teachers' pensions to the private sector. We published their findings in January 1995, and sought the views of a wide audience, including representatives of members of the scheme and their employers. We extended the consultation deadline from March to April 1995 at the request of the consultees to allow adequate time for views to be expressed. We announced in May 1995 our intention to seek expressions of interest from the private sector. We further announced in November 1995 our intention to invite six companies to tender for the administration of the scheme.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the (a) advantages and (b) disadvantages of privatising the Teachers Pensions Agency. [21449]

Mr. Squire: We asked KPMG to consider whether letting a contract for the administration of teachers' pensions to the private sector would offer better value for money than retaining the service in the public sector. They concluded that it was likely to do so. We have tested this conclusion at each key stage of the contractorisation process before proceeding to the next stage. We shall not let a contract unless we can prove that there will be substantial savings to the taxpayer. At the same time we shall be looking to improve the service beyond that currently provided by the agency. We have considered whether there are disadvantages to letting a contract and concluded that there are not.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which of the functions of the Teachers Pensions Agency have been considered for privatisation; and if she will make a statement. [21448]

Mr. Squire: We are looking at the feasibility of letting a contract for the whole of he administration of the teachers' superannuation scheme. We have made clear that responsibility for the operation of the scheme will remain with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, who will be answerable to Parliament. The Teachers Pensions Agency currently provides policy advice to Ministers on teachers' pensions. If we let a contract, officials within the DEE will be responsible for providing such policy advice.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will ensure that teachers' pension entitlements will not be reduced and that the new arrangements will be more efficient than the current ones in the event of the privatisation of the Teachers Pensions Agency; and if she will make a statement. [21528]

Mr. Robin Squire: We have stated on a number of occasions that the operation of the teachers' superannuation scheme is unaffected by our deliberations on the future of the Teachers Pensions Agency. Responsibility for the scheme will remain with the Secretary of State, and any changes in entitlement or benefit will be subject to parliamentary scrutiny. We will let a contract for the administration of the scheme only if it offers the prospect of efficiencies greater than could be achieved by retaining the service in the public sector.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what public consultation process has been arranged in respect of proposals to privatise the Teachers Pensions Agency; and if she will make a statement. [21450]

Mr. Squire: Organisations representing teachers, their employers, Teachers Pensions Agency staff and others were consulted in January 1995 about the feasibility of letting a contract for the future administration of the teachers' superannuation scheme. We have made our decisions public at each key stage of the contractorisation process. Members of the scheme, their representatives and employers, and members of the public have been given a number of opportunities to offer views on the future administration of the scheme. Many have done so, and we have given their comments due consideration.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if the staff of the Teachers Pensions Agency were consulted in advance of the announcement of proposals for its privatisation; and if she will make a statement. [21446]

Mr. Squire: Yes. Teachers Pensions Agency staff were consulted at an early stage on our intentions to look at the feasibility of letting a contract for the future administration of the teachers superannuation scheme. The staff of the TPA have been actively involved in the preparation of tender documentation, including the drawing up of a specification of service requirements and performance standards. They have also had the opportunity to meet the prospective tendering companies. The staff and their trade union representatives have been kept informed of developments throughout the process.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what factors underlay the timetable for bids in respect of privatising the Teachers Pensions Agency; and if she will make a statement. [21530]

Mr. Squire: There are no specific factors underlying the timetable for tendering for administration of teachers' pensions. We have undertaken a careful assessment of the feasibility of letting a contract at each key state of the tendering process before proceedings further. We would like to reach an early decision in order to remove any uncertainties for staff of the Teachers' Pensions Agency. This will not, however, be at the expense of a thorough evaluation of the bids submitted. We hope to make an announcement shortly about the future of the agency.

School Computers (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the average number of computers (a) per school and (b) per pupil in the Greater Manchester area; and if she will make a statement. [21521]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is not available centrally.

Science Education

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the promotion of science education in England and Wales. [21523]

Mr. Robin Squire: In England, the national curriculum ensures that all pupils, from the age of five to 16, study science as a core subject. Most pupils in their final year of compulsory schooling also take GCSEs in science and a greater proportion of students than ever before are getting science A-levels. In addition, general national vocational qualifications in science became widely available last September and there are already signs that they will encourage more young people to continue with science post-16. We have also taken steps to promote and encourage recruitment to science, mathematics and technology courses in higher education: the maximum level of publicly-funded tuition fees for practical courses is more than double the level of classroom-based courses. The basis for action on the promotion of science education in Wales is to be found in the two documents, "Science in the National Curriculum" and "A Bright Future: Getting the Best for every Pupil at School in Wales", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

School Children (Central Register)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those local authorities which maintain a central register of all children at schools within the local authority's area; how often these registers are updated; and what assessment she has made of the accuracy of the data. [21503]

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected centrally.

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many persons in her Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents; [21511]

(2) how many persons in her Department were required to work in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks despite lodging a formal objection. [21479]

Mr. Robin Squire: These questions can be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what measures her Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if she will make a statement. [21473]

Mr. Robin Squire: Terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between the contractor or supplier and his employees, subject of course to any relevant legal requirements.

Compliance with health and safety regulations is a legal requirement for the contractor or supplier.

Open University

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate her Department has made of the number of part-time students financed by the open university in 1995–96; and what the estimated change in part-time student numbers is expected to be. [21816]

Mr. Forth: The Department does not plan the student numbers of individual institutions. The Open University registered some 121,000 part-time students in 1995–96. The Department's student number estimates for the sector as a whole for England provide for an increase of around 4,000 full-time equivalent students in 1996–97 over the estimated student numbers for 1995–96. This includes an allowance for growth in part-time and mature students.

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which former public sector research establishments in her Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in her Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21938]

Mr. Robin Squire: Since 1979, no research establishments in those parts of the former Department for Education and the former Employment Department which now form the Department for Education and Employment have been privatised. There are currently no research establishments in the Department for Education and Employment.

Pupil Exclusions

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of pupils permanently excluded from schools in each of the last five years in (a) total, (b) primary and (c) secondary schools; and what provision is made for the education of such children. [21985]

Mr. Robin Squire: Figures collected under the national exclusions reporting system for the period April 1991 to April 1992 showed a total of 3,833 permanent exclusions; of these, 537 or 14 per cent. were in the primary sector.

The Department published the results last July of a survey it had commissioned of permanent exclusions in the school year 1993–94. This showed that there had been 10,624 such exclusions in the 101 local education authorities which responded. Of these 1,230 were of primary pupils and of 8,960 secondary pupils; the remaining 434 were exclusions from special schools.

Under section 298 of the Education Act 1993, which came into force in September 1994, local education authorities have a duty to make arrangements for the provision of suitable education for permanently excluded pupils. They decide what is appropriate in each individual case. Many pupils are admitted to another school quite quickly; others receive education—for example, in a pupil referral unit or through home tuition—while they are out of school.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list local authorities in rank order in respect of the number of pupils excluded from their schools, in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [22376]

Mr. Squire: Information on exclusions in each local authority area is not available centrally.

Executive Job Clubs (Southport and Wirral)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what is the value of the grant paid to the executive job clubs in (a) Southport and (b) Wirral; how many people use each service; what is the success rate of service users in finding jobs after leaving each club; what is the current budget for the current financial year for each club; and what is the projected budget for the next two financial years for each club; [21784]

(2) how many service users have successfully found jobs after leaving the executive job clubs in Southport and Wirral in each month of their operation. [21778]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the questions has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Frank Field, dated 22 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your questions about payments made to the organisations running the Wirral and Southport Executive Jobclubs, the projected budgets for the next two financial years and the number of people finding jobs after leaving the Jobclubs. I am answering both questions in this reply.

The Employment Service (ES) has, for a number of years, awarded commercial contracts, after tendering, to external organisations and companies to run its programmes to assist unemployed people. The programmes and contractual agreements are regularly reviewed and monitored locally by ES staff.

Jobclubs have proved very successful since they were introduced over ten years ago, and the Wirral Executive Jobclub opened in October 1994, with both morning and afternoon sessions. Southport Executive Jobclub opened in January 1994 with an afternoon session.

During the period April 1995 to February 1996, 277 people in total have used both sessions of the Wirral Executive Jobclub, resulting in 156 positive outcomes of which 122 were job placings. In the same period, 138 people used Southport Executive Jobclub, resulting in 99 positive outcomes, 80 of which were job placings. The ES does not track clients after they have left Jobclubs, so it is not possible to say how many enter employment after leaving.

As financial renumeration is a commercial matter between the ES and its programme providers, I am unable to provide details for the Southport and Wirral executive Jobclubs. However, the total Jobclub budget allocation for the Wirral ES District for the 1995–96 financial year is £383,102, and for the Southport ES District £207,633. Projected budgets for ES programmes for the 1996–97 and 1997–98 financial years are not available.

I hope this is helpful.

Employment (Hull)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate she has made of the number of people sent for jobs by her Department in Hull where the wage offered is less than the benefits that would be obtained as a result of unemployment. [21501]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 22 March 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about an estimate of the number of people sent for jobs in Hull where the wage offered is less than unemployment-related benefits.

I am sorry but we do not collect the information you have requested. It may be helpful if I explain that the Employment Service does not have a general monitoring role on pay since such matters are normally for agreement between employers and candidates applying for vacancies. Indeed whilst Jobcentres ask employers for details of wages for the vacancies being notified to them, the information may not always be available as the wage may be subject to negotiation. Furthermore, when employers are offering low wages, people in Jobcentres will advise the employers about the local prevailing rates of pay for the job and whether the wages on offer make the vacancy difficult to fill.

There is a range of benefits available to help people who are in lower paid jobs. These supplement their income thus helping them to be better off in work. My local offices therefore try to make people who are concerned about taking a low paid job aware of the in-work benefits that may be available to them.

It may be helpful if I briefly outline the main benefits currently available. Family Credit is payable to people who are working over 16 hours a week and have responsibility for at least one child. Disability Working Allowance is available to those who have a disability and are working over 16 hours a week. Housing Benefit is payable to help people who live in rented accommodation and Council Tax Benefit is available to those liable to pay Council Tax. These latter two benefits are also payable to unemployed people.

I hope this is helpful.

Higher Education Funding Council

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has for the future chairmanship of the Higher Education Funding Council for England. [22930]

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has appointed the current chairman, Mr. Brandon Gough, to serve for a further two years until 19 April 1998. We are grateful to Mr. Gough for his contribution to the work of the council over the last three years and for his willingness to continue to serve as chairman.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Legg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the outcome of her consultation in respect of the school teachers review body's recommendation on schoolteachers' pay. [22931]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am today confirming that I am accepting the schoolteachers' pay review body's recommendation to increase teachers' pay by 3.75 per cent. with higher increases at the lower end of the classroom teachers' spine. This award will be staged so that most teachers will receive 2.75 per cent. on 1 April 1996 and the remainder of the award on 1 December 1996. I will lay an order before Parliament which will give the values of the new spine points and allowances with effect from 1 April 1996 and 1 December 1996.

I am writing to the teacher associations, the National Employers Organisation for School Teachers and the head teachers and chairmen of governors of all schools in England and Wales notifying them of my decision. Officials will be writing to other interested parties.

I have received a number of representations about the level of the award and the staging of it and considered them carefully. The Government have decided to stage the pay awards for all the review body groups this year. The recommendations represented a marked step up in the level of public sector pay settlements, compared with last year, with a substantial cost to public expenditure programmes. Phasing the increase will also make it more manageable for local education authorities and schools.

I have also received a number of representations about my other proposals for teachers' pay and conditions in 1996–97 including my proposals to introduce half points on the classroom teachers' spine with effect from 1 September 1996 and to allow teachers moving schools or returning to teaching after a break voluntarily to surrender discretionary experience points for non-teaching service. A number of complex issues have been raised which I wish to consider in detail. I will make a further announcement in due course on my decisions with regard to these and my other proposals for teachers' pay and conditions in 1996–97.

I am announcing my confirmation of the pay award immediately because I want teachers to receive the first stage of their pay increase as soon as possible after 1 April 1996.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress CambsTEC and Oldham chamber of commerce, training and enterprise are making on meeting the criteria for the award of a three-year licence. [22932]

Mr. Paice: I am pleased to announce the award of a three-year licence to CambsTEC and Oldham chamber of commerce, training and enterprise, which have now completed the process of meeting the rigorous standards we set.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Export Licences (Nigeria)

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licence applications for the export of defence equipment to Nigeria have been received since 11 November 1995. [18959]

Mr. Oppenheim: It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to disclose details of applications for export licences or export licences unless the requirements of confidentiality are outweighed by the public interest. However, statistical analyses of export licences granted for military, para-military and security equipment during 1993, 1994 and 1995 have been placed in the Library of the House. The analyses include all countries of destination for which such licences were issued, including Nigeria. It is proposed that similar analyses will in future be placed in the Library of the House at six-monthly intervals.

Arms Industry Subsidy

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what subsidy is given to the arms industry in Britain. [21051]

Mr. Oppenheim: Companies in the defence sector are treated no differently to other UK companies in that they are eligible for many of the schemes through which the Government provide assistance to industry.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many questions were tabled to his Department in each session since 1987–88; how many were not answered on the ground of disproportionate cost; what percentage of the total number of questions this represented; how many were not answered on the ground that the information was not centrally available; and what percentage of the total number of questions this represented. [21137]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of questions tabled to my Department since 1987–88 is as follows:

Year	Written	Orals (inc. supplementaries)	Total
1987–88	2,804	498	3,302
1988–89	2,140	432	2,572
1989–90	3,133	412	3,545
1990–91	1,526	375	1,901
1991–92	801	187	988
1992–93	4,355	571	4,926
1993–94	2,826	428	3,254
1994–95	2,729	427	3,156
1995–96 to (20 March 1996)	973	149	1,152

The other information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Competitive Tendering (Contracts)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years by his Department and its executive agencies after competitive tendering; and what was the total combined value of these contracts. [21042]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information relating to contracts is not held centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The chief executives of the Department's existing executive agencies have been asked to respond separately.

Data in respect of the former National Physical Laboratory, National Engineering Laboratory and Warren Spring Laboratory executive agencies are no longer readily available.

Letter from Seton Bennett to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 22 March 1996:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your question about contracts awarded in the last three financial years after competitive tendering.

Nearly all our major purchases of laboratory equipment are the subject of competitive tendering, but information on their number and value is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. This Agency has awarded two contracts for services after competitive tendering since 1993; one in 1994/95 and one in 1995/96. The combined annual value of these contracts is £20,655

Letter from Adrian Wilson to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 22 March 1996

I have been asked to reply on behalf of the Chief Executive to Mr. Donohoe's parliamentary question to The President of the Board of Trade with regard to how many contracts for goods and services have been awarded in each of the last three financial years after competitive tendering and what was the total combined value of these contracts.

LGC purchasing policy is to obtain formal tenders for all purchases in excess of £20k. To respond to the PQ, the information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 22 March 1996:

The President of the Board of Trade, the Rt Hon Ian Lang has asked me to reply to your question about contracts awarded for goods and services following competitive tendering by Companies House Executive Agency during the last 3 financial years.

The information you sought is as follows:

Companies House adheres to the guidelines stated in the DTI Procurement Manual and observes EC Directives and UK Regulations governing public sector procurement. In practice this means that in most cases, purchases below £250 are obtained via a single quotation, a minimum of 3 quotations are obtained for purchases between £250 and £10k, and above this level full competitive tendering is undertaken.

The table below give the information requested in respect of contracts above £10k awarded during financial year 1994/95 and 1995/96 to date. Information for earlier years and below £10k can only be provided at disproportionate cost.

	Financial year 1994–95	Financial year 1995–96
Number of contracts awarded	19	30
Total value (£ million)	7.2	1.8

A number of contracts awarded are for a 3 year period, and in such cases the estimated value over 3 years is included in the year of award.

I should also explain that the figure for 1994/95 is dominated by a single exceptionally large item, namely repairs to concrete cancer in the Companies House multi-storey car park. Our 1994/95 accounts disclosed a figure of £3.9 million for this work.

Letter from P. R. S. Hartnack to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 22 March 1996:

I am replying in relation to the Patent Office to your question to the President of the Board of Trade about the number of contracts awarded over the last three years.

The number of contracts for goods and services awarded after competitive tendering totalled 51 in 1993/94, 58 in 1994/5 and 70 in 1995/6 to date. The combined value of these contracts is nearly £15 million. These figures relate only to competitive contracts placed by the Patent Office and exclude purchases under established framework agreements available to us through for example the Buying Agency.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 22 March 1996:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question concerning the number of contracts for the supply of goods and services awarded by The Insolvency Service in the last three financial years as a result of a competitive tendering exercise, and the total combined value of these contracts.

Because of the number of contracts awarded by The Insolvency Service at each of its 33 sites, this information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 22 March 1996:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the value of competitively tendering contracts. I regret that the information you request can only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Post Buses (Scotland)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to expand the number of routes operated by post buses in Scotland; and how often post bus routes are reviewed. [21570]

Mr. Oppenheim: The provision of post bus services is an operational matter for the Post Office. I understand that 141 post bus services are currently operated in Scotland and that the Royal Mail regularly meets with regional councils and other bodies to review current services and the possibility of introducing new ones. One such review has recently led to the introduction of services with specially adapted vehicles for the carriage of wheel chair-bound passengers in the Linlithgow area.

Post Offices (Scotland)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many post offices there are in Scotland (a) in total and (b) in rural areas; and what the figures were in 1990–91. [21569]

Mr. Oppenheim: I understand from the Post Office that the numbers of post offices in rural areas of Scotland and in total for Scotland were as follows:

	March 1991	February 1996
Total	2,155	2,100
Rural	1,318	1,218

I also understand that within these totals a limited number of rural offices were reclassified as urban offices between these dates.

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21581]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of staff in DTI paid for work in excess of 48 hours in any week between 1 February 1995 and 29 February 1996—13 months—is 2,051. This is 24 per cent. of the staff eligible for overtime payments. Senior staff do not qualify for overtime, and staff working flexitime do not necessarily attract overtime in any particular week.

Iraq (Exports)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the outstanding debts incurred from export credit guarantees granted to Iraq. [21422]

Mr. Nelson: As at the end of February 1996, outstanding debts incurred from export credit guarantees to Iraq amounted, as measured by the level of Export Credit Guarantees Department claims outstanding for recovery, to £610 million.

Proprietary and Mutual Companies

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many mutual companies have proprietary subsidiaries; and how many proprietary companies have mutual subsidiaries. [21252]

Mr. Nelson: Information from which the answer to this question can be compiled is not available centrally.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the relevant background information he has compiled on moves to a conversion of mutual insurance companies along the lines of building society conversions. [21445]

Mr. Nelson: Conversions by mutual insurance companies to proprietary status are dealt with on a case by case basis. Past conversions have been effected under the terms of schedule 2C of the Insurance Companies Act 1982 which provides for the insurance business of one insurance company to be transferred to another company, and it is likely that future conversions will take place in this way.

Patent Office

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what access trade unions have to private consultants employed in the Patent Office; and what guidelines his Department has issued on this matter. [21660]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Trade unions have no formal right of access to consultants employed by the Patent Office. Much will depend on the nature and purpose of the consultancy.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the criteria used to select sections in the Patent Office being considered for process re-engineering, the sections in the Patent Office being considered for process re-engineering, and the number of posts that would be affected by process re-engineering. [21664]

Mr. Taylor: The criterion for re-engineering as for other organisational changes at the Patent Office will be the more effective delivery of services. One major project in the patents directorate, which directly or indirectly affects about 40 posts will be implemented on 1 April. This may lead to the abolition of nine posts but a final decision on the number will be taken in the light of experience. No compulsory redundancies are foreseen. Another project across directorates, launched in response to customer requirements, is in its early stages and detailed staffing implications have yet to be worked out.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's guidelines to Patent Office management on trade union access to staff meetings in the central inquiry unit of the Patent Office in which contracting out is discussed. [21662]

Mr. Taylor: Management at the Patent Office follows the Department's 1989 procedures for consultation with the trade union side on proposals for contracting out. The chief executive has also re-emphasised recently his readiness to discuss with the trade unions matters of concern to them. However, management must have the right of direct communication with the relevant staff on contractorisation as on other matters.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list (a) the total costs of employing private consultants, (b) the number and names of private consultants currently employed, (c) the sections in which private consultants are currently employed and (d) the number of staff currently employed in the Patent Office; and if he will make a statement. [21657]

Mr. Taylor: The total cost of employing private consultants in the current year is £138,400. Marketing Improvements and Coopers and Lybrand have been examining the office's marketing and information technology services respectively and Logica is to advise on possible use of the Internet.

The number of established civil servants employed by the Patent Office is 830. It also uses a number of external IT experts for specialist work and Employment Agency staff for general support services as particular needs arise.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's policy regarding meetings with trade union officials at the Patent Office; and if he will make a statement. [21718]

Mr. Taylor: The chief executive is ready to call a formal meeting of the Whitley council on any appropriate occasion. In addition he and other members of the Patent Office's management regularly have less formal meetings with trade union representatives to discuss matters of mutual interest or concern. I shall be visiting the Patent Office shortly for meetings with management and staff about a wide range of matters.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the criteria used to select the successful candidate to run the facilities management contract in the Patent Office from 1 April; and if he will make a statement. [21717]

Mr. Taylor: The criteria used to evaluate the bids to run the Patent Office's facilities management contract were as follows:

quality of tenderers' proposal, commitment, monitoring and assurance procedures;

tenderers' previous relevant experience;

financial, commercial and technical capability;

Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) implications including proposals for the future of former civil service staff; recruitment, vetting and training procedures (e.g. equal opportunities, health and safety);

conformance to Patent Office terms and conditions;

overall price and pricing profile.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has had from the manufacturers of titanium dioxide on the potential effects on their business of the introduction of the landfill tax. [21737]

Mr. Page: My officials and I have had several representations from one manufacturer of titanium dioxide on the potential effects on its business of the introduction of the landfill tax. My officials have also discussed the issue with the Chemical Industries Association, the main trade association for the chemical industry, who represent a number of other manufacturers of titanium dioxide within the UK.

Small Firms Loan Guarantee Scheme

Dr. Twinn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the outcome of the recent review of the small firms loan guarantee scheme and proposed changes to the rules. [22984]

Mr. Page: Following the announcement of a review of the scheme made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his November 1994 Budget Statement a consultation document was issued in March 1995. A wide range of organisations was consulted, including scheme lenders, small firms organisations and other Government Departments. After considering all the representations made about the scheme I am today announcing a number of changes aimed at simplifying the rules.

These changes follow a very significant increase in use of the scheme over recent years. Following changes made to the scheme in 1993 the Government are now guaranteeing over three times the number of loans, at around five times the value, compared to the period immediately before those changes. The changes that I am announcing today will help to ensure that this increased support remains focused on those areas where it can be of maximum benefit.

Firstly, I am reducing from six to two the number of size definitions used to determine eligibility for the scheme. Manufacturers will retain their current limit of £3 million a year turnover whilst all other eligible sectors will have a new limit of £1.5 million. As well as simplifying the present system this will give a considerable boost to the service sector which is currently restricted to a turnover level of £0.5 million a year.

In order to allow more businesses which have the involvement of an outside equity investor—particularly "business angels"—to benefit from the scheme, I am doubling the shareholding of such investors which can be disregarded for eligibility purposes from the current "under 10 per cent." to "under 20 per cent".

In order to help the smallest businesses, I am introducing the possibility of capital repayment holidays for loans up to £30,000 guaranteed under the streamlined arrangements available for loans of this size.

Some small businesses, particularly those in high technology areas, often face additional problems in obtaining finance. To help address this issue I will be seeking to add a limited number of specialist lenders to the current list of 20 and will be particularly looking for lenders with expertise in lending to high technology small businesses.

Since the increase in the maximum loan to £250,000 in 1993 the present maximum term of seven years is no longer always the most appropriate. Therefore, I will be raising the maximum term of scheme loans to 10 years.

A number of further changes will be made to focus more closely the available support. These are:

(i) following the changes made in 1993, a further range of businesses where support is often at the expense of displacement of business from other firms in the locality will be excluded from the scheme. The sectors affected are catering (except businesses offering accommodation), business to business retailing, and car valeting and associated activities.

(ii) the discontinuation of the present enhanced terms for businesses in city challenge and inner city task force areas;

(iii) adjustments and additional exclusions to take account of revised European state aid rules. The sectors affected are agriculture and fisheries, coal, shipbuilding, steel and transport;

(iv) a reduction from two years to six months, after the granting of a guarantee, in the limit for drawing down the loan or the initial stage of a loan if it is to be released in stages.

Except for exclusions due to state aid rules which will be put into effect forthwith, the changes will be implemented on 1 September 1996, following negotiation with the lenders of the necessary legal and administrative changes.

Social Chapter and Minimum Wage

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's estimate of the effect on the number of people in employment if the social chapter and minimum wage were introduced; and if he will place in the Library the information upon which his estimates are based. [22080]

Mr. Lang: The social chapter would damage the United Kingdom's competitiveness and destroy jobs, but without knowing how many directives and their terms will be adopted under the social chapter it is not possible to estimate how many jobs will be affected.

A national minimum wage would also destroy jobs. My officials estimate that its introduction at £4 per hour would destroy 1 million jobs, assuming a half restoration of differentials. A note placed in the Library of the House on 2 February 1990, entitled "Estimating the Effect of a National Minimum Wage", provides a detailed explanation of the methods used and the steps in the calculations.

Mr. Michael Jordan

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those (i) employees and (ii) board members in his Department's South West regional office who took part in the assessment of the regional selective assistance grant of £280,000 made to Pendennis Shipyard Ltd., Falmouth in 1993 and who (a) were directors of that company at that date and (b) subsequently became directors of that company; and if he will make a statement. [21186]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Mr. Michael Jordan attended, as a member, three discussions by the South West industrial development board of the application by Pendennis Shipyard Ltd. between February and May 1993. He subsequently became a director of the company in August 1993.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade between what dates Mr. Michael Jordan was a board member of DTI South West regional office; what was the nature of his work; and what other positions he held in connection with the Department. [21183]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Mr. Michael Jordan has been a member of the South West industrial development board since January 1993. The board advises my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on applications for selective financial assistance and on industrial opportunities in the south west. Mr. Jordan has not been appointed to any other positions by the Department.

County Ceramics

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what financial assistance has been given since 1990 by his Department to County Ceramics; and on what date. [21155]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 18 March 1996]: No assistance has been given under the Department's principal regional, enterprise or technology schemes.

Indonesia (Arms Exports)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what applications he has received for export licences for anti-ambush grenades to Indonesia. [21543]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Since the beginning of 1991—the point at which full records are readily available—there is no record of any applications for export licences for these goods for Indonesia.

Copex Exhibition

Mrs. Clywd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if representatives from (i) Indonesia and (ii) Iran were present at the Copex exhibition at Sandown racecourse in November. [21536]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 18 March 1996]: The Department of Trade and Industry was not involved with this event. From information we have about the event, no invitations were issued to representatives from Indonesia or Iran.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what access trade unions have been granted to private consultants employed in the Insolvency Service. [21659]

Mr. Oppenheim: The agency trade union side has been given the opportunity to meet and have discussions with consultants engaged by the Insolvency Service. In connection with the recent contracting-out exercise, the ATUS met both Stoy Hayward and Shreeveport.

Fur Trade

Mr. Heppell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value of fur and fur product (i) imports and (ii) exports from the United Kingdom in each year since 1988. [21373]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is given in the following table:

UK imports and exports of fur and fur products

(£ million, current prices)

Year	Imports	Exports
1988	56	105
1989	42	89
1990	25	55
1991	18	39
1992	22	39
1993	18	43
1994	24	50
1995	27	63

Note:

The products are defined by Group 456 of the Standard Industrial Classification (revised 1980) until 1992 and Group 18.3 of the SIC (revised 1992) for 1993 onwards.

EU Structural Funds

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the Government's policy on the European Parliament budget committee's motion in respect of additional funding for the Rechar 2 and Retex 2 structural funds in 1997 to 1999; and if he will make a statement. [21527]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 20 March 1996]: I refer to the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Esher (Mr. Taylor) on 22 January 1996, Official Report, column 5.

The amounts for these and certain other similar programmes are not due to be settled until after the next meeting of the management committee, which is expected to be on 24 April 1996.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assessment he has made of the impact on steel producing regions since 1994 of EU structural funds under the Resider II programme; and if he will make a statement; [21489]

(2) what official visits he has made since 1994 to steel producing regions to investigate the implementation of reconversion programmes funded by the Resider II programme; and what plans he has for future such visits. [21490]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 20 March 1996]: Visits by DTI Ministers to steel areas have not been specifically for this purpose.

No Resider II programmes commenced in 1994. In the UK, the western Scotland and Wales programmes were adopted by the European Commission in July and August 1995. The English programme is not yet adopted. It is too soon to assess the impact of these programmes.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) with which British (a) public and (b) private organisations he has held discussions since 1 January 1995 regarding extension of the Resider 2 programme and proposed funding levels; [21430]

(2) what discussions he has had with the European Commission and other relevant bodies regarding 1997 to 1999 funding for the Resider 2 programme since the management committee meeting of December 1995; and if he will make a statement. [21431]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answers 20 March 1996]: I have not held any such discussions, but my Department has, at the management committee for community initiatives in December 1995, and more recently in discussions with the European Commission, asked for a larger allocation for Resider, Retex, Rechar and Konver together for 1998 and 1999. I plan to make a statement after the allocations for these and certain other programmes have been settled: not before May.

AST Group, Aylesbury

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning the fitness of the directors and others of the AST group to be directors of companies; and if he will make a statement. [21497]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 20 March 1996]: No such representations have been received. The joint voluntary liquidators have a responsibility under the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 to report to the Secretary of State on the conduct of the directors of the AST training group of companies. Their reports are likely to be submitted in the near future.

Apprenticeships

Dr. Godman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his oral answer of 13 March 1996, Official Report, columns 969-70, what is the number of people serving apprenticeships; and to which trades they are apprenticed. [21676]

Mr. Paice: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is shown in the tables:

HEALTH

General Managers (Salaries and Wages)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the salaries and wages costs for each district health authority's general manager for 1990–91. [20596]

Mr. Malone: The information requested has been placed in the Library. The figures relate to the total salaries and wages expenditure on district health authority general managers in relation to the offices described rather than to any individual. Thus payments listed for a particular health authority could refer to more than one individual.

Community Care (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the per capita spending on community care services in each local government authority in the Greater Manchester area in the last year for which figures are available. [21420]

Mr. Bowis: The readily available per capita expenditure data for 1993–94 (the latest year for which information is available) were published in table E4 of "Key Indicators of local authority social services 1995", copies of which are available in the Library.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21470]

Mr. Horam: The Department considers prospective suppliers' personnel policies and practice as part of evaluating competing bids. But terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between the contractor or supplier and his employees, subject of course to any relevant legal requirements. Compliance with health and safety regulations is a legal requirement for the contractor or supplier.

Emergency Admissions (Statistics)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to collect and publish emergency admissions to intensive therapy units (a) nationally, (b) regionally and (c) by health authority. [21671]

Mr. Horam: The working group set up to formulate guidelines on admissions to and discharges from intensive care has recommended that the collection of this data should be introduced across the national health service as soon as possible.

This recommendation has been referred to the Review of Central Requirements Committee and the Committee for Regulating Information Requirements.

Supplementary Pharmacies

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact on community pharmacies of supermarkets with in-house pharmacies which dispense prescription drugs. [21475]

Mr. Malone: None.

Health Service Chairman and Directors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the percentage of males appointed as (a) chairmen and (b) non-executive directors for NHS authorities in England as at 1 April; [21720]

(2) what is (a) the number of health authorities and (b) the number of chairmen whose professional training was in (i) medicine and (ii) nursing as at 1 April; [21721]

(3) what is the number of non-executive directors with a professional background of (a) medicine and (b) nursing in respect of health authorities in England on 1 April. [21727]

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many chair persons of NHS trusts in England (a) have a medical or dental qualification, (b) previously were employed in medicine or a profession allied to medicine and (c) came from (i) a business or commercial background and (ii) an academic background. [22498]

Mr. Malone: A list of those appointed to national health service authorities and trusts as at 1 April 1996 will be published in the summer of 1996. This will include information on the gender and occupational background of chairmen and non-executives.

Health Service (Financial Management)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve the standard of health service financial management. [21726]

Mr. Horam: A number of initiatives have been undertaken to make further improvements in this area. They include:

(a) Corporate governance:

Codes of conduct and accountability have been adopted by the boards of NHS authorities and trusts. In addition NHS organisations have established Audit, and remuneration and terms of service committees, and chief executives in the NHS have been formally designated as accountable officers.

(b) Internal audit:

The internal audit development group, established to steer the development of the internal audit function is currently sponsoring a national controls assurance project. The project aims to develop a comprehensive risk and control framework for NHS organisations.

(c) Financial training:

A financial management programme was launched in 1992 aimed at improving the overall standard of financial management in the NHS. The programme is continually updated to take account of changes to the NHS and two further publications are due shortly.

(d) Financial monitoring:

The NHS executive continues to develop comprehensive financial monitoring systems to enable the financial management of the NHS to be closely monitored.

Kirby-Harris Libel Case

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who authorised the publication of the statement which resulted in the Kirby-Harris libel case. [21728]

Mr. Malone: We have no knowledge of who was responsible for authorising the publication of the statement.

Blister Packs

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what ways British standards covering the strength of blister packs for pharmaceutical products differ from those applying in (a) other European Union countries, (b) the United States of America and (c) Japan. [21783]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations have taken place with (a) consumers' and (b) child safety organisations about child safety in respect of blister packs of pharmaceutical products. [21782]

Mr. Malone: None. Blister packs are only one of several ways in which pharmaceutical products may be packaged. Marketing authorisation holders will take child safety into account along with other relevant factors in deciding on the most suitable packaging for their product.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what regulations cover standards for blister packs of pharmaceutical products destined for the United States of America; how these regulations differ from those in the United Kingdom; and what representations he has received from exporters; [21781]

(2) if he will list the internationally agreed technical specifications covering blister packs used for pharmaceutical products. [21780]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available. I have received no representations from exporters on this matter.

Doctors (Exchange Visits)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health from which countries outside the EU doctors are permitted to engage in exchange educational visits with general practices in the United Kingdom. [22386]

Mr. Malone: There is no restriction based on country of origin on doctors who wish to undertake either educational visits or exchange arrangements with general practices in the United Kingdom.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the joint committee on post-graduate training for general practice's proposals for the Department of Health to amend the 1994 regulations regarding exchange doctors to permit educational visits to general practices in the United Kingdom by general practitioners from outside the European Union member states. [22385]

Mr. Malone: Since January 1995, all doctors—whether from outside the European Economic Area or not—who enter general practice in the United Kingdom for the first time must meet a single standard for entry. This is the case whether the doctor is an educational visitor or part of an exchange agreement. Nothing in the regulations as they now stand prevents doctors who reach this standard taking part in exchanges or educational visits. The proposals put forward by the joint committee on postgraduate training for general practice to amend the relevant regulations would allow doctors who could not reach this standard to practise in the UK. Such a step would not be in the interests of national health service patients.

Eating Disorders

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual budget for research and treatment in respect of eating disorders. [22384]

Mr. Bowis: There is no specific budget for eating disorders within the overall research and development programme. The Medical Research Council, which receives grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade supports research into eating disorders. Health authorities purchase services for the treatment of eating disorders as part of a range of mental health services.

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS centres there are for the treatment of eating disorders. [22393]

Mr. Bowis: This information is not collected centrally. A Royal College of Psychiatrists survey in 1992 identified 21 national health service specialist centres for treating eating disorders in Great Britain.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which 10 trusts had deficits in 1994–95 in excess of £1 million; [22159]

(2) which trust in 1994–95 recorded the financial deficit of £8,378,000 as outlined in the NHS summarised accounts 1994–95. [22160]

Mr. Horam: Information on the financial performance of all trusts in 1994–95 is contained in "1994–95 NHS Trust Financial Performance", copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the 16 trusts which in the 1994–95 NHS summarised accounts recorded a financial deficit on grounds of (a) failure to achieve planned income, (b) excess expenditure, (c) activity levels greater than those contracted and (d) other reasons; [22161]

(2) if he will list the three trusts whose failure in 1994–95 to break even was attributed by the NHS executive in the NHS summarised accounts 1994–95 to excess expenditure. [22162]

Mr. Horam: The information for those trusts which recorded financial deficit on the ground of failure to achieve planned income were:

Louth and District Healthcare NHS Trust
Sheffield Children's Hospital NHS Trust
Greenwich Healthcare NHS Trust
Royal United Hospital, Bath NHS Trust.

Those which failed on the ground of excess expenditure were:

Humberside Ambulance Service NHS Trust
United Leeds Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust
The Poole Hospital NHS Trust.

The trust which failed on the ground of activity levels greater than those contacted was:

Lincoln Hospitals NHS Trust.

Those which failed for other reasons were:

East Anglian Ambulance NHS Trust
Mid Anglia Community Health NHS Trust
Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital NHS Trust
Royal National Throat, Nose and Ear Hospital NHS Trust
Crawley Horsham NHS Trust

Swindon and Marlborough Hospitals NHS Trust
Worcester Royal Infirmary NHS Trust
Wolverley NHS Trust.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the seven trusts whose failure in 1994–95 to meet the financial targets was attributed by the NHS executive in the NHS summarised accounts 1994–95 to miscellaneous other instances of poor financial management. [22163]

Mr. Horam: The information is as follows:
Cumbria Ambulance Service NHS Trust
Gateshead Hospitals NHS Trust
East Anglian Ambulance NHS Trust
Crawley Horsham NHS Trust
Royal National Throat, Nose and Ear Hospital NHS Trust
Swindon and Marlborough Hospitals NHS Trust
Worcester Royal Infirmary NHS Trust.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the 46 trusts whose failure to meet the target rate of return in 1994–95 was found unacceptable by the NHS executive in the NHS summarised accounts 1994–5. [22164]

Mr. Horam: The information is as follows:
Scarborough and North East Yorkshire Health Care NHS Trust
United Leeds Teaching Hospitals NHS Trust
Cumbria Ambulance Service NHS Trust
Gateshead Hospitals NHS Trust
Humberside Ambulance Service NHS Trust
Derby City General Hospital NHS Trust
Derbyshire Ambulance Service NHS Trust
Lincoln Hospitals NHS Trust
Louth and District Healthcare NHS Trust
Mulberry NHS Trust
Sheffield Children's Hospital NHS Trust
South Yorkshire Metropolitan Ambulance and Paramedic Service NHS Trust
East Anglia Ambulance Trust
King's Lynn and Wisbech Hospitals NHS Trust
North West Anglia Health Care NHS Trust
Royal Berkshire and Battle Hospitals NHS Trust
West Berkshire Priority Care Service NHS Trust
Ipswich Hospital NHS Trust
Nuffield Orthopaedic Centre NHS Trust
Mid Anglia Community Health NHS Trust
The Horton General Hospital NHS Trust
Oxfordshire Learning Disabilities NHS Trust
Oxfordshire Mental Healthcare NHS Trust
North Hertfordshire NHS Trust
Royal National Throat, Nose and Ear Hospital NHS Trust
The Whittington Hospital NHS Trust
Crawley Horsham NHS Trust
Greenwich Healthcare NHS Trust
The Royal Surrey County and St. Luke's Hospital NHS Trust
St. George's Healthcare NHS Trust
Queen Mary's Sidcup NHS Trust
Royal United Hospital, Bath NHS Trust
Swindon and Marlborough Hospitals NHS Trust
The Poole Hospital NHS Trust
Avalon, Somerset NHS Trust
Dorset Health Care NHS trust
East Somerset NHS Trust
St. Mary's Hospital, Isle of Wight, NHS Trust
Severn NHS Trust
Worcester Royal Infirmary NHS Trust
Wolverley NHS Trust
Alexandra Health Care NHS Trust
Mid Staffordshire General Hospital NHS Trust
Countess of Chester Hospital NHS Trust
Halton General Hospital NHS Trust
The Oldham NHS Trust.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which two of the 14 trusts that failed to meet one or more targets in 1993–94 and 1994–95 are identified by the NHS executive in both years in the NHS summarised accounts 1994–95. [22165]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is as follows:
Humberside Ambulance Service NHS Trust
Royal National Throat, Nose and Ear Hospital NHS Trust.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS trusts are currently on a red light because they are regarded as being in financial trouble. [22167]

Mr. Horam: Details of the financial performance of all national health service trusts is contained in "1994–95 NHS Trust Financial Performance", copies of which are available in the Library, the latest information being for financial year 1994–95.

In-year information used by the NHS executive to monitor the financial performance of NHS trusts is management information and as such is not published.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trusts and health authorities have not reported the conclusion of their contract negotiations for the next financial year in each region. [22169]

Mr. Horam: Information on health service contracts agreed by health authorities for 1996–97 is not yet available. Information by individual national health service trusts is not collected centrally.

South Tyne District Hospital

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the accident and emergency department at South Tyne district hospital, South Shields, is meeting patients charter requirements for waiting times; what vacancies there are for (a) nurses, (b) junior doctors, (c) middle-range doctors and (d) consultants at the department; and if he will make a statement about the future of A and E services at the hospital. [22166]

Mr. Horam: Details of the proportion of patients assessed within five minutes of arrival in accident and emergency departments are contained in the NHS performance guide 1994–95, copies of which are available in the Library.

Vacancies for nurses, junior doctors, middle-range doctors and consultants at the hospital are a matter for South Tyneside Health Care NHS trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mrs. Dorothy Blenkinsop CBE, chairman of the trust, for details.

Accident and emergency services in South Tyneside are a matter for South of Tyne health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority, Mr. W. M. Darling, for details.

George Eliot Hospital, Nuneaton

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the success of the accident and emergency department at George Eliot hospital, Nuneaton, in meeting patients charter requirements for waiting times; [22243]

(2) if he will make a statement about the future of accident and emergency services at the George Eliot hospital, Nuneaton; [22246]

(3) what vacancies there are for nurses, junior doctors, middle-range doctors and consultants in the accident and emergency department at George Eliot hospital, Nuneaton. [22244]

Mr. Horam: Details of the proportion of patients assessed within five minutes of arrival in accident and emergency departments are contained in the NHS performance guide 1994–95, copies of which are in the Library.

Vacancies for nurses, junior doctors, middle-range doctors and consultants at the hospital are a matter for the George Eliot Hospital NHS trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. D. Hopkins, chairman of the trust, for details.

Accident and emergency services in the Nuneaton area are a matter for Warwickshire health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority, Mr. G. N. Jackson, for details.

Market Testing

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 18 March, Official Report, columns 84–85, which trusts have market-tested each service, indicating in each case the outcome. [22484]

Mr. Horam: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

NHS Training

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data his Department collects on expenditure on NHS training and education and its distribution. [22168]

Mr. Malone: Expenditure on education and training is not identified separately in regional health authority nor health authority statutory annual accounts or financial returns nor trust annual summarisation schedules. Information on expenditure on education and training is collected separately from regional health authorities who currently have responsibility for commissioning non-medical education and training and medical and dental postgraduate education and training.

From 1 April, training activities not funded directly by health authorities and trusts will be funded via levies on health authorities: one each for NMET, PGMDE and SIFT—the service increment to support the costs to the NHS of undergraduate teaching. National information on these levies for 1996–97 was published in the Health authority interim cash limit exposition booklet, copies of which are available in the Library.

Consultancy Service Index

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 18 March, Official Report, column 86, on the consultancy service index, how many names have been on it and how many checks have been sought in each of the last five years. [22171]

Mr. Horam: The information is not readily available in precisely the form requested. There are currently 7,316 names on the index. The number of checks sought in each of the last five years is as follows:

1992: 54,480
1993: 62,389
1994: 46,307
1995: 51,375.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [20115]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 12 March 1996]: The advisory non-departmental public bodies that

Residential Care and Nursing Homes

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by local authority, the average weekly cost of providing a place in (a) residential care homes and (b) nursing homes administered by social services departments. [21401]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 20 March 1996]: The readily available information about residential care homes is not in the form requested. It is possible to construct gross weekly figures of expenditure on residential care placements of elderly people in local authority homes, from information supplied by local authorities, but these do not consistently reflect the full weekly average cost because of variations between local authorities in the method of including indirect costs and overheads. A table of figures will be placed in the Library. There are no nursing homes administered by social services departments.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many questions were tabled to his Department in each Session since 1987–88; how many were not answered on the ground of disproportionate cost; what percentage of the total number of questions this represented; how many were not answered on the ground that the information was not centrally available; and what percentage of the total number of questions this represented. [21142]

Mr. Hanley: The information is as follows:

Session	Number of questions tabled
1987–88	3,690
1988–89	3,036
1989–90	3,733
1990–91	2,700
1991–92	1,170
1992–93	4,438
1993–94	3,558
1994–95	3,413
1995–96 (to date)	1,045

The rest of the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the average cost of answering an (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary question from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each Session since 1989–90. [21786]

Mr. Hanley: We do not collect the information in the form requested.

South Georgia

Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards fishing in the waters surrounding South Georgia; and if he will make a statement. [21989]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Her Majesty's Government and the Government of South Georgia and the South Sandwich islands are determined to protect the South Georgia fishery. The waters around South Georgia fall within the area of the convention for the conservation of Antarctic marine living resources. The CCAMLR commission regulates fishing in the area by means of conservation measures. In order to enforce these measures more effectively, because of serious concern about fishing in the area in recent years in violation of the conservation measures, the Commissioner for South Georgia introduced legislation in 1993 establishing a maritime zone around South Georgia. This requires operators of fishing vessels to acquire licences in order to fish and provides for enforcement measures such as arrest of vessels and prosecution for unlicensed fishing. The legislation and the enforcement of it is in full conformity with international law and CCAMLR convention.

I am writing to my hon. Friend in more detail about this issue and will place a copy of my letter in the Libraries of the House.

Gibraltar

Sir Mark Lennox-Boyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on pensions in Gibraltar. [22839]

Mr. David Davis: The British and Gibraltar Governments have reached an agreement under which Gibraltarian and other eligible pensioners, irrespective of nationality or residence, will receive fixed payments representing their full entitlement under the Gibraltar social insurance fund which was wound up at the end of December 1993. To help meet this commitment, the British Government will provide assistance to the Government of Gibraltar at about £9 million for the first year, reducing progressively thereafter. A new pensions scheme, backdated to 1 January 1994, will be set up in Gibraltar on the basis of non-discrimination and full compliance with EC regulations. Funds for 1996–97 will be sought through a supplementary estimate. Funds will be additional to the planned overseas aid budget announced on 28 November 1995. A minute will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

TRANSPORT

Joint Enforcement Database Initiative

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department plans to invest in the joint enforcement database initiative. [21774]

Mr. Norris: The Department's Vehicle Inspectorate is investing over £11 million over three years in major changes to its information systems. This will improve the current links between the VI database and the traffic area network database, effectively giving a joint enforcement database. In addition, the Department is at present looking at ways of modernising the traffic area network database, including a possible full integration of the two databases. No investment has however yet been decided for this.

Driving Standards Agency (Dismissals)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 13 February, Official Report, column 484, if the Driving Standards Agency follow Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service guidance in all dismissal cases. [21817]

Mr. Norris: The Driving Standards Agency follows the Department of Transport's disciplinary procedures. These are substantially in line with the principles contained in Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service guidance and were agreed with the Department's trade unions.

The Department's procedures are currently under review and this will include continuing account being taken of ACAS guidance. The TUS will of course be consulted about any proposed changes to the Department's procedures at the appropriate time.

Driving Licences (Disabled Drivers)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many driving licences have been issued to disabled drivers during the last three years in each of the constituent nations of the United Kingdom and the United Kingdom as a whole; and if he will make a statement. [21871]

Mr. Norris: Information about the number of driving licences issued to disabled drivers is not available in the form requested.

Unlicensed Truck Survey

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will release the full figures of the unlicensed truck survey carried out in October 1995. [22065]

Mr. Norris: The results of the survey should be available early in April.

Unlicensed Light Goods Vehicles

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to give to enforcement officers powers to seize and impound unlicensed light goods vehicles. [22064]

Mr. Norris: None. Such vehicles are not covered by the goods vehicle operator licensing system. Vehicles for which the correct vehicle excise duty has not been paid may be wheelclamped and impounded: a pilot scheme is currently operating in London.

Crash Tests

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what side impact crash testing his Department has commissioned in each of the last three years; [22003]

(2) how much his Department has spent on the United Kingdom's crash test programme in each of the years for which figures are available; [22007]

(3) what assessment he has made of the relative performance in United Kingdom crash tests of different car models; [22005]

(4) if he will place in the Library the results of crash tests undertaken by the Transport Research Laboratory; [22004]

(5) if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the United Kingdom's crash test programme; [22008]

(6) what European Union funds or directives apply to the United Kingdom crash test programme; [22006]

(7) what proposals exist to bring in a side impact crash test in the United Kingdom. [22002]

Mr. Norris [holding answers 21 March 1996]: The Department's research related to crashworthiness continues to play a considerable role in developing standards for the protection for car occupants in side and front impacts and for pedestrians.

Most of the research on developing the side impact test procedure was carried out from 1979 to 1990. Over the past three years, research has concentrated on two major aspects. Firstly, the development of an improved barrier face which is used to impact the car. Secondly, a study of possible component tests to evaluate more easily the effect of modifications to vehicle components.

Over the last four years, more than £6 million has been spent by the Department on car crash testing activities. These activities have been carried out mostly in collaboration with other countries associated with the European Experimental Vehicles Committee. They include research into the development of test dummies and the design and development of test procedures and deformable barriers associated with frontal and side impact protection.

The spend for the years 1992 to 1996 is as follows:

1992–93: £1.58 million

1992–94: £1.56 million

1994–95: £1.1 million

1995–96: £1.9 million.

A further £0.92 million was spent on test procedures for pedestrian protection.

The Department currently has research at the Transport Research Laboratory on the feasibility of a new car assessment programme in which the safety of new models would be evaluated. As part of this longer-term—1995 to 1998—programme, the TRL is currently testing several safety aspects of cars in the supermini class to see if the results offer a reliable indicator of relative performance and how this data could be presented in a simple, meaningful and fair manner.

We will publish the results of this feasibility study and place a copy in the Library in due course. The report on the research will include test results if the comparisons prove fair to manufacturers and can be presented in a helpful and meaningful way.

Currently, funds for the United Kingdom's crash test programme are provided by my Department. EU funding to the value of £130,000 ecu was provided to TRL towards the validation phase of the frontal impact test procedure.

The proposals for a directive on side impact are at the final stages of adoption and my Department will lay regulations to incorporate them into UK law as soon as possible.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied by them. [21866]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 21 March 1996]: Following are the answers for the Department of Transport's only advisory NDPB—the Disabled Person's Transport Advisory Committee.

(a) The Government are required to consult DPTAC in advance of making certain regulations under part V of the Disability Discrimination Act.

(b) The Government are not required to publish its response to DPTAC's advice.

Sea Empress

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who was in command of the Sea Empress when she first struck rocks. [22379]

Mr. Norris: The person in command of Sea Empress when she first ran aground at Milford Haven was her Master, but the person conducting her navigation at the time was the pilot.

Crossrail

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list total payments to date made by the crossrail project to (a) consultants, (b) outside organisations and (c) individuals, indicating the name of the body involved and the services provided. [22241]

Mr. Norris: These are matters for London Underground Ltd.

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which former public sector research establishments in his Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in his Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21948]

Mr. Norris: The Transport Research Laboratory is the only research establishment of the Department, and I expect its privatisation to be completed shortly.

Display Screen Risk Assessment

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 419, if he will place in the Library copies of the risk assessments carried out at the traffic area office in Leeds. [21819]

Mr. Norris: I am placing in the Library a summary report of the risk assessments carried out by the traffic area office in Leeds.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 419, for what reasons information is not readily available in respect of the dates of risk assessment; and if risk assessments have to be supplied in writing. [21818]

Mr. Norris: Risk assessments are a continuing activity that take place as changes occur at workstations and new equipment is provided. Risk assessments will take place over a period of time beginning with the issue of standard self-assessment sheets and culminating when sheets are returned and any action is taken to rectify any problems identified.

All information obtained from risk assessments is recorded locally and is available for inspection by local trade union health and safety representatives and staff.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 419, when he expects the risk assessments to be carried out in the south eastern and metropolitan office. [21820]

Mr. Norris: A professional risk assessment will be carried out at the South Eastern and Metropolitan traffic area office during April 1996.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 12 February, Official Report, column 417, if he will list separately for each coastguard agency office the date when the last risk assessment was undertaken of the display screen equipment regulations and the workplace regulations. [21821]

Mr. Norris: The last date for which a risk assessment under the Health and Safety (Display Screen Equipment) Regulations 1992 was completed at Driving Standards Agency locations with display screen equipment was as follows:

(a) DSA Headquarters, Stanley house, Nottingham—February 1996.

(b) DSA training establishment, Cardington—December 1994.

(c) DSA Scotland area office, Edinburgh—October 1995.

(d) DSA Northern area office, Newcastle upon Tyne—March 1996.

(e) DSA Midlands and Eastern area office, Birmingham—December 1995.

(f) DSA Wales and Western area office, Cardiff—February 1994.

(g) DSA London and South-Eastern area office, London—the DSE risk assessment process needs to reflect a recent office reorganisation and will be completed by the end of April 1996.

The Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 require certain standards to be met—on lighting, heating, etc.—but do not require formal risk assessments to be undertaken. However, in view of the size of the DSA estate, with some 450 properties throughout Great Britain, a checklist containing the detailed requirements of these regulations was developed and issued to each DSA location in May 1995 to assist them in establishing priorities for local work.

Freight (River Thames)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to increase the use of the River Thames for freight transportation; and if he will make a statement. [21755]

Mr. Norris: The River Thames working group has been working to promote the use of the River Thames for freight transport. The Government office for London will shortly be publishing draft strategic guidance for the River Thames which will include policies aimed at helping to achieve this goal. The Government continue to promote the transfer of freight from road to rail and water through the freight facilities grant.

Red Routes (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the London boroughs that have a red route system; and if he will list those London boroughs due to have such a system during the next 12 months. [21754]

Mr. Norris: The red route network in London was designated in June 1992. The red route measures are in operation or the works are under way in the London boroughs of:

Borough
Barking and Dagenham	A13, A406
Barnet	A1, A41, A406
Bexley	A2, A20
Brent	A406
Bromley	A20, A21
Camden	A41
Croydon	A23, A232
Ealing	A40, A406
Enfield	A10, A406
Greenwich	A2, A20, A21, A102
Haringey	A1, A10
Havering	A12, A13, A127
Hillingdon	A30, A40
Hounslow	A4, A30, A205, A316, A406
Islington	A1, A501
Kingston	A3
Merton	A3
Newham	A13
Redbridge	A12, A406, A1400
Richmond	A205, A316
Tower Hamlets	A13, A102
Waltham Forest	A406
Wandsworth	A3, A306
Westminster	A41, A501

During the next 12 months implementation is programmed to begin in the London boroughs of:

Borough
Bromley	A232
Camden	A41
Ealing	A312
Hillingdon	A312
Hounslow	A312
Kensington and Chelsea	A4
Newham	A117
Richmond	A205
Wandsworth	A205, A3205
Westminster	A5, A5205

Shipping (Working Language)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what monitoring is conducted to ensure that all passenger and freight ships operate a single designated working language on ships sailing between British ports. [21747]

Mr. Norris: The Marine Safety Agency has a target to inspect every UK and foreign passenger ferry at least twice annually. Foreign and UK cargo ships are also inspected regularly either under the port state control regime or under the Marine Safety Agency inspection programme for UK seagoing ships. Communication among crew members is monitored as part of these inspections.

Emergency and abandon ship drills can also be witnessed during inspections so providing an opportunity to test the ability of key crew members to communicate with each other and with passengers in an emergency. The Marine Safety Agency also has a special programme of concentrated inspections on ferries which involves a team of two or three surveyors making a voyage on the ferry, initially incognito, and focusing on the safe operation of the ferry.

Air Crash (Colombia)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the action his Department has taken to ensure that parts taken from the American 757 crash site in Colombia are not resold within the United Kingdom. [21785]

Mr. Norris: Aircraft parts are strictly regulated in all member states of the joint aviation authorities by a control system known as JAA form 1. This includes a document which controls the release into service of aircraft parts. In the UK this scheme is administered by the Civil Aviation Authority.

All CAA approved maintenance organisations are regularly surveyed to ensure satisfactory standards are maintained. These checks include the sources and supply of spare parts, quality assurance programmes and stores procedures. Parts and components are not fitted to UK registered aircraft unless the certifying engineers are confident that they are in full compliance with the requirements of the CAA and those of the aircraft manufacturer.

Northern Line (New Trains)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the General Electric Company is contractually due to supply the first of the 104 new trains for the Northern line; and when he now expects that this train will be supplied. [22106]

Mr. Norris: The details of GEC Alsthom's contract with London Underground for the supply of new trains for the Northern line are commercially confidential. However, I understand that London Underground expects the first train to enter service in mid-1997.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Angola

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many UNITA military personnel have now been quartered under the United Nations Angola verification mission III operated in Angola in each of the UN quartering areas and in each of the age categories being monitored. [22101]

Mr. Hanley: As at 19 March the number of UNITA military personnel quartered in each of the four UN quartering areas was as follows:

	Vila Nova	Lunduimbali	Negage	Piri (Quibaxe)	Total
Military personnel quartered	4,816	4,442	5,003	2,145	16,406
Under 17 years old	954	576	359	237	2,126

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many weapons of each kind have been handed in by UNITA personnel under the UNAVEM III operation in Angola; and in what condition the verification mission has judged them to be. [22102]

Mr. Hanley: As at 19 March the following weapons had been handed in by UNITA personnel at the quartering areas:

	Vila Nova	Lunduimbali	Negage	Piri (Quibaxe)	Total
Personal	3,859	3,127	4,455	1,835	13,276
Infantry	437	361	211	35	1,044
Artillery	8	4	7	0	19
APC/tanks	1	0	0	0	1
Other	7	17	12	18	54

In his report to the Security Council of 6 March the Secretary General commented that 30 to 40 per cent. of the personal weapons collected are in very poor condition or not serviceable.

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which former public sector research establishments in the Overseas Development Administration have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in the Overseas Development Administration are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21940]

Mr. Hanley: From 1979 to date, no ODA research establishment has been transferred to the private sector. Over the period a number of separate bodies were brought together to form the Natural Resources Institute. The transfer of NRI to the private sector is in progress; a preferred bidder was announced on 5 March 1996, Official Report, column 166.

International Bodies (Funding Allocations)

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the funding allocations for each of the financial years 1994–95 and 1995–96 for United Nations Population Fund, the International Planned Parenthood Federation and the World Health Organisation special programme; and what is the proposed allocations to each of these organisations for the financial year 1996–97. [21987]

Mr. Hanley: The United Kingdom's multilateral contributions to the United Nations Population Fund, the International Planned Parenthood Federation and the World Health Organisation special programme of research, development and research training in human reproduction are:

£ million

Multilateral organisation	Expenditure 1994–95	Expenditure 1995–96
UNFPA	[1]11.650	6.750
IPPF	7.148	8.536
WHO/HRP	[2]2.785	2.000

[1] Includes an advance on £3.75 million from 1995–96 f/y allocation.
[2] Includes an advance of £1.0 million from 1995–96 f/y allocation.

For the financial year 1996–97, planned allocations to these organisations will be of a similar order of magnitude.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 25 March 1996

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

War Pension Appeals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, pursuant to his answer of 7 February, Official Report, columns 254–55, when the domiciliary visit to assess Mr. John Middleton's war pension appeal took place. [22172]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: As arranged with Mr. Middleton earlier this month, the visit took place on 21 March, that being the earliest date at which the medical member was available.

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21504]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: This answer is given on behalf of the Lord Chancellor's Department headquarters, including associated offices, the Court Service and the Public Trust Office.

The number of staff recorded as being paid for overtime which took their hours worked to over 48 hours a week are 143, 3,068 and 130 respectively, which represents approximately 15.6 per cent., 29.2 per cent. and 22.7 per cent. of total staff employed in the Lord Chancellor's Department headquarters, the Court Service and the Public Trust Office.

No records are held centrally, however, of the hours worked either by senior staff not eligible for paid overtime or by those on flexible working schemes.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21467]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between the contractor or supplier and his employees, subject of course to any relevant legal requirements. For certain contracts, however, the Department requests salary information from contractors and suppliers in support of tenders, as part of its value for money criteria.

Compliance with health and safety regulations is a legal requirement for the contractor or supplier.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Pension Fund

40. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, what estimate he has made of the continuing viability of the pension fund. [20674]

Mr. Alison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 29 January, Official Report, column 492.

The commissioners have had detailed discussions with dioceses about how quickly they expect to be able to raise the full costs of pension contributions and the response has been very encouraging. The General Synod has given general approval to draft legislation to give effect to the arrangements. This legislation is now in the revision stage and will come before Parliament in due course in the usual way.

Clergy

41. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the right hon. member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, how many currently beneficed clergy are (a) male and (b) female; and if he will make a statement. [20675]

Mr. Alison: As at 31 December 1995, 5,835 men and 63 women held benefices. The total numbers of clergy of incumbent status, including priests-in-charge and team vicars, were 7,417 men and 250 women.

ENVIRONMENT

Executive Action

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those areas of executive action where he has discretion to act in respect of an individual without giving reasons for his decision. [20542]

Mr. Gummer: Comprehensive records are not kept in the form requested but the following provisions have been identified from readily available sources.

Common lands

Decisions are required from the Secretary of State under public, local and private Acts. Examples of matters involving individuals are applications to the Secretary of State for—

Orders for the exchange of lands under section 147 of the Inclosure Act 1845, applications for consent to the improvement of common land under the Law of Commons Amendment Act 1893, confirmation of regulation of regulations under the Commons Act 1908, imposition of limitations on the public's rights of access to common land under section 193 of the Law of Property Act 1925.

Countryside

Decisions on nature conservation orders, limestones pavement orders, designation of marine nature reserves and orders in respect of moor and heath land in National Parks (under sections 29, 34, 36 and 42 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981).

Wild birds, habitats and animals and plants

Decisions on special protection areas for birds, designation of special areas of conservation, the system for licensing various matters in respect of sale and possession of wild birds (in particular under sections 3, 6, 7 and 16 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and regulations made thereunder).

Highways

Certain powers with respect to public path extinguishment and diversion orders and temporary stopping up of highways under section 120 of the Highways Act 1980 and section 261 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990.

Trees

The power for the Secretary of State to make tree preservation orders under section 202 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990.

Town and country planning

Various powers relating to the preservation of listed buildings and in particular sections 46 to 48, 54, 55 and 76 to 78 of the Planning (Listed Buildings and Conservation Areas) Act 1990.

The decision to issue a direction calling in an application for planning permission or hazardous substance consent under section 77 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 and section 20 of the Planning (Hazardous Substances) Act 1990.

Building control

The determination of questions referred to the Secretary of State about plans for building work under section 16(10) of the Building Act 1984.

Housing

Decisions as to whether to give assistance in connection with legal proceedings in relation to the right to buy (section 170 of the Housing Act 1985).

Landlord and tenant

Decisions about apportionment of rent under section 20 of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1927.

Rentcharges

Decisions relating to redemption and apportionment of rentcharges under sections 3 and 5 of the Rentcharges Act 1977.

Zoos

Decisions on revocation of licences, and on directions on dispensation from the Act under the Zoo Licensing Act 1981.

This list does not include certain provisions which allow the Secretary of State to take decisions which might in theory apply only to a particular individual, such as section 115(9) of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, which confers powers to specify generally or for particular cases purposes for which renovation work may be approved for grant.

Under section 10 of the Tribunals and Inquiries Act 1992, Ministers are under a duty to give reasons for decisions in any case in which a person concerned could have required a statutory inquiry or hearing to be held.

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which former public sector research establishments in his Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in his Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21939]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Hydraulics Research Station was converted to an independent company limited by guarantee in 1982.

Prior options reviews of the Building Research Establishment and the Health and Safety Executive's health and safety laboratory have been undertaken and the recommendations of both reviews are being considered. The reviews have addressed the relationship of the establishments to others working in similar or related fields and, among other things, the potential for privatisation or rationalisation.

Westminster City Council

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the district auditor's report on Westminster city council will be published. [22061]

Sir Paul Beresford: The timing of the publication of his report is a matter for the auditor.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent evidence he has evaluated concerning damage to the ozone layer; and if he will make a statement. [22063]

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of recent changes in the ozone layer over the British Isles; and if he will make a statement. [22814]

Mr. Clappison: On behalf of the Department, the United Kingdom Meteorological Office makes daily measurements of total ozone levels at two sites in the UK and publishes the information weekly during the sensitive winter and spring period of potentially low ozone. The Government also receive all reports from the World Meteorological Organisation on the state of the global ozone layer and information on the ozone layer over Europe from the European ozone research co-ordinating unit in Cambridge.

Statistically significant stratospheric ozone reductions continue everywhere except in equatorial regions, due to the high level of ozone-depleting substances in the atmosphere. Recent levels of ozone over the United Kingdom have been significantly lower on individual days than previously observed due mainly to a particularly cold stratosphere this winter. Some year-to-year variation is to be expected due to fluctuations in meteorological conditions.

During the next 50 years, ozone levels are expected to return slowly to normal as a result of actions being taken under the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches that do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches that proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22519]

Sir Paul Beresford: No cases have arisen in the current year. Two cases arose during the period 1 April 1993 to 31 March 1995: one in category (a) (ii) amounted to £16,526 and one in category (b) (ii) amounted to £21,500.

Organic Pollutants

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the 12 most dangerous persistent organic pollutants which the United Nations Environmental Programme has recommended should be banned; and if he will make a statement. [22227]

Mr. Clappison: The United Nations Environmental Programme has not yet come to a decision on the need to ban any persistent organic pollutants, although it has identified 12 substances that should be assessed for risks posed to human health and the environment. Consideration will then be given to measures necessary to control risks identified. The 12 consist of:

pesticides (aldrin, dieldrin, DDT, endrin, chlordane, hexachlorobenzene, mirex, toxaphene and heptachlor); industrial chemicals known as polychlorobiphenyls (or PCBs);

dioxins and furans.

The UK has played a major role in developing a proposed protocol on persistent organic pollutants under the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe convention on long-range transboundary air pollution. The Government support the UNEP initiative to build on this work, and will play an active role in its development.

Government Office for the South-West

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call for, and publish, a cost-benefit analysis on the work of the Government office for the south-west. [22355]

Sir Paul Beresford: The GOSW's programme and running cost expenditure for 1994–95, objectives and achievements, are contained in the office's annual report, which I have arranged to be sent to the hon. Member. For 1995–96, the office's running cost budget is £7.6 million. Details are available in GO-MINIS1, a copy of which is in the Library of this House.

The office's annual report for 1995–96 and GO-MINIS2 with details of Government office running costs budgets for 1995–96 will be available in due course. I believe that the Government office, operating within the rigorous framework of the GO-MINIS exercise, provides good value for money.

Bat Conservation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new proposals he has for bat conservation measures in (a) urban and (b) rural conservation areas. [22808]

Mr. Clappison: Four species of bat have had a range of measures proposed within biodiversity species action plans, which the Government are currently considering. A response to these proposals is expected this spring.

A range of measures within the rural environment to improve habitat identification and management are being considered. English Nature's species recovery programme for the greater horseshoe bat includes the promotion of appropriate land management around maternity roosts.

Butterfly and Moth Conservation

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new proposals he has to improve the (a) rural and (b) urban habitats for butterfly and moth conservation. [22816]

Mr. Clappison: Preparation of action plans for the large blue and large copper, and the high brown and marsh fritillaries, via English Nature's species action plans is in hand in appropriate habitats.

Work continues on five of our most threatened moth species—reddish buff moth, black-veined moth, Sussex emerald moth, barberry carpet moth and fiery clearwing moth. The 1996 programme involves enlarging the areas of available habitat and restoration of other sites in preparation for colonisation.

Sustainable Development

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the White Paper on sustainable development and the Government response to the second annual report of the panel on sustainable development will be published; and if he will make a statement. [22995]

Mr. Gummer: We will publish "This Common Inheritance: UK Annual Report 1996" and the "Government Response to the Second Annual Report of the Government's Panel on Sustainable Development" tomorrow. Copies will be placed in the Library.

The White Paper reports progress during 1995 in meeting the commitments which we made in previous White Papers and in the UK sustainable development strategy, as well as making commitments for future action. In particular, it highlights our new priorities for the year ahead and bring together the main quantified targets which have been already agreed by Government or which are under consideration.

At the strategic level, Government policy is guided by advice from their panel on sustainable development, which issued its second annual report in January of this year, focused on environmental accounting, biotechnology, forestry and the disposal of radioactive waste. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is writing to the convenor of the panel with the Government's response, which is also being issued in the form of a short booklet.

The White Paper and the panel reports provided an objective audit of the Government's success in moving towards sustainable development. They complement the recently published "Indicators of Sustainable Development for the United Kingdom", which aims to demonstrate the progress which the country is making towards sustainable development and to show where further action is needed—not just by Government but by business, local authorities and individuals.

Housing Partnership Fund

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the allocation of resources to local authorities under his Department's housing partnership fund for 1996–97. [23057]

Mr. Curry: Some 238 schemes in 181 housing authorities will benefit from the £30 million housing partnership fund for 1996–97.

The scheme, which brings together the combined skills of the private sector, housing associations and other local organisations, continues to prove a popular and successful one. It demonstrates the Government's commitment to supporting imaginative, high-quality housing projects which will be of long-lasting benefit to local communities.

The successful bids involve a wide range of innovative and valuable housing projects, which address local housing needs. This year, we have particularly focused on schemes to bring empty properties back into use.

The combination of public sector money means that up to £135 million will be invested to meet local housing need, help stimulate local economic growth and create jobs.

A list of the resources being allocated to local authorities under the housing partnership fund for 1996–97 has been placed in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Manchester Airport Exhibition

Mr. William O' Brien: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to 50 years of achievement of Manchester airport to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [22537]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 1 July to Friday 5 July 1996.

Parliamentary Questions

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many parliamentary questions have been tabled since 6 November with the indication that a relevant registered interest has been declared.

Mr. Newton: There have been 73 parliamentary questions tabled from 6 November 1995 until 21 March 1996 where a registered interest was declared—56 written, 17 oral. These figures do not include those oral parliamentary questions tabled but not successful in the ballot.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Attorney-General how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21585]

The Solicitor-General: For the departments and agency for which my right hon. and learned Friend is responsible the number of staff recorded as being paid for overtime which took their hours worked to over 48 hours in a week is in the table.

	Number of staff	Percentage of staff
Treasury Solicitor's Department	3	0.74
Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers	5	20
Serious Fraud Office	71	41.5
Government Property Lawyers	4	3

Information for the Crown Prosecution Service is not available except at disproportionate cost.

No records are held centrally of the hours worked by senior staff not eligible for paid overtime or those on flexible working schemes.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Heathrow Airport Passengers

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers arriving at Heathrow airport were refused admission to the United Kingdom in each of the last five years; and how many were deported immediately. [21079]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information on passengers refused leave to enter and removed at Heathrow airport is given in the table. The available statistics do not show how many were removed immediately following refusal.

Passengers refused and removed at Heathrow Airport

Year	Number of passengers removed
1991	8,086
1992	6,809
1993	7,155
1994	7,108
1995	7,937

Police Tasks

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) which of the 26 police tasks to be reviewed under the police core roles and ancillary tasks report have been identified as being less cost-effective if they were removed from police responsibility; [22083]

(2) what savings his Department expects as a result of the police core roles and ancillary tasks report; and if he will list the savings he expects to attribute to each of the 26 identified police tasks. [22082]

Mr. Maclean: Work is still in progress on these matters in consultation with the police and other interested parties, as part of the follow-up work to the review. We expect to receive a report on the review's proposals, including an evaluation of savings and other benefits, by the summer.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the Home Office inquiry into police core roles and ancillary tasks, established in 1993 and reporting in 1995. [22081]

Mr. Maclean: The total estimated cost to my Department of conducting the review, including pay costs, travelling and subsistence, and the final costs of printing and distribution, amounted to about £232,000.

Computer Misuse Act 1990

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought under the provisions of the Computer Misuse Act 1990; and how many of these have resulted in convictions. [22249]

Mr. Maclean: The information is given in the table.

Number of prosecutions at magistrates[1] courts and convictions at all courts for offences[1] under the Computer Misuse Act 1990[2] 1990–94

England and Wales

Year	Prosecutions	Convictions[3]
Indictable offences
1990	—	—
1991	4	2
1992	7	10
1993	8	5
1994	4	3

[1] Data for summary offences committed under Section 1 of the Act cannot be separately identified from other summary non-motoring offences.
[2] Came into force 29 August 1990.
[3] Includes persons proceeded against in earlier years or initially for other offences.

Buckley Hall Prison

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of concerted indiscipline at Buckley Hall prison have been reported to the Prison Service headquarters since the prison first opened; and what is the average figure over the same period of time for male category C training prisons. [22760]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 25 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General, to reply to your recent Question asking how many incidents of concerted indiscipline at Buckley Hall prison have been reported to Prison Service Headquarters since the prison first opened; and what is the average figure over the same period of time for male category C training prisons.

The number of incidents of concerted indiscipline reported from Buckley Hall prison since its opening on 14 December 1994 until 20 march 1996 is seven.

The average number of incidents of concerted indiscipline reported during the same period from male category C training prisons is 0.6.

Domestic Violence (Islington)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evaluation his Department has made of the domestic violence matters project based at Islington police station. [22542]

Mr. Maclean: The Islington domestic violence matters project was funded by the Home Office programme development unit from 1992 to September 1995. The work was independently evaluated by the university of North London and the final evaluation is close to completion.

Irish Prisoners

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what decisions have been taken by the parole board in relation to Irish prisoners who completed 20-year sentences last July; and if he will make a statement. [22417]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 22 March 1996]: Discretionary lifer panels of the parole board heard the cases of Sean Kinsella, Stephen Nordone, Noel Gibson, Paul Norney and Brendan Dowd on 12, 13 and 14 December 1995.

Noel Gibson, Sean Kinsella and Stephen Nordone were directed to be released. Such a direction is binding on the Secretary of State and they were released on 26 January. The discretionary lifer panels did not direct the release of Paul Norney and Brendan Dowd.

Holloway Prison

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Sir David Ramsbotham last visited Holloway prison. [21750]

Miss Widdecombe: Sir David Ramsbotham, GCB, CBE visited Holloway prison on 13 and 14 December last year as part of an unannounced inspection of the establishment.

Boot Camps

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on boot camps for young offenders; and what progress is being made in its implementation. [21752]

Miss Widdecombe: Our policy is to pilot two tough, disciplined and demanding new regimes for young offenders which are intended to break the cycle of reoffending.

Last September, my right hon. and learned Friend announced details of the first of these pilots, the high-intensity training regime at Thorn Cross young offender institution in Cheshire which will take its first inmates in the summer.

High-intensity training will provide the discipline which young offenders need. It will also equip them with skills they must have for the world of work, and it will tackle their anti-social attitudes by making them face up to what they have done and accept responsibility for it.

I hope shortly to make an announcement about a second pilot regime.

Chief Inspector of Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisons in England and Wales Sir David Ramsbotham has visited since his appointment; and how many reports, following those visits, have been submitted to the Home Office. [21751]

Miss Widdecombe: Since his appointment on 1 December 1995, Sir David Ramsbotham, GCB, CBE has visited 22 Prison Service establishments. Seven visits were as part of an inspection and inspection reports on these establishments will be submitted to my right hon. and learned Friend.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many questions were tabled to his Department in each Session since 1987-88; how many were not answered on the grounds of disproportionate cost; what percentage of the total number of questions this represented; how many were not answered on the grounds that the information was not centrally available; and what percentage of the total number of questions this represented. [21143]

Mr. Howard: The number of questions tabled to the Home Office in each Session since 1987–88 is:

	Written	Oral (including supplementaries)	Total
1987–88	3,846	414	4,260
1988–89	3,549	274	3,823
1989–90	3,252	212	3,464
1990–91	2,245	238	2,483
1991–92	1,351	134	1,485
1992–93	4,345	361	4,706
1993–94	3,348	267	3,615
1994–95	3,187	278	3,465
1995–96	1,310	98	1,408

The remainder of the information requested by the hon. Member could itself be provided only at disproportionate cost.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last visited India; at what cost to public funds; which places he visited in India and for what reasons; and if he will list the names of officials who accompanied him. [18575]

Mr. Howard: I visited India and Pakistan between 29 December 1995 and 9 January 1996 at a total cost of £34,201. The officers who accompanied me were my private secretary, a press officer and the head of the immigration policy division. The guidelines in "Questions of Procedure for Ministers" were followed. The necessary approval was sought in advance of the visit and full official programmes were followed which had been drawn up with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

In India, I visited Jodhpur, at the invitation of the Indian high commissioner for Great Britain, Delhi, Bombay and Amritsar. In Pakistan, I visited Lahore, Peshawar and Islamabad.

The purpose of my visit was to visit the entry clearance operations run by the Home Office in these countries, to discuss drugs issues with both Governments, to further my understanding of community relations issues and to help improve relations between countries.

Departmental Gun Clubs

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Government Departments have (a) gun clubs and (b) shooting ranges on the premises. [21988]

Mr. Maclean: Four Government Departments in Great Britain have gun clubs approved by the Secretary of State under section 15 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 in which members may use firearms for target practice without holding a firearm certificate. Information is not held centrally on gun clubs which do not fall under the section 15 scheme. Information about the number of shooting ranges on Government premises could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Involuntary Manslaughter

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consideration the Law Commission has given to the introduction of prison sentences for involuntary manslaughter; [21878]

(2) what action he intends to take following the publication of the Law Commission report into involuntary manslaughter. [21771]

Mr. Maclean: The Law Commission's final report on involuntary manslaughter was published on 5 March. It recommends reform of the existing law by the creation of two new offences of unintentional killing by individuals, for which a penalty of imprisonment would continue to be available, and a new offence of corporate killing for which a penalty of imprisonment would not be available. We are grateful to the Law Commission for the work which it has carried out in this complex area of the law. We will consider carefully the recommendations contained in its report.

Police Driver Training

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total amount spent by the Metropolitan police on driver training in 1995; and what is the projected budget for 1996. [22405]

Mr. Maclean: Driver training costs incurred by the Metropolitan police in 1995 were £5,410,352. I understand from the Commissioner that projected costs for 1996 are £5,629,832.

Criminal Records

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what records are kept of individuals' criminal convictions. [22157]

Mr. Maclean: Information about criminal convictions for reportable offences, including all imprisonable and specified other offences, is held on the police national computer and in the record library of the national identification service. Local police forces may also keep this information together with information about convictions for non-reportable offences.

Prisoners (Drug Testing)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners over the last 12 months have tested positive as a result of mandatory drug testing; and if he will make a statement. [22395]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 25 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the Office, to reply to your recent Question regarding the number of prisoners who have tested positive in the last 12 months as a result of mandatory drug testing.

Between February 1995 and January 1996 8352 prisoners were tested under the random testing programme with 3073 positive test results. Results for February 1996 are not yet available.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in Welsh prisons over the last 12 months have tested positive as a result of mandatory drug testing; and if he will make a statement. [22396]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 21 March 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 25 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners in Welsh prisons who have tested positive in the last 12 months as a result of mandatory drug testing.

Of the three Welsh establishments, Swansea and Usk/Prescoed began testing in December 1995 and Cardiff in February 1996. Results for February 1996 are not yet available. Of 74 prisoners tested at Swansea and Usk/Prescoed in December and January, 22 were found to be positive for drugs.

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21507]

Mr. Howard: Records of the number of hours worked by each employee are not kept centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21469]

Mr. Howard: Terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between the contractor or supplier and his employees, subject of course to any relevant legal requirements. Compliance with health and safety regulations is a legal requirement for the contractor or supplier.

Police (Body Armour)

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the British police standard of stab-proof ballistic material for soft body armour. [21532]

Mr. Maclean: Standards are set out in publications by the Home Office police scientific development branch entitled "PSDB Ballistic Body Armour Standard (1993)" and "PSDB Stab Resistant Body Armour Test Procedure (1993)". Copies have been placed in the Library. These standards have been agreed by the Association of Chief Police Officers and are made freely available to manufacturers and other interested bodies.

PRIME MINISTER

Taiwan

Sir Nicholas Scott: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to support the application by Taiwan to join the United Nations organisation and to seek support from Commonwealth and EU partners for it. [22219]

The Prime Minister: No. Membership of the United Nations is open only to states. Her Majesty's Government do not recognise Taiwan as a state.

Rathbone Community Furniture

Mr. Parry: To ask the Prime Minister what reply he gave to Rathbone Community Furniture, Liverpool, in response to its recent letter to him; and if he will make a statement. [22156]

The Prime Minister: My office has forwarded the letter to the Department for Education and Employment which will respond in due course.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his oral answer of 19 March 1996, Official Report, columns 167-68, to the hon. Member for Easington (Mr. Cummings) if he will list the advantages which will be given to the area by virtue of the creation of an enterprise zone; and how long it has taken from the first proposal for such a zone to the date of coming into effect of such a status. [22382]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 March 1996]: The benefits available to businesses during the 10-year life of an enterprise zone are the following: 100 per cent. allowances for corporation tax purposes for capital expenditure on industrial and commercial buildings: exemption from the national non-domestic rate on industrial and commercial property; a simplified planning regime; speedier administration of residual statutory planning controls; exemption from industrial training levies and from the requirements to supply information to industrial training boards; processing applications for certain customs facilities as a priority, and the relaxation of certain criteria; and the reduction of government requests for statistical information. Enterprise zones can effect economic activity over a wide area through displacement effects and are not the appropriate regeneration measure in most circumstances.

The Government announced that they would consider the case for new enterprise zones at Easington in County Durham on 29 March 1993; zones in that area were designated on 29 November 1995.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Taiwan

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has to reduce the tension between Taiwan and China. [22411]

Mr. Hanley: We have repeatedly urged China to show restraint and have called for an early resumption of the cross-straits dialogue. We have made these points to the Chinese directly at prime ministerial level and through the EU. We remain fully supportive of the actions taken by the United States to defuse the situation.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22520]

Mr. Hanley: We have made the following settlements, without prejudice, in respect of alleged equal opportunities breaches:

(i) in 1995 £5,000 was paid to a former employee. The case did not proceed to a tribunal or court.

(ii) in 1994 an out-of-court settlement of £25,000 was paid to a former employee. Industrial tribunal proceedings had been initiated.

In respect of other organisations, a without prejudice settlement for £20,875 was paid in 1995 to a former employee. The case did not proceed to a tribunal or court.

European Parliament

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 18 March, Official Report, column 11, what rents were paid for the various buildings rented by the European Parliament in (a) Strasbourg, (b) Brussels and (c) Luxembourg; and if he will indicate the floor areas of the buildings, the purposes for which they are used, and the nature of any applicable rent reviews. [22360]

Mr. David Davis: The information requested is as follows:

	1996 rent (£)	Floor area
Luxembourg		[2]140,000m
BAK building	8,593,930
NHE building	679,884
Schuman building	3,158,223
Senningerberg building	287,417
Tower building	1,504,316
Strasbourg		[2]120,000
Palais de L'Europe	664,084
IPE O, IPE I and IPE II	7,042,439
IPE III	4,016,552
Brussels		[2]175,000m
Belliard I building	4, 771,102
Belliard II building	1,210,748
Belliard III/IV building	4,328,590
Eastman building	270,054
Remorqueur building	251,708
Remard building	1,019,901
Van Maerlant building	3,232,279
D2 building	11,143,704

The Palais de l'Europe in Strasbourg and the D2 building in Brussels contain debating chambers for plenary sessions of the European Parliament. Other buildings contain offices and meeting rooms.

The figures for rent also include property tax. The rentals are calculated over 12 months on the basis of existing leases. They are not subject to periodic review, but the leases provide for indexing to the cost of living, or to construction costs.

European Union

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will conduct a review of the presentation of Government policy on the European Union. [20683]

Mr. David Davis: We have no such plans.

St. Helena

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what television satellite services are available in St. Helena; at what cost to the consumer; and if he will make a statement. [22037]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Cable and Wireless receives and re-broadcasts the CNN international satellite television channel. The cost to the consumer consists of an installation charge, which varies according to consumers' particular requirements, and a service charge of £5 per month.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people in St. Helena are (a) employed in the private sector, (b) employed by the Government, (c) unemployed and (d) working on community projects. [22041]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: There are (a) 786 people employed in the private sector, (b) 1,282 employed by the Government, (c) 254 unemployed and (d) 122 working on community projects.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which British Ministers have visited St. Helena in each of the past 22 years; and on what dates. [22033]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: There has been one visit at ministerial level: the late Neil Marten represented the Minister for Overseas Development in January 1984.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the trades, businesses, professions and vocations approved by the governor of St. Helena since 1994 which are new to St. Helena, are likely to be continued in St. Helena and which have taken advantage of tax holidays. [22034]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Coffee production—one. Cabinet making—one. They have both taken advantage of tax holidays.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what banking licences have been granted on St. Helena in the past five years. [22038]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: No banking licences have been granted on St. Helena in the past five years.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what activities on St. Helena have been privatised in the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [22040]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: No activities have been privatised in the past five years. However, the St. Helena Government have recently embarked on a public sector reform programme which they anticipate could lead to the privatisation of various activities and services in due course.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Telecommunications (Key Escrow)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, column 229, when he intends to announce the Government's decision on the introduction of a telecommunications key escrow. [22204]

Mr. Ian Taylor: As I made clear in my previous answer on 6 March, discussions on this important issue are continuing. It would be inappropriate to establish at this stage any artificial time constraints.

Satellite Dish Sales

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of satellite dish sales in (a) Wales, (b) England, (c) Scotland and (d) Northern Ireland in the last five years. [22235]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Estimated sales of satellite dishes in United Kingdom for each year from 1991 to 1995 are:

1991: 710,000
1992: 710,000
1993: 740,000
1994: 750,000
1995: 760,000

I am not aware of any statistics separately available for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what entitlements to paid leave for (a) part-time employees and (b) full-time employees are specified within the working time directive. [22267]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The directive specifies that every worker should be entitled to paid annual leave of the least four weeks a year in accordance with conditions for entitlement laid down by national legislation or practice. Member states may reduce this to three weeks for a transitional period of three years. The directive does not distinguish between part-time and full-time employees.

Employment Insecurity

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the president of the Board of Trade what plans he has to investigate the effect of employment insecurity on productivity in relation to (a) small and medium-sized enterprises and (b) the economy. [22290]

Mr. Page: The Department has no plans for research into this topic.

Community Pharmacies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if in considering the Office of Fair Trading review of resale price maintenance on non-prescription medicines, he will take account of the viability of community pharmacies. [22199]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Secretary of State has no statutory role or discretion in relation to the review being undertaken by the Office of Fair Trading. Representations concerning the viability of community pharmacies and other aspects of the review should be made direct to the Director General of Fair Trading.

Recycled material

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what discussions he has had with the glass industry in developing more end-use markets and products for recycled glass; [21738]

(2) what recent discussions his Department has had with the bottling industry regarding the use of recycled glass. [21743]

Mr. Page: My Department has funded an environmental technology innovation scheme project with British Glass to develop alternative uses for green waste glass—cullet. A number of interesting applications have been identified, such as foam glass building blocks, coffee tables, floor tiles and "glasphalt", and British Glass is now pursuing some of the more promising ideas under its own auspices. The environmental technology best practice programme will promote the results of projects aiming to increase the proportion of cullet used in UK glass industry. The Government frequently meet representatives of the glass container-making and using industries in the course of discussions on producer responsibility for packaging waste.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what studies his Department has commissioned to evaluate the enterprise potential of the manufacture of products from recycled material; [21741]

(2) what research his Department has initiated into the feasibility of expanding markets for products manufactured from recycled material. [21740]

Mr. Page: My Department periodically commissions the recycling advisory unit of the national environmental technology centre to carry out and publish studies into the market prospects for a number of recycled materials, including paper, plastics, metals, glass and wood. These studies, which include an assessment of the technical and market barriers to increasing the use of material for recycling, are in the process of being brought up to date, and copies will be placed in the Library of the House when they are finalised.

A number of projects under our ETIS and Euroenviron schemes of assistance had as their objective the development of new products using recycled materials, and the current environmental technology best practice programme will promote the results of projects aimed at increasing the use of waste paper and glass.

British Coal Enterprise

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how many companies are being considered for the purchase of British Coal Enterprise subsidiaries; and what criteria will be used against which to judge the suitability of the bids; [21742]

(2) what steps his Department is taking to ensure that workspace is sold to an appropriate purchaser with knowledge of and commitment to the regeneration of former coalfield communities through training and regeneration. [21812]

Mr. Page: The sale of British Coal Enterprise is a matter for British Coal. When launching the sales process, British Coal indicated that it would be considering proposals for BCE in the light of its statutory duties and the importance of ensuring continuation of effective assistance to coalfield communities.

The corporation has announced that two management buy-out teams have been identified as preferred bidders for the business funding and outplacement arms of BCE, and that Birkby plc has been identified as preferred bidder for BCE's workplace portfolio.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he has held about the disposal of British Coal Enterprise's property portfolio; who is to acquire it; from what date; what steps have been taken to ensure that the new owners continue to meet the needs of coalfield communities; and if he will make a statement. [22605]

Mr. Page: The sale of British Coal Enterprise is a matter for British Coal. When launching the sales process, British Coal indicated that it would be considering proposals for BCE in the light of its statutory duties and the importance of ensuring continuation of effective assistance to coalfield communities.

The corporation has announced that Birkby plc has been identified as preferred bidder for BCE's workspace activities. The corporation expects that the sales process will be concluded at or shortly after the end of March 1996.

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which former public sector research establishments in his Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in his Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21947]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The National Engineering Laboratory was privatised by trade sale in October 1995. The National Measurement Accreditation Service—NAMAS—formerly part of the National Physical Laboratory, was merged with the National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies—NACCB—formerly part of the British Standards Institution, in August 1995 to form the United Kingdom Accreditation Service, which was established as a non-profit distribution company limited by guarantee. The National Maritime Institute—formerly part of the National Physical Laboratory—was also privatised as a company limited by guarantee in October 1982, changing its name to NMI Ltd. The operation of the National Physical Laboratory was contracted-out in October 1995. Negotiations are currently under way with a preferred bidder for a trade sale of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist.

No research establishments which fall within the area of responsibility of the research councils for which DTI is responsible have been privatised since 1979. The plant breeding activities of the former plant breeding institute were privatised by trade sale in October 1987, but the establishment itself remains in the pubic sector as part of the Institute of Plant Science Research.

Commercially oriented research activity has formed, and will continue to form, part of the work of AEA Technology, which is also due to be privatised. This includes the rationalised activities of the Warren Spring Laboratory which were absorbed by AEA Technology in spring 1994.

In terms of those research establishments currently under review, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 26 January 1996, Official Report, columns 421-23. Each review will address the relationship of establishments to others working in similar or related fields and consider, among other things, the potential for privatisation or rationalisation.

Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service

Dr. Twinn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the annul report for the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service. [22983]

Mr. Lang: I am laying the ACAS report for 1995, before both Houses of Parliament today. Copies are available from the Vote Office.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to ensure that Ministers are aware of the views of the vice-chancellor concerning the use of selective quotations taken from the vice-chancellor's answers given at the press conference on 15 February. [17697]

Mr. Lang: The inquiry itself made it clear that Sir Richard Scott's views about selective quotation from his report applied to any summary of his report, whether by Government, Opposition or the media.

Business Employment

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what study he has made as to the changes in employment levels in the last year in respect of businesses employing (a) over 20 people and (b) fewer than this figure; and if he will make a statement. [20697]

Mr. Page: Estimates of the changes in employment levels during 1995 for businesses of different sizes are not available but it will be possible to derive such figures in future years from information held on the Central Statistical Office's interdepartmental business register.

Some information is available from the labour force survey, but with respect to workplaces rather than businesses. Changes in employment levels between autumn 1994 and autumn 1995, in workplaces with (a) fewer than 25 and (b) 25 or more people, are given in the table.

Changes in the number of employees[1] by size of workplace
Great Britain, not seasonally adjusted

Thousands

	Total[2]	Less than 25 employees[3]	25 or more employees[3]
Autumn 1994	21,632	7,157	14,237
Autumn 1995	21,977	7,145	14,578
Change	346	–12	342

Notes:
[1] Figures are for employees only, and excluded the self-employed, unpaid family workers and those on Government programmes.
[2] Includes some people who did not give the number of employees at their workplace.
[3] Excludes those who did not give the number of employees their workplace.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the privatisation of the Insolvency Service. [20684]

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) on 28 February 1996, Official Report, column 589.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Bilateral Aid

32. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals the Government have to increase the proportion of bilateral aid spent on meeting basic needs for poor people in poor countries. [20712]

Mr. Hanley: We are committed to the goal of poverty eradication in poor countries but we do not set rigid targets about the quantity of aid going to the poor; we are instead most concerned to provide quality, effective aid which makes a lasting impact on basic needs.

33. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in how many instances since 1979 aid has ceased because the country was judged no longer to need it. [20713]

Mr. Hanley: We have ceased normal bilateral programmes in a number of better-off developing countries such as Korea and Singapore. ODA policy is to continue to concentrate aid further on the poorest countries where it is most needed, and can be used effectively.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the criteria used to allocate overseas aid. [20708]

Mr. Hanley: The main criteria for allocating bilateral aid are the needs of the country concerned and the effectiveness with which aid can be used. A number of other factors, including good government, the commitment of recipients to political and economic reform and traditional ties with Britain, are also taken into account. There are also our obligations to multilateral organisations of which we are a member.

Rwanda

34. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of aid to Rwanda; what were the equivalent figures in the last financial year; what is proposed for the next financial year; and if he will make a statement. [20714]

Mr. Hanley: In 1994–95, the United Kingdom spent more than £45 million in bilateral emergency aid in Rwanda. In 1995–96 we have committed more than £7 million in bilateral emergency and rehabilitation assistance. In addition, we have contributed £41.5 million to EU actions since April 1994. Future pledges will reflect needs and the capacity of the Government and implementing partners to deliver assistance.

Sub-Saharan Africa

35. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the level of aid devoted to sub-Saharan Africa in 1995–96. [20715]

Mr. Hanley: Gross public expenditure on bilateral aid to sub-Saharan Africa in 1995–96 is expected to total nearly £347 million. Africa is also a major recipient of multilateral assistance, to which Britain makes significant contribution—estimated at over £355 million in 1993.

Lumle Agricultural Research Station, Nepal

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the visit to the office of the Minister for Overseas Development of the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir J. Stanley) and the hon. Member for Linlithgow about aid to Nepal, following the Inter-Parliamentary Union visit, what decisions he has arrived at regarding the Lumle agricultural research station. [20851]

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to him on 29 January, Official Report, column 506, and to the letter he received from my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development dated 8 February 1996.

St. Helena

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, by value of assistance, the fishing projects being supported by the St. Helena Development Agency. [22035]

Mr. Hanley: No fishing projects are being supported by the St. Helena development agency.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what have been the costs to public funds of supporting the operation of RMS St. Helena in each of the past five years. [22043]

Mr. Hanley: The cost of the shipping subsidy and associated costs in each of the last five financial years is:

1991–92: £0.920 million

1992–93: £1.389 million

1993–94: £1.071 million

1994–95: £1.152 million

1995–96: £1.346 million (estimate)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many (a) females and (b) males normally resident in St. Helena have commenced higher education courses (i) on the island and (ii) overseas in each academic year since 1990; [22030]

(2) how many (a) female and (b) males normally resident in St. Helena have commenced higher education courses (i) on the island and (ii) overseas in each of the most recent five years for which figures are available. [22031]

Mr. Hanley: All higher education courses have commenced in the United Kingdom. The numbers are:

Academic year	Male	Female
1990–91	1	8
1991–92	—	5
1992–93	7	7
1993–94	4	5
1994–95	1	9
1995–96	2	5

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what constraints have been removed on fisheries under the St. Helena five-year development plan. [22032]

Mr. Hanley: The principal constraints to the development of an economically viable local fishery at St. Helena are related to its isolated location and to the limited natural resource base available for exploitation. St. Helena's geographical isolation does not permit easy or rapid access to markets, and the lack of a safe haven with associated vessel maintenance facilities precludes the operation of larger locally based fishing vessels. The Overseas Development Administration has worked closely with the Government of St. Helena, the St. Helena Fisheries Corporation and the island's fishing community to promote the development of a viable small-scale commercial fishery. To this end, the Administration, since 1978, has invested more than £3 million in a series of technical assistance and development aid projects. The Fisheries Corporation is now considering how best to expand throughput to meet demand and to develop its export marketing strategy further.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the staff employed by the St. Helena development agency who have previously worked with British development agencies, indicating for how long each employee worked for the relevant agency. [22036]

Mr. Hanley: No staff employed by the St. Helena development agency have previously worked with British development agencies.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the expert staff for key posts on St. Helena who are provided by the British Government. [22042]

Mr. Hanley: The key posts provided by the British Government are:

Mr. David Smallman: Governor

Mr. John G. Perrott: Chief Secretary

Mr. Robert J. Perrott: Financial Secretary

Mr. David Jeremiah: Attorney General

Mr. Kenneth Jones: Chief Auditor

Mr. Chris Lomas: Chief Agricultural and Forestry Officer

Dr. John Sharpe: Chief Medical Officer

Mr. Keith Jones: Chief Engineer

ODA is also funding the costs of an additional 13 expatriates working within St. Helena Government Departments.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what budgetary aid by category he is providing to St. Helena during the current financial year. [22044]

Mr. Hanley: The budgetary aid provision for St. Helena in 1995–96 is £3.56 million. This is a single grant in aid intended to supplement the St. Helena Government's overall public expenditure budget.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what non-governmental organisations have been established on St. Helena for electricity and water supplies. [22039]

Mr. Hanley: None. However, the St. Helena Government are currently considering a consultancy report which may lead to a restructuring of the electricity and water undertakings.

SCOTLAND

Procurator Fiscal Service

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the procedure for processing complaints from members of the public about procurator fiscal offices. [21215]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate informs me that the Crown Office has recently completed a review of its complaints system. The revised system, which is about to be implemented, involves the introduction of a standard form for noting complaints. This will form the basis of a central record of the types of complaints received by the Department and the outcome of inquiries into those complaints.

The Crown Office has also produced a leaflet which will be available to members of the public and which will describe the procedure for making complaints and the way in which they will be handled. Complaints will be investigated by or under the supervision of procurators fiscal, regional procurators fiscal or the Crown agent as appropriate.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions disciplinary action was taken against employees of the procurator fiscal service as a result of complaints from members of the public in each of the last five years. [21217]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Crown Office has no record of disciplinary action being taken against any member of staff in the last five years as a result of complaints from members of the public.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many complaints about the operation of the Glasgow procurator fiscal office he has received from members of the public in each of the last five years; [21216]

(2) how many complaints against the operation of procurator fiscal offices in Scotland he received in each of the past five years. [21214]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate informs me that this information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost as there is no central record of the number of complaints made about the operation of procurator fiscal offices. The procurator fiscal at Glasgow has checked his records for 1995 and 1996 to date. During that period only one written complaint was received from a member of the public about the actions of a member of his staff.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the work of the procurator fiscal service in respect of on-going staff training and development. [21218]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate informs me that the Crown Office and procurator fiscal service committed to the principles of "Investors in People" in December 1994. A departmental training and development group works with regional groups to take forward the training and development of staff in accordance with a training strategy agreed by senior management which addressed induction, core and development needs of each staff group. The group is currently revising competences which will form the basis of performance appraisal and be a foundation for future training. The link between competences and vocational qualifications is under consideration. The training strategy reflects the overall objectives, values and business requirements of the organisation and includes an objective to provide training on a complaints system which is about to be implemented.

Small Claims

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases have come before the sheriff courts in each sheriffdom under the small claims procedures in the last three years. [22442]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested in relation to small claims initiated is shown in the table.

Sheriffdom	1993	1994	1995
Glasgow and Strathkelvin	11,322	10,401	10,240
Grampian, Highland and Islands	12,175	11,024	9,149
Lothian and Borders	12,733	12,116	11,584
North Strathclyde	11,430	8,646	8,306
South Strathclyde, Dumfries and Galloway	12,026	9,966	8,917
Tayside, Central and Fife	13,028	11,849	11,481
Total	72,714	64,002	59,677

Dental Services

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been deregistered from their dentist since 1992 in each health board area; and if he will make a statement. [20875]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information supplied by health boards about deregistration is listed in the table:

Number of patients deregistered from April 1992 to February 1996 by Health Board

Health Board	Number of patients de-registered[1]
Argyll and Clyde	2,349
Ayrshire and Arran	1,817
Borders	2,156
Dumfries and Galloway	7,033
Fife	1,535
Forth Valley	576
Grampian	3,302
Greater Glasgow	2,231
Highland	1,448
Lanarkshire	903
Lothian	4,127
Orkney	—
Shetland	—
Tayside	[2]1,677
Western Isles	53
Total	29,207

[1] The total is the number deregistered by dentists for reasons other than the dentist moving, relocating, non-payment of bills etc or because a patient has entered into a private contract with the dentist. The information was supplied for management purposes only and is not statistically validated.
[2] From July 1992.

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21512]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Records of the number of hours worked by each employee are not held centrally and the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Amey Construction Ltd.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list projects in which Amey Construction Ltd. were employed by the Scottish Office as contractors, by subject and by value, in the financial years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [22028]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Amey Construction Ltd. is currently employed by the Scottish Office on only one project, a joint venture with Miller Construction to upgrade the A1 trunk road between Haddington and Tranent.

The contract was let during financial year 1994–95 and is worth £26.61 million.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Royal Opera House

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment she has made of the impact of redundancy costs on the Royal Opera House. [18226]

Mr. Sproat: Central Government support for the arts in England is channelled through the Arts Council of England. The council works closely with its client bodies, including the Royal Opera House, in assessing the artistic, financial and management implications of forecast budgets and other plans.

HEALTH

Human Embryos

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many human embryos have to date been licensed for creation and storage by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority; in how many of those cases the period of maximum storage for which consent was given was less than five years; in how many of those cases in which the authorised storage period has passed the embryos have been (a) implanted, (b) destroyed, (c) used for research purposes and (d) experienced other outcomes; and if he will make a statement on the action the authority takes to ensure that maximum storage periods are not exceeded and that embryos which reach the end of the authorised storage period die in a manner consistent with their status. [19654]

Mr. Horam: The records of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority show that the number of embryos created in IVF treatment in the period 1 August 1991 to 1994 inclusive—latest available figures—was 302,156. Of these, the number of embryos placed in store during the same period was 64,161. Information on the number of people who consented to a storage period of fewer than five years and the purpose for which consent was given is not held centrally. This information is contained on the consent forms which are held by patients and the licensed centres.

The HFEA's code of practice sets out the action necessary in licensed centres to sustain appropriate standards in the storage of embryos. Copies of the code of practice are available in the Library. Licensed centres are held to account for compliance with the code of practice when the HFEA carried out its annual inspection of centres.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 4 March, Official Report, column 67, how many live babies were born from the human embryos frozen between 1991 and 1994; and what percentage of the number of embryos frozen this represents. [20385]

Mr. Horam: The number of embryos used in treatment cycles during the period 1 August 1991 to 1994 inclusive includes embryos frozen prior to 1991. The number of babies born from frozen embryos during the period 1 August 1991 to 1994 inclusive was 1,339.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many women had embryos implanted from 1991 to 1994 under the terms of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990; and how much was paid in fees for treatment by these women over the same period. [20386]

Mr. Horam: The number of women who had embryos transferred to the uterus in the period 1 August 1991 to 1994 inclusive was 36,867. The Department of Health does not collect information about fees paid for treatment.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many human embryos have been frozen in each year since the practice was first sanctioned by law. [18317]

Mr. Horam [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1996, c. 67]: I regret that there was an error in the information provided. The correct reply should read as follows.

As recorded in the records of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority, the number of embryos placed in store following in-vitro fertilisation treatment in each year was as follows:

1991: 4,969 (from 1 August)

1992: 15,940

1993: 19,756

1994: 23,496

Data for 1995 have not yet been validated.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many frozen human embryos have been experimented on and then destroyed since the practice was first sanctioned by law; [18318]

(2) how many unfrozen human embryos have been experimented on and then destroyed since the practice was first sanctioned by law. [18319]

Mr. Horam [pursuant to his reply, 4 March 1996, c. 67]: I regret that there were two errors in the information provided.

The total number of embryos created in in-vitro fertilisation treatment from 1 August 1991 to 1994 inclusive was 302,156, not 498,493. Of these, the number donated for research during the same period was 27,524, not 27,493, as previously stated.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many human embryos were used in treatment cycles from 1991 to 1994. [19787]

Mr. Horam [pursuant to his reply, 8 March 1996, c. 386]: I regret that there was an error in the information provided.

As recorded in the records of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority, the number of embryos used in treatment cycles between 1 August 1991 and 1994 inclusive was 139,973, not 140,410, as stated previously. This includes fresh and frozen embryos.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many human embryos were destroyed between 1991 and 1994 at the request of their parents. [19788]

Mr. Horam [pursuant to his reply, 8 March 1996, c. 386]: I regret that there was an error in the information provided.

The number of embryos created in in-vitro fertilisation treatment that were not frozen or used for treatment or for other purposes during the period in question was 90,491, not 90,756 as stated previously. As required by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act, decisions about these embryos would have been taken only with the consent of the couple involved.

Private Cosmetic Surgery

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to publish the study commissioned by the Department of Health from the British Association of Plastic Surgeons on private cosmetic surgery started in July 1995. [21385]

Mr. Horam: We are awaiting a full analysis of the British Association of Plastic Surgeons' survey.

Health Authorities (Spending Targets)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total amount by which NHS authorities failed to meet their spending targets in the year 1994–95. [21651]

Mr. Horam: The spending of four district health authorities and five family health services authorities exceeded their cash limits by a total of £694,000.

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons he cancelled at short notice his commitments personally to open the new mental health unit at City and Hackney community services trust. [21732]

Mr. Horam: My right hon. Friend was called to attend a meeting of the Cabinet.

Blister Packs

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of hospital admissions are due to ailments caused by children ingesting pharmaceutical products they have extracted from blister packs in the last year for which figures are available. [21823]

Mr. Malone: The information is not available centrally.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on which basis the star rating system of triage in accident and emergency departments has been calculated; and what weight is given to (a) the quality and (b) speed of assessment. [21959]

Mr. Horam: The basis for star ratings for performance on the patients charter immediate assessment standard is set out in the national health service performance guide. The figure given for each unit is the number of patients seen and assessed by a qualified person within five minutes of arrival at the A and E department, as a percentage of the total number arriving. Star ratings indicate that the Audit Commissions' auditors were satisfied with the data collection systems.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the performance of accident and emergency departments operating triage (a) 24 hours and (b) 12 hours a day. [21953]

Mr. Horam: In the first three quarters of the year 1995–96, 93 per cent. of patients were seen and assessed by a nurse or doctor within five minutes of their arrival at the A and E department.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the performance of patients (a) seen by a triage nurse before being registered and (b) seen after registration in accident and emergency departments. [21957]

Mr. Horam: This information is not collected centrally. The organisation of A and E departments is a matter for local decision.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the relationship between performance star rating and the quality of care received by the patient in accident and emergency departments. [21956]

Mr. Horam: The patients charter sets out standards on quality of service for the national health service. One such standard is the length of time spent waiting for initial assessment in an A and E department.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has asked the NHS chief executive to review with health authorities their plans for emergency services. This review will examine the scope for developing further standards which are accepted by professional staff as relevant indicators of quality.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sample size was used in the study of triage in accident and emergency departments. [21958]

Mr. Horam: I understand that the hon. Lady is referring to the "Study of the Value of Initial Patient Assessment within the Accident and Emergency Department and the Most Effective Way of Achieving this Activity", copies of which have been placed in the Library. This study was commissioned by the patients charter unit of this Department and conducted by Mr. Gary J. Jones, who collected information from 46 hospitals.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement about the future of accident and emergency department services at the royal infirmary, Halifax; [22475]

(2) if the accident and emergency department of the royal infirmary, Halifax, is meeting patients charter requirements for waiting times in accident and emergency services; [22529]

(3) in respect of the accident and emergency department at the royal infirmary, Halifax, what vacancies there are for nurses, junior doctors, middle-range doctors and consultants. [22474]

Mr. Horam: Accident and emergency services in Halifax are a matter for West Yorkshire health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority, Mr. Peter Wood, for details.

Details of the proportion of patients assessed within five minutes of arrival in accident and emergency departments are contained in the NHS performance guide 1994–95, copies of which are available in the Library.

Vacancies for nurses, junior doctors, middle-range doctors and consultants at the hospital are a matter for Calderdale Healthcare national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Allan Templeton, chairman of the trust, for details.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what vacancies there are currently for (a) nurses, (b) junior doctors, (c) middle-range doctors and (d) consultants at the accident and emergency department at Dryburn hospital, Durham; if the department is meeting patients charter requirements for accident and emergency waiting times; and if he will make a statement about the future of accident and emergency services at the hospital. [22224]

Mr. Horam: Vacancies for nurses, junior doctors, middle-range doctors and consultants at the hospital are a matter for North Durham Acute Hospitals national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Colin P. Douglas, chairman of the trust, for details.

Details of the proportion of patients assessed within five minutes of arrival in accident and emergency departments are contained in the NHS performance guide 1994–95, copies of which are available in the Library.

Accident and emergency services in North Durham are a matter for North Durham health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority, Professor John I. Clarke, for details.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of accident and emergency departments in Greater Manchester with reference to the findings of the Audit Commission report. [22435]

Mr. Horam: Accident and emergency services in Greater Manchester are a matter for the six local health authorities: Bury and Rochdale, Manchester, Salford and Trafford, Stockport, West Pennine, and Wigan and Bolton. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the respective health authorities for details.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what vacancies there are for nurses, junior doctors, middle-range doctors and consultants in respect of the accident and emergency department at the Homerton hospital, east London; if the department is meeting patients charter requirements for waiting times in accident and emergency; and if he will make a statement about the future of accident and emergency services at the hospital. [22387]

Mr. Horam: Vacancies for nurses, junior doctors, middle-range doctors and consultants at the hospital are a matter for Homerton Hospital NHS trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Michael Haines, chairman of the trust, for details.

Details of the proportion of patients assessed with five minutes of arrival in accident and emergency departments are contained in the NHS performance guide 1994–95, copies of which are available in the Library.

Accident and emergency services in east London are a matter for the East London and the City health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority, Frances Heidensohn, for details.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies there are for nurses, junior doctors, middle-range doctors and consultants in respect of the accident and emergency department at North Manchester general hospital; if the department is meeting the patients charter requirements for waiting times; and if he will make a statement about the future of these services at the hospital. [22390]

Mr. Horam: Vacancies for nurses, junior doctors, middle-range doctors and consultants at North Manchester general hospital are a matter for North Manchester Healthcare NHS trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. David Wilson, chairman of the trust, for details.

Details of the proportion of patients assessed within five minutes of arrival in accident and emergency departments are contained in the NHS performance guide 1994–95, copies of which are available in the Library.

Accident and emergency services in Manchester are a matter for Manchester health commission. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the commission, Professor R. D. H. Boyd, for details.

Smoking and Drinking-related Deaths

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what comparison he has made between the number of deaths attributable to smoking and to excessive alcohol consumption; what are the figures for each in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [22105]

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 10 January, Official Report, columns 231–32.

Free Prescriptions

Mr. Walden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what additional revenue would accrue from limiting free prescriptions to those on income support. [21744]

Mr. Malone: It is not possible to make a reliable estimate. The present categories of exemption or remission are not mutually exclusive. Many people qualify under several categories and therefore no reliable estimates can be made of the number of those who would qualify under income support alone and hence the number of people who would no longer qualify for free prescriptions.

NHS Management (Salaries)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many chairmen of health service bodies have salary payments made directly to them; how many receive payments indirectly; and what have been these numbers in each year since 1992. [22749]

Mr. Malone: Remuneration should be paid directly to the chairmen of all national health service bodies to comply with Inland Revenue requirements.

Triazolam

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health under what powers, from which Acts, the suspension of the product licenses for triazolam referred to in the letter dated 1 October 1991 from the then chairman of the Committee on Safety of Medicines was made; and on which of the grounds specified in these Acts the Committee on Safety of Medicines based its view that the product licences should be suspended. [20930]

Mr. Malone: Product licences for triazolam were suspended on 2 October 1991 in accordance with the powers available in paragraphs 10 and 11 of schedule 2 to the Medicines Act 1968. The grounds were that the products could no longer be regarded as products which could safely be administered for the purposes indicated in the licences.

Mianserin

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on which dates the adverse reactions group of the subcommittee on efficacy and adverse reactions and the Committee on Safety of Medicines considered safety issues relating to the antidepressant mianserin; what advice was given to the licensing authority; and on what dates that advice was given. [20931]

Mr. Malone: Safety issues relating to mianserin were considered by these committees on a number of occasions between 1981 and 1990. The advice given to the Licensing Authority is confidential.

Oral Contraceptives

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures the Committee on Safety of Medicines took at its meeting on 13 October 1995 to ensure that the apparent association between third generation oral contraceptives and venous thromboembolism was not due to chance, confounding or bias. [20932]

Mr. Malone: The committee took particular care to examine these issues on the basis of all the evidence available and concluded that the association could not be fully explained by chance, bias or confounding.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason the intention of the chief executive of the Medicines Control Agency, as expressed in writing on 18 October 1995, to take regulatory action on third generation oral contraceptives was halted; on whose authority this decision was made; and what was the effect of this decision on the ability of the Licensing Authority to fulfil its statutory duties. [20929]]

Mr. Malone: Regulatory action is initiated by the Licensing Authority. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 19 December 1995, Official Report, column 1149, in which I made it clear that such matters are confidential until regulatory action has been completed.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who drafted and on what date the "Dear Doctor" letter of 18 October 1995; and if it was agreed by the Committee on Safety of Medicines at its meeting on 13 October 1995. [20935]

Mr. Malone: The chairman of the Committee on Safety of Medicines drafted the letter following the meeting of the Committee on Safety of Medicines on 13 October 1995, on the basis of the recommendations made by the committee.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations in respect of the Licensing Authority's view of the potential safety concern regarding third generation oral contraceptives the chairman made at the special meeting of the Committee on Safety of Medicines on 13 October 1995. [20936]

Mr. Malone: None.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what procedures are in place within the Medicines Control Agency to monitor the technical competence of staff. [20933]

Mr. Malone: The Medicines Control Agency ensures that its staff have appropriate professional and technical qualifications to perform effectively through its stringent recruitment and selection procedures; all new staff undergo a probationary period of one year upon joining. The technical competence of staff is maintained through appropriate training and is monitored through annual appraisal of their ability to meet defined objectives; this is subject to sign-off by a senior member of staff.

The agency is also involved in the development of continuing further education programmes to ensure that all staff remain abreast of developments within their field.

Toxocariasis and Toxoplasmosis

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of (a) toxocariasis and (b) toxoplasmosis have been recorded in England and Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [22122]

Mr. Horam: The numbers of laboratory reports for England and Wales of toxocariasis and toxoplasmosis to the public health laboratory service's communicable disease surveillance centre for each year from 1991 to 1995 are shown in the table.

Year	Toxocariasis	Toxoplasmosis
1991	33	636
1992	23	580
1993	25	454
1994	25	627
1995[1]	38	322

[1] Data for 1995 are provisional, but are unlikely to change significantly.

From the limited data received in recent years, the CDSC has not noted any significant change in the number of toxocariasis infections reported.

On toxoplasmosis, the CDSC received an annual average of around 750 laboratory reports between 1982 and 1991, and an average 524 in each year between 1991 and 1995. From 1982, numbers remained fairly constant until 1989. Since 1990, with the exception of an increase in 1994, numbers have continued to decline.

GP Patients (Transport)

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance with transport is provided by his Department to patients who are unable to attend doctors' surgeries bu: who in the doctor's opinion do not require a home visit. [22250]

Mr. Malone: None. It is for general practitioners themselves to determine how best to provide their services, taking into account the needs of their patients.

Beef Extracts

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what recent advice he received from the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee about the implications for human health on the use of foodstuff containing beef extracts; [22675]

(2) what recent advice he received from the chief medical officer about the implications for human helath on the use of foodstuffs containing beef extracts. [22674]

Mr. Horam: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Helath made an oral statement on 20 March about the advice received from the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee and the chief medical officer, Official Report, columns 375–86. The advice received about beef included beef products.

Health Care Purchases

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by (a) districts within each region and (b) trusts within each region the costs of purchasing health care from non-NHS bodies in each year from 1991–92. [21538]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 18 March 1996]: The information will be placed in the Library.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of people claiming incapacity benefit (a) are currently subject to the age ruling and (b) have had income support withdrawn as a result of the age ruling. [16281]

Mr. Burt: Entitlement to incapacity benefit ceases when a person reaches state pension age, that is, age 65 for men and age 60 for women, with the exception that a person who had attained SPA and was in receipt of invalidity benefit on 13 April 1995 has the right to retain entitlement for up to five years beyond SPA.

In the current year, 1995–96, to the end of February, approximately 23,000 claimants, around 1 per cent. of the incapacity benefit case load, had transferred to retirement pension. Information on the income support entitlement of this group is not available. However, the benefit structure is such that a person would not become disentitled to income support solely because of transfer from incapacity benefit to retirement pension.

One-parent Benefit

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Scotland currently receive (a) one-parent benefit plus family credit and (b) one-parent benefit plus disability working allowance. [21575]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: As I explained in my written answer of 11 March, Official Report, column 476, it is estimated that the vast majority of the 34,000 lone parents receiving family credit in Scotland are also receiving one-parent benefit.

It is estimated that there are fewer than 500 recipients of disability working allowance in Scotland who are also receiving one-parent benefit.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if his Department will undertake research to establish how many people have had their attendance allowance withdrawn because they were in residential care temporarily paid for by the local authority pending the sale of their houses since the allowance first came into operation. [22015]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: We have no plans to undertake such research. Information is collected about the overall number of cases where payment of attendance allowance has been suspended. It includes cases where payment has been suspended following admission to hospital as well as admission to residential care or nursing homes. The detailed reasons for such suspensions are not recorded.

Office Equipment and Furniture

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list (a) the number and (b) the value of items of equipment and furniture that have been (i) stolen and (ii) are otherwise unaccounted for from (1) DSS offices and (2) executive agency offices in each region, for each of the last five years; and if he will list by name those items valued at £5,000 or more. [13088]

Mr. Burt [pursuant to his reply, 12 February 1996, c. 467]: Further information is as follows.

The information is not available in the format requested. The Department of Social Security does not separately maintain centralised records of individual items stolen. Losses due to theft, fraud, arson, sabotage or other causes are recorded in a single category. The number of individual losses recorded within this category, and the total value for each of the last five years is in the table:

Financial year	Number of individual cases	Total value £
1990–91	364	89,799
1991–92	411	72,315
1992–93	94	84,500
1993–94	192	222,382
1994–95	192	192,020

Since 1992–93 the Information Technology Services Agency has conducted annual certification exercises to confirm the value of its fixed asset register. Following the 1992–93 exercise, a total of £5,845,000 was noted on the Department's appropriation account for 1992–93 as being "loss arising from discrepancies between the ITSA Asset Register and actual equipment identified".

Following the 1994–95 exercise, a total of £695,000 was so identified. The fact that the certification exercises in 1993–94 and 1994–95 revealed surplus equipment of over £6 million valued on a comparable basis suggests that these "losses" are not permanent. However, in Government accounting terms the discrepancies identified are categorised as losses.

The estimated gross value of the Department's tangible fixed assets, excluding land and buildings, is approximately £780 million for 1994–95.

Travel Grants

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make an estimate of the annual benefit savings from providing travel grants to families from the former Yugoslavia living on benefit in the United Kingdom to enable them to return home. [21764]

Mr. Roger Evans: Information upon which to base an estimate is not available and could be obtained only at disproportion cost.

Benefits Agency Staff

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the (a) basic salary and (b) bonus paid to the Benefits Agency chief executives in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95. [22680]

Mr. Roger Evans: The basic salary of the Benefits Agency chief executive was paid at £82,012 for the period 1993–94 and £86,475 for 1994–95. The chief executive's total remuneration is set out in the 1993–94 and 1994–95 Benefits Agency annual report and accounts, copies of which are available in the Library.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for further changes in the administration of the Child Support Agency. [23067]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: I am able to report changes to two significant areas within the administration of the agency.

First, an independent complaints examiner will be recruited for the Child Support Agency later this year. The agency will be running a pilot scheme during the summer in order to inform the guidelines within which the examiner will operate. My intention is that a full independent complaints service will be in operation shortly after that.

Secondly, I am pleased to announce the following improvements to the Child Support Agency's compensation scheme, which are to take effect from 1 April 1996.

The rules under which the agency makes compensation payments for delays in issuing maintenance application forms—which are issued to the parent with care—and maintenance enquiry forms—which are issued to the absent parent—will be changed. Currently, compensation is considered only for delays exceeding three months, where the Child Support Agency is culpable for the delay, which leads to a loss of opportunity to receive child maintenance which would have otherwise been received. For claims where the full maintenance assessment is completed on or after 1 April 1996, however, payments will be made if the delay exceeds one month, unless the agency needs to make further inquiries before issuing a MEF, when the delay period will be two months.

Additionally, a new type of consolatory payment will be introduced. In cases were the Child Support Agency is culpable of sending a MEF to a person who is not the parent of the child, or children, in question, that person will be entitled to a consolatory payment of £100 to compensate for the upset and inconvenience caused by this error, This new payment will also be introduced on 1 April 1996.

These changes build on the existing compensation arrangements in the Child Support Agency which cover other losses incurred as a result of maladministration. They should ensure that compensation reaches those who do not receive an acceptable level of service in this area from the Child Support Agency. The changes to the scheme mean the Child Support Agency now has a compensation scheme which has been designed in the light of experience to meet the special circumstances of Child Support Agency responsibilities.

These improvements, together with the announcement I made last week, Official Report, column 165, on the introduction of interest payments on maintenance that the Child Support Agency has not transferred quickly enough, are a further significant step in securing the kind of service that Parliament intended.

Social Fund

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people whose homes were damaged as a result of the Canary wharf bomb and who have been rehoused as a consequence have applied for a social fund

(a) grant and (b) loan and how many of these in each category have had the application (i) granted and (ii) refused. [22415]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Keith Bradley, dated 22 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people whose homes were damaged as a result of the Canary Wharf bomb and have been rehoused as a consequence have applied for a Social Fund (SF) (a) grant and (b) loan and how many of these in each category have had the application (i) granted and (ii) refused.

The information has been obtained from clerical records kept by the Benefits Agency (BA) District City East, which comprises of the BA offices of City, Poplar and Stepney Nelson Street. The figures provided are provisional and subject to change.

Total applications to the SF from people rehoused as a result of the Canary Wharf bomb: 8

Number of people who received a grant: None

Number of people who received a loan: 8

I hope you will find this reply helpful.

Benefits Agency Medical Services

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many doctors were employed by the Benefits Agency medical services (a) in April 1995 and (b) at the most recent date for which figures are available. [19661]

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Benefits Agency medical services is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 22 March 1996:.

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many doctors were employed by the Benefits Agency Medical Services (BAMS) (a) in April 1995 and (b) at the most recent date for which figures are available.

On 1 April 1995 BAMS employed 250 doctors. The latest figures available show that as of 1 February 1996 BAMS employed 313 doctors.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many questions were tabled to her Department in each Session since 1987–88; how many were not answered on the grounds of disproportionate cost; what percentage of the total number of questions this represented; how many were not answered on the grounds that the information was not centrally available; and what percentage of the total number of questions this represented. [21152]

Mr. Robin Squire: The number of questions tabled for the Department since 1987 are shown in the following table. The reminder of the information sought could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Year	Department of Employment		Department for Education and Science
	Written	Oral	Written	Oral
1987–88	3,145	390	2,342	461
1988–89	2,984	362	2,029	318
1989–90	2,620	321	2,281	266
1990–91	1,496	312	1,670	274
1991–92	730	143	776	127
1992–93	2,342	403	[1]2,289	[1]372
1993–94	1,636	273	[1]1,550	[1]278
1994–95	1,528	218	[1]1,506	[1]239
1995–96	—	—	[2]962	[2]137

[1] Department for Education.
[2] Department for Education and Employment.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the average cost of answering an (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary questions from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each Session since 1989–90. [21792]

Mr. Squire: This Department does not collect the information in the form requested.

Higher Education

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many representatives of Scottish education interests he intends to appoint to the committee of inquiry into higher education in the United Kingdom. [22430]

Mr. Forth: My colleagues, including my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, and I are considering the membership of the committee of inquiry in the light of consultations and expect to make an announcement after Easter.

Pupil Registration Regulations

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 28 November 1995, Official Report, column 676, what conclusions she has reached on updating the Education (Pupil Registration) Regulations 1956. [22287]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to amend the Education (Pupil Registration) Regulations 1995, which replaced the 1956 regulations and came into force on 1 September 1995. Officials are, however, continuing to explore with representatives of local education authorities whether existing guidance and procedures in this area should be revised to take account of issues raised by the West case.

Pupil Assessments

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the evidence she has evaluated which shows that the performance of a school pupil in respect of subjects and related grades achieved in the general certificate of secondary education at the age of 16 plus can be predicted on the basis of assessments made at the age of 11 plus. [22768]

Mr. Paice: The first year of statutory assessment of 11-year-olds at the end of key stage 2 was 1995. It will be possible to compare these pupils' 1995 key stage 2 national curriculum assessment results with their GCSE results in 1999.

There are, however, a number of local schemes in existence which compare the value added by schools to pupils' achievements over time. We have asked the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority to investigate these and to advise how value added might be calculated nationally and for individual schools. The SCAA is due to report by the end of the year.

Access to Work Scheme

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what was the outcome of her Department's consideration of the access to work scheme: [22251]

(2) what plans she has to alter criteria for inclusion on the access to work scheme. [22252]

Mr. Paice: The review of the access to work programme is now complete; an announcement is expected to be made shortly about its future operation.

Child Care Projects (Merseyside)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reason the rules concerning the funding of stand-alone child care projects attempting to gain support under objective 1 status in Merseyside were changed last year; and if she will make a statement. [22425]

Mrs. Gillan: The rules concerning the funding of stand-alone child care projects have not changed. Child care cost are only eligible as part of a European social fund vocational training or employment project.

School Funding

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what information she collates about the allocation of funds by local education authorities to different age groups at schools; and what was the average expenditure for children between (a) four and six years old, (b) seven and 11 years old, (c) 13 and 14 years old and (d) 15 and 16 years old plus in the last year for which figures are available. [22447]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on the funding allocated by local education authorities to schools in 1995–96 by reference to the number and ages of their pupils is set out at appendix A in the volume "Education Statistics 1995–96 Estimates", published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, which is available in the Library. Information on funding allocated by reference to other factors is set out in appendix B. The Department has itself undertaken no collation and analysis which would add usefully to CIPFA's.

Careers Service

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which contracts in respect of which local authority areas for the operation of the careers service have been awarded to Nord Anglia. [22448]

Mr. Paice: Nord Anglia has provided the careers service in Stockport and the High Peak since April 1995. It is contracted to provide services in Wiltshire, Brent and Harrow and Bolton, Bury and Rochdale from 1 April 1996. A further contract is expected to be signed before the end of March but details remain commercial in confidence until then.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the salary range for each training and enterprise council chief executive or highest paid director in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95. [22491]

Mr. Paice: In line with other private companies, training and enterprise councils are required to report details of salaries paid to their highest paid director in their annual accounts. Copies of the accounts are held in the Library.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Southern Education Area Board Building (Armagh)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals the Southern education area board has (a) to replace the damaged flagpole and (b) repair the public clock at its premises in the Market house in the centre of the Armagh city conservation area. [21196]

Mr. Ancram: The Southern education and library board has said that the necessary repairs will be carried out as soon as possible.

Killylane Reservoir

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the Department of the Environment environmental services sampling regime for discharge points at Killylane reservoir. [21248]

Mr. Moss: The environment service commenced monitoring of the discharge of waste water from Killylane water treatment plant in January 1996. Sampling will take place at monthly intervals.

Mr. Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the aluminium content in samples taken from discharger points at Killylane reservoir between January 1993 and January 1996; and what assessment he has made of the compliance of those discharges with World Health Organisation tolerance levels. [21249]

Mr. Moss: A sampling regime for Killylane water treatment plant commenced in January 1996. A sample of the waste water discharge from the plant to the Killylane reservoir was taken by the environment service on 22 January and the aluminium content in the sample was 3.23 mg per litre.

World Health Organisation guidelines apply to drinking water and are therefore not appropriate in the context of waste water discharges.

Union Flag (Government Building)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the reason for the removal of the flagpole from the Government building at 2 Newry road, Armagh city; what proposals there are for its replacement; and what arrangements are in place to fly the Union flag at these Government buildings on appropriate dates. [21194]

Mr. Moss: An inspection of the flagpole found it to be rotten and it was removed immediately for health and safety reasons. A replacement flagpole is on order and will be wall mounted on arrival. The Union flag will then be flown on appropriate dates.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what arrangements he has made to fly the Union flag on Government buildings on St. Patrick's day; and if the five education area boards and four health area boards have been made similar arrangements. [21225]

Sir John Wheeler: Each year, all Northern Ireland Government Departments are informed of the prescribed dates on which the Union flag should be flown; the list includes St. Patrick's day. These instructions apply only to central Government office buildings, that is, those buildings, irrespective of ownership, where the civil service is the major occupant. There is no requirement for health and social services boards, health trusts or education and library boards to fly the Union flag on these dates, although they are notified of the dates, should they wish to do so.

Fur Farms

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fox fur farms there are in each county of Northern Ireland. [21369]

Mr. Ancram: There are no fox fur farms in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many licences were issued for mink farms in each county of Northern Ireland in each of the last five years. [21368]

Mr. Ancram: There are currently no mink farms in Northern Ireland and no licences to keep mink have been issued by the Department of Agriculture in the last five years.

Grammar Schools

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many grammar schools there are in Northern Ireland; how many of these schools include Latin languages in their curriculum to (a) GCSE level and (b) A-level examinations. [21195]

Mr. Ancram: There are 71 grammar schools in Northern Ireland; (a) 26 entered candidates for Latin at GCSE level and (b) 16 entered candidates for Latin at A-level in the 1994–95 academic year.

Elections

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the format of the proposed elections in Northern Ireland. [21257]

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the oral statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 21 March 1996, Official Report, columns 497–508.

Traffic Lights (Conlig Main Street)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to erect traffic lights at the junction of Conlig main street with the dual carriageway. [21199]

Mr. Moss: There are no plans to erect traffic lights at this junction.

Fire Service

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fire brigades failed to meet the statutory minimum standards for their rescue and firefighting role in Northern Ireland in 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [21576]

Mr. Moss: The Northern Ireland fire brigade is drawing to the end of implementing a 10-year plan to enable it fully to meet the UK nationally recommended standards of fire cover. However, I am satisfied that in general the brigade is already meeting those standards, with a few localised exceptions which the completion of the 10-year plan will address. Her Majesty's inspectors of fire services, in their annual inspection, draw attention to exceptions and it is for the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland to take the appropriate action in such cases.

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21584]

Sir John Wheeler: Within the Northern Ireland Office and the Northern Ireland Departments, the information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21465]

Sir John Wheeler: The conditions of contract used by the Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office to contract for goods and services specifically require contractors and suppliers to comply with all statutory obligations which may affect the execution of the contract.

The statutory obligations include those relating to health and safety. In the conditions of contract, contractors' attention is drawn specifically to article 4 of the Health and Safety at Work (Northern Ireland) Order 1978—general duties of employers to their employees—and they require contractors to prepare a written policy statement on health and safety, together with the arrangements for carrying out that policy.

The conditions of contract do not contain any terms in relation to the wages paid by contractors or suppliers. Contracting Departments do not concern themselves with the rates of pay of contractors' employees other than to assist in the tender process of evaluating the quality of service on offer where that service is labour intensive.

Civil Evidence Act 1995

Dr. Hendron: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when section 1 of the Civil Evidence Act 1995 will come into effect in Northern Ireland. [21483]

Sir John Wheeler: Section 1 of the Civil Evidence Act 1995, which abolishes the rule against the admission of hearsay evidence in civil proceedings, does not extend to Northern Ireland. However, the Law Reform Advisory Committee for Northern Ireland is in the process of examining the rule against hearsay in Northern Ireland and a report containing its recommendations is expected to be published shortly.

War Memorials

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce legislation to allow relatives of service men and women killed in action since the end of the second world war to have their names placed on war memorials. [21023]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 18 March 1996]: There are no plans to change the existing legislation. It is similar to that in Great Britain, and allows for the names of those killed in a war to be placed on war memorials.

TREASURY

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which former public sector research establishments in his Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in his Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21949]

Mr. Jack: HM Treasury is not currently responsible, and has not been since 1979, for any public sector research establishments; the responsibility for the latest series of reviews is with the President of the Board of Trade.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the outcome of the Customs and Excise consultation exercise on the scope of the lower rate of landfill tax. [23060]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs and Excise has now analysed the replies which it received to the consultation exercise on the scope of the lower rate of landfill tax. On the basis of the information provided and representation made, we have concluded that the lower rate of landfill tax should apply to the wastes listed. Mixtures consisting only of listed wastes will qualify for the lower rate, as will water with suspended solids consisted only of listed wastes.

In order to be taxable at the lower rate, listed wastes—or mixtures of such wastes—must not contain or be contaminated with any material which is not listed. If they are, the standard rate of tax will apply. But a de minimis level will apply to enable wastes to qualify for the lower rate if they consist wholly of listed wastes, apart from a small quantity of material which is not listed, provided that the material does not lead to any potential for pollution. Where wastes appear on the lower rate list and are also covered by an exemption, the exemption will apply.

Naturally occurring rocks and soils, including:

clay, sand, gravel, sandstone, limestone, crushed stone, china clay, clean building or demolition stone such as sandstone, limestone or slate, topsoil, peat, coal, silt and dredgings.

Ceramic or cemented materials

Glass.

Ceramics, including bricks (see below for bricks with plaster), tiles, clay ware, pottery, china, bricks and mortar.

Concrete, including reinforced concrete, concrete blocks, breeze blocks and thermalite blocks.

Processed or prepared mineral materials, which have not been used or contaminated

Moulding sands and clays.

Clay absorbents, including Fuller's earth and bentonite and other mineral absorbents.

Man-made mineral fibres, including glass fibre.

Silica.

Mica.

Abrasives.

Furnace slags

Certain ash:

Bottom ash and fly ash from wood or coal combustion (including pulverised fuel ash from coal combustion).

Low activity inorganic compounds:

Titanium dioxide.

Calcium carbonate.

Magnesium carbonate.

Magnesium oxide.

Magnesium hydroxide.

Ferric oxide.

Ferric hydroxide.

Aluminium oxide.

Gypsum and plaster

These will be subject to the lower rate only if disposed of in landfill sites licensed only to take inactive or inert waste.

Other wastes

There are, in addition to the above, a few wastes on which Custom and Excise is seeking further information before a conclusion is reached as to whether the lower rate is appropriate.

DEFENCE

Civilian Employees

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilian employees of his Department there are at each individual forces base in Scotland. [22714]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have placed a list in the Library of the House.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many questions were tabled to his Department in each Session since 1987–88; how many were not answered on the grounds of disproportionate cost; what percentage of the total number of questions this represented; how many were not answered on the grounds that the information was not centrally available; and what percentage of the total number of questions this represented. [21147]

Mr. Soames: The Library of the House has provided the following information on the number of questions tabled to my Department for the relevant years.

	Written Questions	Oral Questions (including supplementaries)
1987–88	3,784	415
1988–89	3,415	367
1989–90	3,244	333
1990–91	2,390	275
1991–92	1,097	132
1992–93	3,623	385
1993–94	2,849	302
1994–95	3,580	276
1995–96	1,081	133

The other information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ridgewood Group of Companies

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what departmental investigations have been (a) initiated and (b) completed by his Department into the Ridgewood group of companies; and if will publish his conclusions. [21182]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Inquiries have been made within the Ministry of Defence to establish whether there are any departmental investigations into the Ridgewood group of companies; none are known to be current. Any in the past have been concluded satisfactorily and their conclusions will not be published.

Married Quarters

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has had from representatives of the building industry, the mortgage lenders and estate agents about the consequences for the English housing market of the sale of Ministry of Defence married quarters. [21383]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We have received no such representations on behalf of these groups.

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which former public sector research establishments in his Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in his Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21937]

Mr. Arbuthnot: No MOD research establishments have been privatised since 1979, and no such establishment is currently undergoing review for this purpose.

Decommissioned Submarines

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on (a) the removal of decommissioned submarines from Rosyth royal dockyard and (b) the disposal and transportation of radioactive waste from the decommissioned submarines. [22099]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Government's policy is that decommissioned nuclear submarines should be stored safely afloat at the location where they are decommissioned. This policy is kept under review. There are no current plans to remove these decommissioned submarines stored afloat at Rosyth royal dockyard. Radioactive waste produced during the decommissioning process is handled in accordance with current national legislation. There is no transportation of radioactive waste following decommissioning.

Tornado Crews (Training)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the average air crew flying training hours for Tornado aircraft in each of the last five years. [21884]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 21 March 1996]: The monthly average Tornado air crew flying training hours for each of the last five years are as follows:

Financial year	Tornado F3	Tornado GR1
1991–92	17 hours 45 minutes	17 hours 45 minutes
1992–93	18 hours 55 minutes	16 hours 50 minutes
1993–94	15 hours 45 minutes	15 hours 35 minutes
1994–95	14 hours 30 minutes	16 hours 45 minutes
1995–96	13 hours 55 minutes	13 hours 25 minutes

The figures shown exclude operational flying in support of the Iraq no-fly zone and UN-NATO operations in Bosnia, in which the Tornado F3 has been involved since April 1993 and the Tornado GR1 to varying degrees throughout the period. Such flying includes an element of continuation training. The figures for 1995–96 are the monthly average up to and including January 1996.

Service Strength

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's estimate of the strength of (a) the RAF, (b) the Army and (c) the Royal Navy by the end of the decade. [21883]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 21 March 1996]: The estimated strengths for the services at 1 April 1999 are as follows:

(a) Royal Air Force: 55,500

(b) Army: 114,000

(c) Royal Navy: 44,000

The Army estimate includes Gurkha strengths, but excludes the Royal Irish Regiment—home service force. The Royal Navy estimate includes the Royal Marines and Queen Alexandra's Royal Naval Nursing Service. All the figures include an element for personnel undergoing training.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunal or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22514]

Mr. Soames: The handling of civilian equal opportunities cases has been delegated to budget holders and agencies. Details of amounts paid and numbers of cases are not all readily available centrally. Information is however available on six cases over the past few years, for which the average payment was about £7,500.

For service personnel, the great majority of such payments relate to compensation for those dismissed on the ground of pregnancy before the services introduced maternity leave in 1990. An average of about £10,000 has been paid to each of 4,615 cases which did not proceed to tribunals, and about £30,000 to each of 320 cases which proceeded to tribunal. Most of this expenditure was made in 1994–95. On service cases other than pregnancy dismissal, not all details are available in the form requested but an average of about £7,000 has been paid in each of about 60 cases, of which three proceeded to tribunal.

HMY Britannia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the annual running costs for HMY Britannia; and from which subheads of which votes these funds are taken. [22409]

Mr. Soames: The estimated total operating costs of HMY Britannia for the financial year 1995–96 are £8,933,000. Provision for this expenditure is currently made in class I, vote 1, subheads A1 and F1 and in class I, vote 2, subheads A1 and A2.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies his Department is carrying out into the replacement of HMY Britannia; what has been the cost of these studies to date; and what is the estimated cost of a replacement for HMY Britannia. [22408]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The possible replacement of HMY Britannia, together with other options for meeting the tasks she presently fulfils, is being examined by an interdepartmental working group. The main cost of this work, which has been confined to a small proportion of the salaries of the officials involved, has not been collected centrally and could not be estimated without disproportionate effort. The cost of any replacement would depend entirely on its design and role.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average daily cost of crewing HMY Britannia (a) with and (b) without the royal family embarked. [22824]

Mr. Soames: In the current financial year, the present estimated average daily cost of crewing HMY Britannia is about £16,000. The presence, or absence, on board of members of the royal family does not affect crewing levels.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the daily running cost, excluding maintenance and refitting, of HMY Britannia (a) in harbour and (b) at sea with and without the royal family embarked. [22825]

Mr. Soames: This information is not available in the form requested. In the current financial year, however, the present estimated daily total operating costs of HMY Britannia are about £21,000, excluding repair and refit.

Nuclear Decommissioning

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his Department's outstanding liabilities for future decommissioning of nuclear facilities at (a) Calder Hall, (b) Chapelcross and (c) Capenhurst. [22350]

Mr. Soames: British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. is responsible for assessing the costs of decommissioning facilities at its sites. My Department's share of these costs is either subsumed in prices paid on supply contracts or met when the costs are actually incurred, which in most cases will not be for some considerable time. It is not possible accurately to determine the costs of these liabilities as they will depend on a number of factors including future usage of the facilities by other customers.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current status of the A91 building at AWE Aldermaston; and on what date it is expected that this building will become fully operational. [22365]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Work to rectify the problems in the A91 building at AWE Aldermaston is progressing. The building is expected to become fully operational in 1997.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current total estimated cost of the new capital works projects at AWE Aldermaston. [22364]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The projects in question are largely complete and the estimate of their total cost remains £1.2 billion.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current status of the A90 building at AWE Aldermaston; and on what date it is expected that this building will become fully operational. [22349]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The phased radioactive commissioning of the A90 building is in progress. The building is expected to come into full operation by the end of this year, with the completion of the progressive transfer of plutonium processing from existing facilities.

Pindar Facility

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current status of the Pindar bunker. [22351]

Mr. Soames: The Pindar facility is fully operational.

51 Squadron

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role of aircraft from 51 Squadron, Royal Air Force, in operations over Bosnia. [22356]

Mr. Soames: It is not our policy to comment on such matters.

Exercise Arid Thunder

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) of 12 March, Official Report, column 510, which sub-munitions were used during the expending of BL755 cluster bombs during Exercise Arid Thunder. [22362]

Mr. Soames: The sub-munitions used were piercing–fragmentation bomblets.

RAF Bases

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which RAF bases in the United Kingdom have no (a) runways, (b) jets and (c) other aeroplanes; how many United States personnel are stationed at each; and how much each base cost in the last year for which figures are available. [20642]

Mr. Soames [pursuant to his reply, 18 March 1996, c. 64–65]: I regret that there was an omission from the list of RAF bases where there is a US presence but where there is no operational runway or aircraft. This is RAF Feltwell where there are approximately 400 US personnel.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Deregulation

12. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many new regulations have been introduced by the Government since April 1992; and how many regulations have been removed as a result of the Government's deregulation procedures. [20690]

Mr. Willetts: We have repealed or amended over 500 of the 1,000 regulations which we identified as unnecessary burdens on business. Of 3,334 new statutory instruments in 1994, nearly 2,000 were for road closures and other local measures. Two thirds of the remainder either were specifically to help businesses or had no impact on them.

25. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what new deregulation initiatives his Department is examining; and if he will make a statement. [20705]

Mr. Willetts: A number of new deregulation initiatives were announced at the "Your Business Matters" conference on 11 March. We also announced plans for a programme of deregulation seminars, covering sectors from tourism to financial services, to enable business to put forward their own ideas for further deregulation.

Charter Mark

15. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Labour-held councils were recently awarded the charter mark; and what are the categories of the awards and the factors underlying their issue. [20694]

Mr. Willetts: There were 41 charter mark winners from within Labour-controlled local authorities in 1995.

There is one category of award. All winners must demonstrate excellence against the nine criteria.

Government Policy

16. Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his policy on the co-ordination of Government policy. [20695]

The Deputy Prime Minister: We are pursuing economic prosperity and security for all, based on an enterprise economy; creating a nation of opportunity, reflecting the Government's values of choice, ownership and reward; upholding decent common-sense values in the pursuit of law, order and justice; providing the people of Britain with first-class public services; and reflecting pride in the nation and its place in the world.

Referendums

17. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will commission a study into the use of referendums in respect of Government policies. [20696]

The Deputy Prime Minister: No; the Government have access to sufficient information and advice on the subject.

Small Businesses

18. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what contribution his Department made to the Government initiative on small businesses. [20698]

Mr. Freeman: A package of new deregulation measures for small businesses was announced at the "Your Business Matters" conference on 11 March. These measures, which include new rights for business in enforcement actions and a prototype IT system to provide information about forms and regulations, have been widely welcomed by business.

19. Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps he is taking to co-ordinate more effectively the presentation of Government policy towards small businesses. [20699]

Mr. Willetts: Last year, the Prime Minister asked the Institute of Directors and other business organisations to organise a series of small business conferences, so that small businesses could give their views on Government policies and their presentation. At the final conference on 11 March, the Prime Minister announced further measures to help small firms and said that the Government would respond in full to these conferences in the third White Paper on competitiveness in the summer.

Ministerial Responsibilities

20. Mr. Hain: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement about his division of responsibilities with other Cabinet Ministers. [20700]

24. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what are (a) his responsibility and (b) his authority in respect of (i) the Department of Trade and Industry and (ii) the Department for Education and Employment. [20704]

The Deputy Prime Minister: Ministerial responsibilities are a matter of public record, set out in my Department's publication, the "List of Ministerial Responsibilities".

23. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what changes have taken place in his responsibilities since he was appointed. [20703]

The Deputy Prime Minister: As previously announced, the Prime Minister has this year invited me to chair ministerial groups on information technology and on the Millennium festival. In other respects, my role is unchanged.

Competitiveness

21. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what progress has been made following the Government's planned White Paper on competitiveness. [20701]

The Deputy Prime Minister: The Government will report on the progress made since last year's White Paper on competitiveness in a third competitiveness White Paper in the summer.

Departmental Staff

22. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many staff there are in his Department. [20702]

Mr. Willetts: By convention, the Office of Public Service, the Cabinet Office and CCTA, the Government Centre for Information Systems, are treated as one group, and staff currently number 1,332.

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which former public sector research establishments in his Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in his Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21936]

Mr. Willetts: There are no such research establishments in the Department and agencies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible.

Her Majesty's Stationery Office

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contractual obligations to protect the jobs of existing employees of HMSO at its plants in Norwich, London and Oldham the prospective purchasers of the organisation will be required to meet. [22268]

Mr. Freeman: The level of HMSO staffing now, in all locations, largely depends on the amount of business it wins in competition with other suppliers. That will not change after privatisation, and I can offer no guarantees as to the future staffing levels. The hon. Member will note the recent high level of redundancies across HMSO, which reflect the need for it to streamline itself to remain competitive.

HMSO has a major presence in Norwich, and to a lesser extent elsewhere in the country. Relocation is a very expensive process, and as I made clear during the 18 March debate, Official Report, column 89, I cannot envisage circumstances in which the new owner would wish to move significant numbers of staff away from their current locations. This is especially true in locations such as Oldham, where current facilities include a large amount of specialised plant. Bidders will be required to submit their plans for the development of the business, and an assessment of their overall plans will assist us in selecting the winning bid.

However, I would not wish to pre-empt the commercial judgment of the new owner to reorganise the business in the future if circumstances dictated. That would cut across the whole purpose of the sale, which is to give the business the freedom necessary for it to prosper.

Driving Standards Agency

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the number of charter marks which have been awarded to the Driving Standards Agency. [20692]

Mr. Willetts: The Driving Standards Agency was awarded a charter mark in 1992. This expired in 1995.

Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme

Mr. Luff: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to lay an order specifying the principal civil service pension scheme administration as a function which contractors may be authorised to carry out; and if he will make a statement. [22986]

Mr. Freeman: An order under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 was laid today before Parliament in draft, and will be subject to affirmative resolution of both Houses.

Approval of the order by Parliament will enable Departments to market test their day-to-day administration of the principal civil service pension scheme, and associated schemes. Occupational pension arrangements for civil servants will continue to be provided through the PCSPS. Market testing of the administration function will not affect pension benefits in any way. Competition will ensure value for money and the focus on performance outputs will help to raise the quality of service to scheme members. Decisions on the timing and method of competitive tendering will be for each employing Department to take. It will be open to existing service providers, such as the Paymaster agency, to compete on a value-for-money basis. Such bids will be at full cost and will be considered rigorously. The unions will be consulted on individual market tests as they arise.

Responsibility for management of the PCSPS—and associated schemes—including setting the rules, will remain within government. This function transferred from HM Treasury to the Office of Public Service and Science on 1 April 1995. Expenditure on civil service pension benefits will continue to be met from the civil superannuation vote, responsibility for which also transferred to the Office of Public Service.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21510]

Mr. Newton: Within the last 52 weeks, 10 Privy Council Office staff worked paid overtime which took their hours above 48 in a week, and two more received payments in recognition of hours worked on a similar scale. In aggregate, they constituted just over 30 per cent. of the Department's total staff. The hours worked by Ministers and senior staff not eligible for paid overtime are not recorded, nor are records kept of the hours worked in individual weeks by staff on flexible working schemes.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Lord President of the Council what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; and if he will make a statement. [21468]

Mr. Newton: Terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between the contractor or supplier and his employees, subject to any relevant legal requirements. Compliance with health and safety regulations is a legal requirement for the contractor or supplier.

WALES

Welsh National Opera

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 19 March, Official Report, column 171, what were the dates of the meetings relating to the permanent home for the Welsh National Opera company; and if he will indicate the positions held by those present. [22410]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on Friday 22 March, Official Report, column 356.

Inward Investment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 14 March 1996, Official Report, column 745, relating to inward investment company visits, how many of these included visits to (a) Gwynedd and (b) Dyfed. [22218]

Mr. Hague: Of the 13 inward visits brought to Wales over the past 12 months by the Invest in Britain Bureau, one visited Dyfed.

Nursery Voucher Scheme

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales to what extent the £1,100 per four-year-old child currently in school which will be withdrawn from local education authorities in April 1997 under the nursery voucher scheme is funded through the revenue support grant for local authorities. [22237]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 22 March 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 11 March, Official Report, column 495.

Dental Services

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people have been deregistered from their dentist since 1992 in each health authority area; and if he will make a statement. [20890]

Mr. Richards: From the information supplied by family health services authorities the number of patients in Wales who have been deregistered since August 1992 is as follows:

FHSA	Adult patients	Child patients	Total patients
Clwyd	12,363	145	12,508
Dyfed	4,585	14	4,599
Gwent	11,386	0	11,386
Gwynedd	19,928	0	19,928
Mid Glamorgan	2,142	0	2,142
Powys	0	0	0
South Glamorgan	6,565	59	6,624
West Glamorgan	44	0	44
Totals	57,013	218	57,231

This information was supplied for management purposes only and is not statistically validated.

These are cumulative figures and do not indicate how many of those patients subsequently registered with another dentist.

Statistics published by the Dental Practice Board indicate that, at the end of December 1995, the number of registered patients in Wales was 38,194 higher than it was at the end of June 1992.

Planning

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what the planning status of technical advice notes will be; if they will be subject to consultation; and if he will make a statement; [22052]

(2) when he plans to publish the single planning policy guidance (Wales); and if he will make a statement; [22054]

(3) if the technical advice notes will be released at the same time as the planning policy guidance (Wales); and if he will make a statement; [22053]

(4) what plans he has to prepare technical advice notes on nature conservation; and if he will make a statement. [22055]

Mr. Hague: A final decision on planning policy guidance in Wales has not yet been taken, but I shall be making an announcement shortly. If I decide to go ahead with a single planning policy guidance (Wales) document it would be issued in advance of the series of technical advice notes. The intention would be to cancel the current PPG series but leave the technical guidance contained in the notes extant until the TANs were issued in their formal form.

Full consultation would take place on any draft TANs, one of which would relate to nature conservation, produced by my Department. The status of the TANs would be made clear at the time of issue.

Amey Construction Ltd.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list projects in which Amey Construction Ltd. were employed by the Welsh Office as contractors, by subject and by value, in the financial years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [22027]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: In 1994–95 and 1995–96 Amey Construction has been employed on one road project. The project was M4 Brynglas tunnels—A4042 Malpas road relief scheme, and the accepted tender price was £38 million.

Bird Reserve, Gwent

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 March 1996, Official Report, column 629, what assessment he has made of the additional time taken to establish the Gwent bird reserve by the Land Authority for Wales and the Cardiff Bay development corporation on the basis of using the private finance initiative compared with the conventional public sector route. [22805]

Mr. Hague: It is Government policy to consider private finance initiative options for all capital schemes and the aim to complete engineering works before impoundment of the waters within Cardiff bay took account of this.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 13 March 1996, Official Report, column 629, what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation and the leaders of the Cardiff and Vale councils concerning the exit strategy for the development corporation; and if he will chair the first exit strategy joint meeting. [22817]

Mr. Hague: I have asked the board of the Cardiff Bay development corporation to prepare a draft plan for winding up the corporation. The draft plan will be put out to consultation with the relevant local authorities and other interested bodies by July 1996 or sooner if possible.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the shadow unitary authorities which submitted their proposals for local management of schools schemes by the stated deadline, indicating (a) which have been the subject of requests for further information, the length of time and deadline for the return of this information and (b) which have had their local management of schools schemes approved and the estimated latest date on which approval can be given to county borough local management of schools schemes to enable them to inform the schools of their budgets for April 1996 to March 1997. [22544]

Mr. Richards: The 22 unitary authorities were asked to submit their draft schemes by 1 December, with subsequent amendments by 12 January this year. Thirteen authorities met the first deadline, all the second, although many of the schemes submitted were considered incomplete. It has been necessary to request far more information than anticipated in respect of all draft schemes submitted. The deadline set for the additional information has varied between authorities, in whose interests it is to provide the information as soon as possible. Additional information is still outstanding from four authorities.

Thirteen schemes have been approved so far. Subject to the timely provision of all the additional information requested, I would hope that all schemes can be approved by 1 April. I understand that many authorities have already given their schools an indication of their budget for 1996–97.

East Glamorgan General Hospital

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the future of accident and emergency services at the East Glamorgan General Hospital, Pontypridd. [22574]

Mr. Richards: The new district general hospital at Ynys-y-Plwm is scheduled to open in December 1998 and will offer a full accident and emergency service. Until then this service will continue to be available at East Glamorgan general hospital.

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the accident and emergency unit at East Glamorgan general hospital, Pontypridd, is meeting patients charter requirements for waiting times in accident and emergency. [22599]

Mr. Richards: At 31 December 1995, 76 per cent. of patients were assessed within five minutes of arrival at the hospital's accident and emergency department. Over 90 per cent. of casualty patients were found a hospital bed within two hours of the decision to admit them.

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest estimated date for the opening of the East Glamorgan general hospital at its new Llantrisant site. [22601]

Mr. Richards: The hospital is due to open in December 1998 following six months' commissioning after the contract completion date in May 1998.

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ensure that, as part of the transfer of services from its present, Church village, site to its new site at Llantrisant, the East Glamorgan general hospital will be required by the Welsh Office to provide a full and continuing accident and emergency service at the new site. [22603]

Mr. Richards: Yes, the East Glamorgan NHS trust will provide a full accident and emergency service from the new site.

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what vacancies there are for nurses, junior doctors, middle-range doctors and consultants at the accident and emergency department at East Glamorgan general hospital, Pontypridd. [22600]

Mr. Richards: There is currently one vacancy for a staff grade doctor. This will be filled as soon as a work permit has been received in respect of an overseas doctor recently interviewed for the post.

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is (a) latest projected cost for completion of the East Glamorgan general hospital at its new Llantrisant site and (b) the number of beds to be included in that hospital. [22602]

Mr. Richards: The latest projected costs including works, equipment, fees and VAT is £82 million and the hospital will include 513 beds.

Civil Service

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many civil service jobs have been relocated out of Wales since the process of market testing and contractorisation began. [22810]

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not collected.

TRANSPORT

Road Schemes

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average cost overrun for major road schemes constructed by his Department in each of the last 10 years; and if he will list the 10 schemes with the largest cost overrun during the last 10 years. [20777]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Clare Short, dated 25 March 1996:

The Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. John Watts, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the average cost overrun of road schemes. You asked what was the average cost overrun of major road schemes constructed in each of the last ten years, and requested a list of the ten schemes with the largest cost overrun during that period.

A report entitled "Department of Transport: Contracting for Roads" was published by the National Audit Office in October 1992, and provided detailed information on this matter. In addition, I wrote to Mrs. Joan Walley MP on 3 October 1995 in response to a Parliamentary Question enclosing some information for schemes completed between March 1990 and March 1995. I enclose copies of these documents for your ease of reference.

Highways Agency

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of the restructuring of the Highways Agency announced in March 1995. [20775]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Ms Clare Short, dated 25 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the cost of the restructuring of the Highways Agency announced in March 1995.

My assessment of the cost is £14,060,000.

Chinese Military Manoeuvres

Sir Nicholas Scott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about recent interference in recognised international sea and air routes by China in respect of launching missiles, firing munitions and conducting manoeuvres; and to what extent Chinese notification of these accorded with acceptable international practice. [22211]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: I have been asked to reply.

Since 8 March, the Chinese navy and air force have been conducting military exercises in the Taiwan straits. For this purpose, they have established and duly notified a series of maritime and air exclusion zones. While diversions by ships and aircraft may have been necessary, the Chinese exercises have not prevented transit passage through the straits.

Although China is not yet a state party to the United Nations convention on the law of the sea, her actions, including notification procedures, appear to be in general conformity with international practice.

Royal Family (Official Cars)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who (a) owns and (b) has responsibility for operating the official cars used by the royal family for their public duties. [21476]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have been asked to reply.

The costs of cars used for official purposes by the Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh are met from the Queen's civil list and from His Royal Highness's parliamentary annuity respectively. They may be owned or leased and are operated by the Royal Mews. The costs of cars used for official purposes by Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother are met from Her Majesty's parliamentary annuity. They are the responsibility of her staff and may be owned or leased. Cars are also owned privately for private use.

Costs for other members of the royal family are not paid for from public funds.

Aircraft (Ice Falls)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 6 March 1996, Official Report, column 215, if he will make a statement on the action his Department is taking to reduce the incidence of ice balls falling from aircraft. [21364]

Mr. Norris: The aviation industry and the Civil Aviation Authority are aware of public concerns and practical steps are being taken to reduce the number of occurrences of ice falling from aircraft. These steps include:

- the fitting of manufacturers' modification kits to improve resistance to water leaks at servicing points;
- enhanced maintenance requirements to ensure the continued integrity of water sealing systems in service;
- routine visual inspections of aircraft after landing, by airline engineers checking for evidence of ice accretion;
- unannounced inspections by CAA surveyors checking airworthiness standards which include evidence of ice accretion/water leakage; and
- recording of occurrences by the CAA and investigation of serious events by the air accidents investigation branch.

Freightliner

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has entered into an agreement under section 137 of the Railways Act 1993 in connection with the proposed sale of Freightliner. [21719]

Mr. Watts: I expect to do so shortly.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the sources of legal advice obtained by the Vehicle Inspectorate; [21772]

(2) how many vehicles were found not to be displaying a valid operator's licence in each spot check undertaken by the Vehicle Inspectorate in the last year; [21961]

(3) how many vehicle spot checks were undertaken by the police or the Vehicle Inspectorate on tankers used to transport oil from south Pembrokeshire beaches to oil refineries in Milford Haven in the last year; and how many prohibition notices were issued; [21960]

(4) if he will place in the Library the results of the Vehicle Inspectorate staff attitude survey. [21775]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 25 March 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions concerning:

(1) the sources of legal advice obtained by the Vehicle Inspectorate (VI);

(2) the number of vehicles found not to be displaying a valid operator's licence in each spot check undertaken by the VI in the last year;

(3) the number of vehicle spot checks undertaken by the police or the VI on tankers used to transport oil from South Pembrokeshire beaches to oil refineries in Milford Haven in the last year, and the number of prohibition notices issued; and

(4) the Vehicle Inspectorate's Staff Attitude Survey.

The Vehicle Inspectorate seeks legal advice from one of three sources: the Department of Transport's own Legal Branch, the Treasury Solicitors and from contracted solicitors. Contracted solicitors are based around the country to deal with regional prosecution cases.

With regard to (2), this information is not collected as the non-display of a disc does not necessarily indicate an operator operating outside the "O" licence system.

Four tankers have been examined, three by our Traffic Examiners and one by Vehicle Examiners, at normal roadside checks. None of the vehicles were issued with prohibition notices.

A copy of the Survey has been forwarded to the Library.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of additional enforcement staff employed as a result of the recent £495,000 increase in the Vehicle Inspectorate's budget. [22348]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 25 March 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent question concerning the number of additional enforcement staff employed as a result of the increase in the Vehicle Inspectorate's budget.

The additional £495,000 funding will allow the Inspectorate to maintain frontline staff numbers in 1996/97 including the additional 14 posts created in 1995/96.

Railway Stations (Disabled Access)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what sums were spent on measures to improve access for disabled people within local railway stations in Wales in the last three years. [22231]

Mr. Watts: No central record is maintained of amounts spent on facilities for disabled people at individual stations.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures Railtrack is taking to address the needs of wheelchair users and other disabled persons in local railway stations in Wales. [22233]

Mr. Watts: It is for each train operating company providing train services in Wales to produce its own plans as to how it will improve access facilities for disabled people on trains and at the stations operated by it. These plans will be set out in its disabled persons protection policy which each TOC has to have approved by the Rail Regulator.

Of the seven TOCs operating in Wales, Great Western Trains Co. Ltd, which is now a private sector company, has received approval for its DPPP from the Rail Regulator. The remaining TOCs involved are all at an advanced stage in obtaining approval from the Rail Regulator for their own DPPPs.

Railfreight (Sale)

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the units, goods depots and land in the care and ownership of Railfreight that will not be included in the sale of Railfreight; [22215]

(2) if Europort's rail freight terminals are included in the privatisation of Railfreight; [22217]

(3) what estimate he has made of income to the Government from the sale of Railfreight; [22205]

(4) how many bids have been made by potential purchasers for Railfreight. [22216]

Mr. Watts: Railfreight Distribution has not yet been offered for sale. The Government and the British Railways Board are currently considering the options for its privatisation.

Railway Companies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will ensure that hon. Members are informed of all track, renewal, maintenance, operating freight and other non-British Rail companies that are operating in, or serving, their constituencies and that this information is issued with regular revisions. [22555]

Mr. Watts: No.

Ferry Safety

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what timetables have been agreed for ferries operating in (a) British waters and (b) Norwegian waters to comply with the new 50 cm limit for flooding of the car decks. [22807]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Marine Safety Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 25 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your question about the time tables for implementation of the new 50 centimetre limit for flooding on the car decks of ferries operating in (a) British waters and (b) Norwegian waters.

The agreement concluded in Stockholm last month establishes a timetable for the application of the new standard to all ferries operating on international voyages in the waters of any country, within the specified geographical area, including the UK and Norway and wishing to apply the agreement. Such ferries are required to comply not later than the first yearly inspection following the date of compliance prescribed below according to the vessel's value of A/Amax:

Value of A/Amax	Date of Compliance
Less than 85 per cent.	1 April 1997
Less than 90 per cent.	31 December 1998
Less than 95 per cent.	31 December 1999

Value of A/Amax	Date of Compliance
Less than 97.5 per cent.	31 December 2000
97.5 per cent. or higher	31 December 2001—but in any case not later than 1 October 2002.

Energy Consumption

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the energy consumption per mile for (a) aircraft, (b) car, (c) rail and (d) water transport. [22815]

Mr. Norris: Estimates of energy consumption per mile are not made in the form requested.

Second Severn Crossing

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the second Severn crossing will be officially opened for traffic. [22813]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 25 March 1996:

I have been asked by the Secretary of State for Transport to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking when the Second Severn Crossing will be officially opened for traffic.

The Concessionaire, Severn River Crossing Plc, have announced that the official opening ceremony will take place on 5 June 1996. It is expected that the crossing will be open to traffic on the following day.

M25 (Speed Limits)

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the working of the variable speed limits on the M25 and on his plans to extend the lengths of the motorway covered by these regulations. [20928]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. David Wilshire, dated 25 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about variable speed limits on the M25.

Variable speed limits have been operating since the end of August 1995. We have been able to show that the system is capable of effectively controlling vehicle speeds during peak conditions, and the vast majority of drivers appear to appreciate that the system will ease conditions for them.

More data is needed about the precise effect on the traffic flows, traffic safety and possible changes to driving patterns before we can determine the extent to which the system can be used elsewhere on the network.

Traffic Violations

Ms Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of traffic violations involving Department of Transport vehicles, the nature of the violation, and the total amount of any fines arising from those violations, in each year since 1986. [22242]

Mr. Norris [holding answer 22 March 1996]: The available records on traffic violations for 1986 to date are as follows:

Year	Violation	Fine £
1986	Nil	Nil
1987	Nil	Nil
1988	Nil	Nil
1989	Nil	Nil
1990	Nil	Nil
1991	Nil	Nil
1992	Nil	Nil
1993	Nil	Nil
1994	Nil	Nil
1995	2 x speeding	80.00
	1 x parking	30.00
1996	Nil to date	Nil to date

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farming Waste

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the number of tons of waste material produced by the farming industry each year. [21389]

Mr. Boswell: It is estimated that approximately 80 million tons of animal manure is produced each year on farms in the United Kingdom, most of which is recycled back to agricultural land. Estimates for other waste materials generated on farms are not available.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice his Department provides to farmers on the safe removal or recycling of waste material from farm processes. [21388]

Mr. Boswell: Detailed guidance for farmers on the safe disposal or recycling of agricultural wastes is contained in the Ministry's codes of good agricultural practice for the protection of water, air and soil which are available free of charge to all farmers and growers. In addition, the Ministry funds ADAS—the agricultural development advisory service—to provide free advice to farmers in the form of a general pollution risk assessment or assistance in the preparation of a farm waste management plan.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance he will provide to farmers in nitrate vulnerable zones who are to face restrictions on the spreading of manures. [22996]

Mr. Boswell: I am very pleased to announce a new grant scheme which will be open to farmers in England and Wales who have land in a nitrate vulnerable zone. The scheme will help those farmers who need to improve their farm waste facilities as a result of limits to be set on the spreading of livestock manures in the zones. The necessary statutory instrument has been laid before Parliament today and will be debated in both Houses of Parliament.

The scheme, which offers a 25 per cent. rate of grant on eligible waste storage and handling facilities, will come into force on 17 April. For the first time, grant will be available on facilities for the separation of clean and dirty water, other than roofing, where this will reduce the need for storage. In addition, farmers will be able to call on ADAS for free advice to help them decide on the waste facilities needed to comply with the NVZ measures.

Agricultural and Rural Development

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fishers and Food what discussions he has held with his ministerial counterpart in the Northern Ireland Office concerning the resumption of the special programme for agricultural and rural development. [21652]

Mr. Boswell: None.

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21514]

Mr. Boswell: The number of staff recorded as being paid for overtime work which took their hours worked to over 48 hours net in any one week in the 12 months to February 1996 is 1,611, which represents 23.9 per cent. of this Department's staff.

No records are held centrally of the hours worked either by senior staff not eligible for paid overtime or by those on flexible working schemes.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average cost of answering an (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary question from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each Session since 1989–90. [21794]

Mr. Boswell: This Department does not collect the information in the form requested.

Live Animal Transport

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 14 March 1996, Official Report, column 728, what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the local veterinary inspectors, conditions of appointment in respect of recording the time taken for each inspection; and if he will make a statement. [22079]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 21 March 1996]: The conditions of appointment of local veterinary inspectors are kept under review. I refer the hon. Gentlemen to the answer that I gave him on 30 January 1996, Official Report, columns 696-97, which outlined the safeguards to ensure that high standards of veterinary certification are maintained. I have no immediate plans to change the conditions of appointment of LVIs.

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration is being given by the Codex Alimentarius Committee to the availability of and trade in dietary supplements; what is the role and purpose of that committee; through what mechanism the United Kingdom contributes to the committee; through what procedures it reaches conclusions; upon whom and with what authority those decisions are binding; and if he will make a statement. [22045]

Mrs. Browning: The purpose of the Codex Alimentarius is "to guide and promote the elaboration and establishment of definitions and requirements for foods, to assist in their harmonisation and, in doing so, facilitate international trade".

The discussions bring together scientist, technical experts, government regulators, consumer organisations and industry representatives in order to develop Codex guidelines and standards by consensus. The UK is a member of the committee and participates fully. The Codex Alimentarius Committee on Nutrition and Foods for Special Dietary Uses is at a preliminary stage in developing a Codex guideline on dietary supplements. The committee develops guidelines by consensus, and the Codex guidelines are advisory instruments only.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when his Department received copies of the minutes of the meetings of the Codex Alimentarius Committee at which dietary supplements have been considered; and if he will make such minutes available (a) in the Library and (b) to the Society for the Promotion of Nutritional Therapy. [22046]

Mrs. Browning: The final report of the last meeting of the Codex Alimentarius Committee on Nutrition and Foods for Special Dietary Uses, which considered dietary supplements, was received by my Department on 12 June 1995. Interested parties were informed about this and the report is available to them on request. I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects the Codex Alimentarius Committee to meet next; if dietary supplements will be discussed at that meeting; and if he will make a statement setting out the timetable for future meetings of and decisions by that committee in relation to dietary supplements. [22047]

Mrs. Browning: The Codex Alimentarius Committee on Nutrition and Foods for Special Dietary Uses will next meet from 7 to 11 October 1996. Dietary supplements will be on the agenda of the meeting. The timetable for future meetings and decisions by this committee is a matter for the committee to decide.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evaluation he has made of the proposals submitted by Germany to the Codex Alimentarius Committee in relation to dietary supplements; and what response he has made to those proposals. [22048]

Mrs. Browning: A paper was tabled by Germany at the Codex Alimentarius Committee on Nutrition and Foods for Special Dietary Uses from 27 to 31 March 1995. The United Kingdom delegation made a preliminary evaluation of the paper prior to the meeting in consultation with both industry and consumer representatives, and at the meeting expressed the view that Codex guidelines were not necessary.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to promote at meetings of the Codex Alimentarius Committee and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade the continued availability to consumers of vitamin, mineral and other dietary supplements. [22049]

Mrs. Browning: Yes.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has received from (a) the Codex Alimentarius Committee and (b) other bodies associated with GATT to restrict (i) the potency, (ii) the availability and (iii) the trade in vitamin, mineral and other dietary supplements for (1) prophylactic and (2) other use; and if he will make a statement. [22050]

Mrs. Browning: The paper tabled by Germany at the Codex Alimentarius Committee on Nutrition and Foods for Special Dietary Uses from 27 to 31 March 1995, which contained these points, was not a formal proposal, but an early draft for a revised draft guideline for dietary supplements.

No proposals concerning dietary supplements have been received from any of the other international standards-setting bodies referred to in the GATT agreement on sanitary and phytosanitary measures.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the competence of GATT structures for addressing (a) the potency, (b) the availability and (c) the trade in vitamin, mineral and other dietary supplements for (i) prophylactic and (ii) other use; and if he will make a statement. [22051]

Mrs. Browning: The rules of the World Trade Organisation—the successor body to GATT—would be relevant to the availability or use of dietary supplements only if situation arose in which one WTO member country restricted imports of such substances and another wished to challenge that restriction. Such a situation would be likely to arise only if there were any evidence that dietary supplements posed a danger to human health.

Rabies

Mr. Key: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date the Council of Ministers discussed the report of the Scientific Veterinary Committee on various aspects of rabies, paper VI/1533/92–EN–REI–I (PVET/EN/1268). [22026]

Mrs. Browning: We do not have any record of this working paper itself being discussed at the Council of Ministers. However, discussions on the Balai directive—EC directive 92/65—were held at the Council of Agriculture Ministers meeting on 15 June 1992. The rabies provisions of this directive, particularly those relating to dogs and cats, were based on the Scientific Veterinary Committee recommendations in this paper.

Organophosphate Poisoning

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to introduce a system of compensation for farmers suffering from organophosphate poisoning who cannot obtain legal aid; and if he will make a statement. [22371]

Mrs. Browning: I have no plans to introduce such a system. Questions of compensation are a matter between the individual and the company concerned.

Fishing Fleet

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the discrepancy in the size of the British registered fishing fleet and the figures quoted by the EU Fisheries Commissioner, Emma Bonino, on her recent visit to the United Kingdom. [22253]

Mr. Baldry: The figures which the Fisheries Commissioner was reported as using apparently showed a doubling of the UK fleet from 116,000 GRT—gross registered tonnage—in 1986 to 239,000 GRT now.

This is not so. The 1986 figure comes from a statistical series recording only certain significantly active vessels and is not comparable with later figures which give the total registered fleet. Moreover, the supposed figure for current tonnage is wrong and does not come from any published UK source.

Our own figures show that there has in fact been a net reduction in registered tonnage over the last 10 years to the present position of 207,000 GRT.

I have written to Mrs. Bonino drawing her attention to this.

Coastal Protection

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the Environment Agency will from 1 April prepare, operate and maintain a programme for sea defence and coast protection; what will be its policy by region on managed retreat and artificial defences; and if he will make a statement. [22254]

Mr. Boswell: From 1 April the Environment Agency will assume the operational powers of the National Rivers Authority on flood defence. The EA will exercise general supervision over all matters relating to flood defence in England and Wales. It will also undertake measures to reduce flooding from main rivers and the sea.

These functions will continue to be carried out through regional flood defence committees. Maritime local authorities will retain responsibility for coast protection against erosion.

The EA will operate within the Ministry's comprehensive policy framework for flood and coastal defence which inter alia encourages the provision of technically, environmentally and economically sound and sustainable defences. There is no presumption in favour of "managed retreat", or "managed setback" as it is better described. Setting back the line of defence is simply one of a range of options that regions of the EA can be expected to consider. All capital schemes, including artificial defences, should be based on an understanding of natural processes and, as far as possible, be compatible with those processes. The development of catchment plans and shoreline management plans will enable the EA to ensure that schemes are considered in a strategic context.

Avoparcin

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will raise the animal welfare aspect of the Danish ban and German suspension of Avoparcin at the intergovernmental conference in Italy; if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the use of Avoparcin; and what actions the United Kingdom Government plan to take at the IGC on this issue. [22543]

Mrs. Browning: The availability of Avoparcin is controlled under directive 70/524/EEC. The Danish ban and German suspension have been taken in accordance with article 11 of the directive, and the data submitted by both member states are under urgent consideration by the European Commission's Scientific Committee for Animal Nutrition. On the basis of the currently available scientific information, we do not believe that such prohibition action is justified, but the position will be reviewed in the light of the committee's scientific advice, which is expected in April. In the circumstances, it would not be appropriate to raise this issue at the intergovernmental conference.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 26 March 1996

DEFENCE

Nimrod Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which aircraft the Nimrod R1 replaced in active service with the Royal Air Force. [22363]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Nimrod R1 replaced Comet Mk2s in No. 51 Squadron Royal Air Force.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Nimrod R1 lost on 16 May 1995 had received its star window upgrade. [22354]

Mr. Soames: Star window equipment was not fitted to this aircraft.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of the star window upgrade to the Nimrod R1; and from which sub-heads of which votes these funds are taken. [22352]

Mr. Soames: The value of the star window upgrade is under £30 million. Costs have been charged to vote 2, section M6.

Bahrain

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officials and members of the United Kingdom armed forces are (a) stationed in Bahrain and (b) attached to Bahrainian military, police or paramilitary units or services (i) to support contracts, (ii) on secondment and (iii) for training (1) currently and (2) on 1 January 1995. [22662]

Mr. Soames: It is our practice not to comment on the precise location of forces deployed on operations in the Gulf region.

One Royal Navy officer, acting as UK/Bahrain defence co-operation officer, is based at the British embassy in Bahrain.

No members of the UK armed forces are attached to Bahrain's military, police or paramilitary units or services, nor were there any on 1 January 1995.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many visits have been undertaken to Bahrain by (i) officials of his Department and (ii) members of the United Kingdom armed forces in the last 12 months with, in each case, their rank and status. [22661]

Mr. Soames: The information is not available in the form requested.

Gulf War Syndrome

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to report on the inquiry into Gulf war syndrome. [22551]

Mr. Soames: As stated in my reply to the right hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) of 30 January 1996, Official Report, columns 607–608, we are in the process of commissioning a series of epidemiological studies into the alleged Gulf war syndrome. I shall report further when significant information becomes available.

Royal Yacht Britannia

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual cost of (a) routine maintenance and (b) refitting of HMY Britannia. [22823]

Mr. Soames: The present estimated cost of maintenance for the current financial year is £1,262,000. No further refits are planned.

Air-launched Anti-armour Weapon

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many companies have tendered for the new air-launched, anti-armour weapon, currently out to tender; if he will list the companies involved and the countries they are based in; and what is the estimated number of jobs that will be created to fulfil this contract. [22580]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Five companies have tendered for the new advanced air-launched anti-armour weapon as follows:

Company	Country
BAe Dynamics	UK
GEC Marconi	UK
Hunting Engineering	UK
Texas Instruments	US
Thompson Thorn Missile Electronics	UK/FR

It is too early to give any meaningful estimate of the number of jobs which will be created to fulfil the contract.

Research and Development

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of Government expenditure in support of military research and development for each year since 1986–87, including the figures planned for 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98. [22682]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information requested is set out in the 1995 edition of "Forward Look", the publication on Government-funded science, engineering and technology, volume 3, table 2.1, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Service Accommodation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of his Department's (a) married quarters and (b) other houses in each parliamentary constituency. [22999]

Mr. Soames: The information is not held in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

22 Special Air Services

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the location of 22 SAS. [23297]

Mr. Soames: The present site at Stirling Lines, Hereford occupied by 22 SAS is too small to meet long-term requirements and it is planned to move the unit to the former RAF site at Credenhill, Hereford within the next three years.

"The Military Ethos (The Maintenance of Standards)"

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what purpose the Army produced and published a paper entitled "The Military Ethos (The Maintenance of Standards)" in January 1994; to whom it was distributed; and with what instructions for onward transmission. [22715]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 25 March 1996]: The purpose of the Army paper "The Military Ethos (The Maintenance of Standards)", is to explain the requirement for high standards of personal conduct and respect for law demanded of those in military service. Before the paper was promulgated, the Army had issued edicts on various subjects such as drug misuse, but without fully explaining the reasons behind them. The paper is intended to make all serving Army personnel, recruits and members of the Territorial Army conversant with the standards required of them, and the reasons behind them.

The paper was issued on 21 October 1993 and distributed to commanders in chief, all commands and districts both home and abroad. Commanding officers were instructed to bring the paper to the attention of all ranks. To that end, commanding officers were to set aside time to explain personally these issues to their officers and senior non-commissioned officers to ensure that the message was understood.

TRADE INDUSTRY

Export Licences

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board Trade if he will list, by year, country and export classification, the number of waivers used Customs and Excise with respect to the export of military equipment. [19241]

Mr. Oppenheim: This information was not collated centrally by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what monitoring is done to ensure that goods leaving the United Kingdom on temporary export licences are returned to the UK; and if he will list those occasions since 1990 when goods exported on temporary licences have not been returned. [19249]

Mr. Oppenheim: Export licences granted for the temporary export of goods are valid for a period of 12 months, which may be extended in certain circumstances. If notification of return of goods is not received by due date, the matter is taken up immediately with the consignor. There are occasions when goods licensed for temporary export are legitimately retained overseas on a permanent basis after due consideration by my Department.

The second part of this question could be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Medical Research

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much was spent on research into (a) cancer, (b) heart disease and (c) stroke in each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement. [21579]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Research funding from the Medical Research Council for all three areas between 1989–90 and 1994–95, which is the latest year for which full figures are available, is summarised in the table:

£ million

	Cancer	Heart disease	Stroke
1994–95 figures using current definitions of research areas	13.2	11.4	3.4
[1]1993–94	13.3	6.1	0.9
[1]1992–93	13.5	5.4	1.0
[1]1991–92	13.6	5.3	0.6
[1]1990–91	13.5	5.9	0.4
[1]1989–90	13.3	5.5	0.4

[1] Figures using previous definitions of research areas.

There are two major qualifications to these figures. First, the basis for indexing and retrieving electronic research data at the Medical Research Council changed after 1993–94. Trends cannot, therefore, be read between the first five years on the one hand, and 1994–95 on the other.

Secondly, cancer studies are underpinned by a significant amount of basic research of some relevance to the above figures, but not included within them. Such areas include research into genetic blueprint and health—£37.7 million; molecules and cells—£64.9 million; and infections and immunity—£60.2 million.

The Scottish Office Home and Health Department's expenditure on these areas in as follows:

£ million

	Cancer	Heart disease	Stroke
1994–95	762,720	254,070	115,272
1993–94	963,910	361,404	141,835
1992–93	454,391	295,995	64,959
1991–92	181,113	140,004	90,677
1990–91	82,561	24,337	6,908
1989–90	112,862	72,308	79,975

In addition, the Department of Health—England and Wales—spent £8.3 million on cancer research in 1994–95. On heart disease and stroke, in 1993–94, the latest available figures, the Department of Health's policy research programme spent £400,000 on research into cardiovascular disease, and the NHS research and development programme on cardiovascular disease and stroke spent £49,537 in the same year. It is estimated that the NHS programme will spend £3,093,185 in 1995–96.

Figures for other years and for Northern Ireland are not readily available.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's funding for research into cancer. [21452]

Mr. Taylor: The Medical Research Council, which receives its funding from my Department, supports an extensive programme into cancer. For the financial year 1994–95, which is the latest year for which full figures are available, MRC expenditure was £13.2 million.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his Department's funding for research into (a) heart disease and (b) stroke. [21578]

Mr. Taylor: The Medical Research Council, which receives its funding from my Department, supports an extensive programme into heart disease and stroke. For the financial year 1994–95, which is the latest year for which full figures are available, the expenditure on (a) heart disease was £11.4 million and for (b) stroke was £3.4 million.

Departmental Contractors and Suppliers

Mr. MacShane: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures his Department is taking to ensure that its contractors and suppliers (a) pay their employees a wage which ensures such employees do not need supplementary welfare payments via various state benefits and (b) meet workplace health and safety regulations; an if he will make a statement. [21461]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Terms and conditions of employment, including wages, are a matter between the contractor or supplier and his employees, subject of course to any relevant legal requirements. Compliance with health and safety regulations is a legal requirement for the contractor or supplier.

Genetic Information

Mr. Alton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what participation Her Majesty's Government have had in the human genome project; and if he will make a statement. [21650]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Government fully recognise the value of the human genome project, HGP, and in the last three years—1994–95, 1995–96 and 1996–97—have allocated additional funding, now totalling £13 million a year, to this important area. They also recognise the need to share results of the work as widely as possible. The project will provide new insights into the treatment and prevention of many diseases and could lead to more accurate diagnosis. The Government will continue to support this work in conjunction with other international sponsors.

The genome project is a global initiative that has expanded considerably over the past few years. The Medical Research Council, MRC, which is funded by my Department through the science budget, continues to play a leading role in this work. The MRC human genome mapping project, HGMP, was initiated in 1989 to support work on genome mapping and for studies of the structural arrangements and sequence within the genome, to develop and evaluate enabling technologies and to support training. In addition to funding research grants and projects in MRC establishments, the council has set up the HGMP resource centre in Cambridge to provide centralised facilities and services to UK users. More recently, the MRC has collaborated with the Wellcome Trust to establish the Sanger centre, also in Cambridge. The centre is carrying out parallel and complementary programmes funded by the two partners, and serves as a "factory" to sequence the nematode and yeast genomes, as well as selected human chromosomes, and to develop robotics and informatics.

The Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council, BBSRC, also funded by my Department, currently supports an initiative in plant and animal genome analysis and in doing so liaises closely with the human genome mapping programme and the MRC's resource centre. Collaboration with the human genome resource centre has allowed important access to databases for use in comparative mapping, enabling animal mappers to acquire information about the position of candidate genes on the human genome. In future, these benefits may be reciprocal, allowing human geneticists access to information about the genetic bases for complex diseases, such as osteoporosis, for which there is a model in the chicken. There are also close links between BBSRC and MRC on the development of appropriate informatics to underpin genome research.

Taiwan

Sir Nicholas Scott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on credits extended from the United Kingdom to Taiwan; and to what extent payments on these are up to date. [22209]

Mr. Oppenheim: Since privatisation of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's short-term credit arm in 1991, medium and long-term export credit facilities have continued to be available to support UK capital goods and project exports to Taiwan.

Taiwan is only an occasional user of export credit, and ECGD's exposure is relatively modest, at £91 million as at 31 December 1995.

No delays in payment have been reported and no claims have been paid on business with Taiwan.

China

Sir Nicholas Scott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on credits extended from the United Kingdom to China; and to what extent payments on these are up to date. [22208]

Mr. Oppenheim: Since the privatisation of the Export Credits Guarantee Department's short-term credit arm in 1991, medium and long-term export credit facilities have continued to be available to support UK capital goods and project exports to China.

China was ECGD's top new business market in 1994–95 and is currently the largest market in terms of exposure which, as at 31 December 1995, stood at £2,240 million.

Occasional administrative delay in payment have been reported, but no claims have been paid on business with China.

Internet

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will commission a report on the technical and practical considerations of applying the V-chip to the Internet. [22141]

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department is contributing to the study of the V-chip for television being conducted by the department of National Heritage. For the Internet, it is unlikely that the application of a V-chip will be feasible in a complex global network. Legislation is not an ideal means of regulating content on the Internet, which is of increasing importance in business, education and leisure. Voluntary action on the part of network service companies, coupled with personal responsibility and the use of software tools designed to enable the subscriber to limit the range of material available, would seem to be more appropriate than imposing a particular rigid technological solution. Indeed, recent attempts by other Governments to restrict the Internet have demonstrated the difficulties with imposed regulation. I am very keen that the service providers agree, as soon as possible, a voluntary code of conduct to allay public concerns. I made this clear in a speech on 22 March 1996, in which I set out my Department's attitude to the Internet generally. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Employment Insecurity

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to investigate the effect of employment insecurity on productivity in relation to (a) small and medium enterprises and (b) the economy. [22290]

Mr. Page: The Department has no plans for research into this topic.

Dual-use Exports

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list (a) the number and countries of destination of dual-use goods licenced under the Dual Use and Related Goods (Export Controls) Regulations 1995 and (b) the number and countries of destination of licences refused. [22655]

Mr. Oppenheim: A statistical analysis of export licences both issued and refused under the Dual Use and Related Goods (Export Controls) Regulations 1995, as amended, will shortly be placed in the Library of the House. It will cover the six-month period which followed the entry into force of the regulations on 1 July 1995.

The export control organisation's annual report, which also contains this information, is currently in preparation. It, too, will be placed in the Library of the House.

Missile Systems

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if (a) a skim or cruise missile system without warheads fitted and (b) the parts, plans and technology for such a system are (i) a licensable export and (ii) defined as a lethal weapon; and under which heading of the export control orders such a system would be recorded. [22653]

Mr. Oppenheim: Export controls cover all missiles and their related specially designed parts, plans and technology. The controls apply equally to skim and cruise types irrespective of whether the missile is fitted with a warhead.

The relevant controls are found in the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, schedule 1, part III, group 1, under ML4 for the missiles and specially designed parts, and under ML18 and PL 5027 for the technology and plans.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which parts, plans, and technology for skim and cruise missile systems are covered by missile technology control regime restrictions; and what considerations of (a) range and (b) performance underlie this assessment. [22656]

Mr. Oppenheim: The missile technology control regime, MTCR, establishes lists of missiles equipment and technology subject to control. The lists are long and complex and I am placing a copy in the Library of the House.

The MTRC controls any missile, including skim and cruise types, which falls into either of two categories. Category I covers missiles capable of delivering a 500 kg payload to a range of 300 km or more. Category II, covers all other missiles with a range of 300 km or more, irrespective of payload. In assessing missile performance, it is necessary to take into account the ability to trade off range and payload.

EU External Tariffs

Mr. Allason: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether the European Union imposes different levels of the common external tariff in different member states. [22709]

Mr. Oppenheim: No. Article 9 of the EC treaty provides for the adoption of a common external tariff by member states in their relations with all third countries. However, as part of transitional arrangements following their accession, new member states may apply different levels in aligning their tariffs on the common external tariff.

British Coal Pension Fund

Mrs. Clywd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what emoluments were paid to the previous fund chairmen of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme; [23024]

(2) what emoluments are paid to the current chair of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme; and by whom they are paid. [23023]

Mr. Page: As set out in my answer to the hon. Member for City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) on 28 November 1995, Official Report, column 546, the current chairman of the British Coal staff superannuation scheme receives £15,000 per annum. This forms part of the administrative costs of the scheme. Previous chairmen did not receive any remuneration.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) how the current chair of the British Coal staff superannuation fund was appointed; [23022]

(2) when, and by whom, the current chair of the British Coal staff superannuation fund was appointed. [23021]

Mr. Page: The current chair of the British coal staff superannuation scheme, Mrs. Sheila Gleig, was selected and appointed by the Secretary of State in accordance with article 37 of the trustee company's articles of association. She began a two-year term of office on 1 May 1995.

Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines are currently in force in his Department and its executive agencies relating to competitive tendering and the use of single negotiated tenders; on what grounds single negotiated tenders can be used; and what procedures are in place within his Department to ensure that the use of single negotiated tenders in competitive tendering processes is justified in all cases. [22846]

Mr. John M. Taylor: A copy of the chapters from my Department's procurement manual providing guidance on the use of competitive tendering and single negotiated tenders has been placed in the Library of the House.

Proudman Oceanic Laboratory

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress being made under the prior options review of the Centre for Coastal and Marine Sciences as they relate to the Proudman Oceanographic Laboratory in Birkenhead. [22985]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Proudman Oceanographic Laboratory of the Centre for Coastal and Marine Sciences is being covered in the Natural Environment Research Council centres and surveys prior options review. This is scheduled to report at the end of July.

Overseas Projects Board

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will update his answer to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. Burden) of 21 February 1994, Official Report, column 22 and list the membership of the Overseas Projects Board in each year from 1977 to 1983, and in 1994, 1995 and currently, indicating the names, occupation and employing firms of each of the members together with their terms of office. [23007]

Mr. Nelson: I have placed in the Library of the House lists of Overseas Projects Board members at December 1994, December 1995 and currently. The lists contain the members' occupations and employing firms, and their terms of service or, for current members, their appointment dates. Lists for 1977 to 1983 could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Research Awards

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's level of planned funding in 1996–97 for (a) the support for projects under research—SPUR—scheme and (b) the small firms merit award for research and technology—SMART—scheme. [22686]

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department's planned level of funding in 1996–97 for the SPUR scheme is £8.3 million and for the SMART scheme is £10.7 million.

Nuclear Power (Research)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was departmental expenditure in support of research into nuclear power in the last year on which figures were available; and if he will make a statement. [22684]

Mr. Page: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Energy on 20 March 1996, Official Report, columns 197–98.

Renewable Energy (Research)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's budget for 1996–97 for expenditure in support of research into renewable energy sources. [22685]

Mr. Page: My Department's budget for the new and renewable energy programme for 1996–97 will be £14 million.

Firearms

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many handguns were sold legally in England and Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [22391]

Mr. Page: The Department does not hold information concerning the level of retail sales of handguns. However, UK manufacturers' sales of revolvers and pistols amounted to £151,000 in 1994 and sales of muzzle-loading firearms for sporting use totalled approximately £1.5 million in 1994. This and other information is published in "UK markets" report No. AR59, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Former Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what Export Credits Guarantee Department cover is available to British companies trading with Serbia and Montenegro. [22240]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 22 March 1996]: The ECGD is not on cover for Serbia and Montenegro.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Prescott: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the average annual expenditure on regional selective assistance per head of working population in (a) development areas and (b) intermediate areas in (i) Great Britain, (ii) England, (ii) Scotland, (iv) Wales and (v) each of the English regions for the years 1990–91 to 1994–95. [22247]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 22 March 1996]: The figures are as follows.

RSA expenditure per head of working population

	1990–91		1991–92		1992–93		1993–94		1994–95
	DA	IA	DA	IA	DA	IA	DA	IA	DA	IA

1. Some expenditure in 1993–94 and 1994–95 would have resulted from offers of grant made prior to the Assisted Area map change in August 1993.
2. The definition of the development areas and intermediate areas used is:-
   1990–91 to 1992–93—assisted area map prior to the changes in August 1993
   1993–94 to 1994–95—assisted area map following the changes in August 1993
3. The figures for working population used in the calculation are derived as follows:-
   1990–91 and 1991–92—1991 figures based on the definition of the assisted areas prior to the map changes
   1990–92—1993 figures based on the definition of the assisted areas prior to the map changes
   1993–94 and 1994–95—1994 figures based on the definition of the assisted areas following the map changes
4. The figures take account of the division of certain travel-to-work areas between development areas and intermediate areas
5. London and the south-east regions and the north-west and Merseyside regions have been combined because of the difficulties in fitting travel-to-work areas to regional boundaries.

PRIME MINISTER

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Prime Minister when he last discussed Cyprus with President Clinton; what issues were discussed; and if he will make a statement. [22821]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed Cyprus with the then Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Holbrooke, on 14 February. We remain in close touch with the United States. We are committed to finding a settlement in Cyprus within the framework of the United Nations process, in consultation with the United States, the European Union and other partners.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 26 March. [21171]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 26 March. [21172]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Ministers (City Sponsorship)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what the criteria are for making appointments of sponsor Ministers for individual cities. [22025]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 22 March 1996]: The duties and responsibilities of sponsor Ministers are to support Government regeneration and competitiveness initiatives through publicity and contact with local civic and business leaders and to act as a channel for communicating local concerns.

Royal Palaces (Works of Art)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the value of the works of art in the royal palaces that are in the ownership of Her Majesty's Government. [22812]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 March 1996]: The royal collection is not the responsibility of Government. The responsibility for works of art in the royal palaces rests with the Royal Collection Trust. Any questions concerning the royal collection should be addressed to the trust.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Aid and Trade Provision

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which (a) Government committees, (b) advisers and (c) experts the Overseas Development Administration consults before deciding whether to support individual applications for assistance under the aid and trade provision; and if he will list the names, occupation and employer of each person giving such advice. [22998]

Mr. Hanley: The Overseas Development Administration does not have specialist aid and trade provision advisers. Instead, as with all other ODA projects, applictions for ATP assistance are considered by the ODA's country programme managers and sectoral advisers in accordance with the relevant country strategies. The ODA monitors progress on ATP applications jointly with the Development of Trade and Industry, and consults the Export Credits Guarantee Department on export credit aspects. ATP projects involving ODA support in excess of £5 million, like all ODA projects of similar size, must be considered by the ODA's projects and evaluation committee, which makes recommendations to the Minister on whether they should be approved. Finally, all offers of ATP support must be approved by the OECD's international export credit group.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affiars which former public sector research establishments in the Overseas Development Administration have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in the Overseas Development Administration are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21940]

Mr. Hanley: From 1979 to date, no ODA research establishment has been transferred to the private sector. Over the period, a number of separate bodies were brought together to form the Natural Resources Institute, NRI. The transfer of NRI to the private sector is in progress; a preferred bidder was announced on 5 March, Official Report, column 166.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will support the internationalisation of the issue of working for a settlement on Cyprus. [22797]

Mr. David Davis: The United Nations Secretary-General's mission of good offices already offers an international framework through which to seek a solution to the Cyprus problem. It has our full and active support.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he (a) has had and (b) plans with the Secretary-General of the United Nations on the present position of the Greek Cypriots now living in the Karpas area of northern Cyprus. [22803]

Mr. Davis: The high commission in Nicosia maintains close contact with the United Nations force in Cyprus humanitarian branch which is responsible for overseeing the welfare of Greek Cypriots living in the Karpas. We support the United Nations force in Cyprus's—UNFICYP—efforts in this field.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with Mr. Rauf Denktash and the Turkish Government on the future of the town of Famagusta in Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [22799]

Mr. Davis: We have had no recent discussions on this point. We believe, however, that the UN Secretary-General's proposed confidence-building measures for the resettlement of the closed area of Famagusta and the reopening of Nicosia international airport could make a positive contribution towards an eventual solution.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed Cyprus with President Clinton; what issues were discussed; and if he will make a statement. [22822]

Mr. Davis: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed Cyprus with the then Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Holbrooke, on 14 February. We remain in close touch with the US. We are committed to finding a settlement in Cyprus within the framework of the UN process, in consultation with the US, the EU and other partners.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had or plans with the Turkish Government on the recent statement of Mr. Rauf Denktash regarding missing persons in Cyprus. [22801]

Mr. Davis: None. The UN committee on missing persons is best placed to investigate the fate of those missing. We have noted Mr. Denktash's recent statement on this subject and deplore the atrocities that have been committed in Cyprus. We would expect Mr. Denktash to pass on any relevant information to the UN committee.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Cyprus Government as to Cyprus's membership of the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [22820]

Mr. Davis: Cyprus's accession to the European Union is discussed regularly in our contacts with both communities in Cyprus. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary spoke about it with the Cypriot Foreign Minister, Mr. Michaelides, when he was in London on 1 November.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed with the President of Cyprus his views on the demilitarisation of the island of Cyprus; and what is the policy of the British Government on this proposal. [22796]

Mr. Davis: Demilitarisation arises regularly in our discussions with both communities in Cyprus. My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary discussed it with the Cypriot Foreign Minister, Mr. Michaelides, in London on 1 November. Moves to reduce deployment of troops and levels of military equipment on the island can only help to improve the climate for a settlement.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has (a) held and (b) plans to hold with the Italian presidency of the European Union regarding Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [22800]

Mr. Davis: We discuss Cyprus's accession to the European Union regularly with the Italian presidency and other EU partners. Cyprus has frequently been on the agenda of Foreign Affairs Councils, most recently on 25 and 26 March. The prospect of Cypriot accession to the EU should act as a stimulus to all parties to redouble their efforts to find a solution to the Cyprus problem.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the British Government will support an official inquiry into the alleged killing of Greek Cypriots by Turkish Cypriot troops during the invasion of Cyprus by Turkey in 1974; and if he will make a statement. [22802]

Mr. Davis: The UN committee on missing persons has long been charged with investigating the fate of those Cypriots who remain unaccounted for following the tragic events of 1974. We support the work of the committee and expect both communities to co-operate fully with it.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with Mr. Rauf Denktash and the Turkish Government as to the number of Turkish settlers now living in northern Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [22798]

Mr. Davis: There are no reliable figures for the number of Turkish settlers now living in the northern part of Cyprus. We support the call in United Nations Security Council resolution No. 789 for a Cyprus-wide census under the auspices of the United Nations.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the names of the documents and (b) the date and places of the speeches made by members of Her Majesty's Government prior to 9 April 1992 which committed the current Administration to accept the content of the treaty on European Union signed at Maastricht on 7 February 1992, other than its protocol 11 concerning monetary union and protocol 14 and associated agreements on social policies. [22765]

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister made clear on many occasions that, having negotiated and signed the treaty on European Union at Maastricht, he would ask the House to pass the necessary legislation to give the treaty effect in UK law.

Luxembourg Compromise

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the present status of the Luxembourg compromise and the circumstances on which it might be invoked by the United Kingdom. [22531]

Mr. David Davis: The status of the Luxembourg compromise and the circumstances in which it might be invoked are set out in paragraph 22 of "A Partnership of Nations", presented to the House on 12 March.

Channel Islands

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the citizens of the member states of the European Union have the right to work and establish in (a) Jersey and (b) Guernsey. [22712]

Mr. David Davis: No. The terms of the UK's Act of Accession do not require the Channel Islands to apply the provisions of the treaties relating to the free movement of persons.

Taiwan

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have raised with the Government of the People's Republic of China their concerns at the recent missile testing and the missile attacks in the Taiwan straits; and if he will make a statement. [22123]

Mr. Hanley: We have made our grave concerns over China's behaviour in the Taiwan straits known to the Chinese, both directly and through our public and parliamentary statements. We have repeatedly urged China to show restraint and have called for an early resumption of the cross-straits dialogue.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of the European Union on China's threats to the USA and Taiwan; and if he will make a statement. [22125]

Mr. Davis: The EU issued a statement on 8 March calling on the People's Republic of China to exercise restraint and urged an early resumption of the cross-straits dialogue.

St. Helena

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the prison on St. Helena was last inspected; and if he will make a statement. [23006]

Mr. Hanley: The prison on St. Helena was last inspected by Judge Tumim in February 1996.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Buildings

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when and for what reasons schools buildings undergo a Hunter survey. [22143]

Mrs. Gillan: It is for local education authorities and the governors of voluntary and grant-maintained schools to satisfy themselves about the condition of the school buildings for which they are responsible. It is open to them to conduct building surveys if they decide this is appropriate.

The Funding Agency for Schools commissioned a survey of all GM schools in February 1995. This was carried out on the agency's behalf by Hunter and Partners in order to assist the agency in managing the GM capital budget and in ensuring that the available resources are targeted to areas where they are needed most.

Specialist School Places (Autistic Children)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many specialist school places there are for autistic children in (a) Staffordshire and (b) the United Kingdom. [22380]

Mrs. Gillan: The number of specialist school places provided by Staffordshire county council for autistic children is 60.

The number of specialist places for autistic children in the UK is not available centrally.

A-level Grades

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of children achieved grades (a) A to E and (b) below grade E at A-level in (1) England, (2) Scotland and (3) Wales in each of the past five years. [22660]

Mr. Paice: The percentage of students who achieved (a) at least one grade A to E and (b) all results below grade E at GCE A-level or AS equivalent in England are as follows:

Percentage

	(a) Grades A–E	(b) Below grade E
1992	78.3	21.7
1993	79.4	20.6
1994	81.0	19.0
1995	81.5	18.5

The figures are based on the number of students in schools and further education sector colleges who attempted at least one GCE A-level or AS equivalent in the relevant year. The data for 1991 are not available on a consistent basis. The figures for Scotland and Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales respectively.

Nursery Education

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in what form, for what purpose, and what categories of information she expects will be made available to providers of funded nursery education, their employees and directors under the powers contained in schedule 2 (1)(1)(b) to the Nursery Education and Grant-Maintained Schools Bill; and what comparable provisions are contained in any Education Act. [22766]

Mr. Robin Squire: Schedule 2 to the Nursery Education and Grant-Maintained Schools Bill will allow any staff of the Department for Education and Employment and the Welsh Office and any contractor appointed by the Secretary of State to have access to such social security information as is necessary to administer the voucher scheme. It is expected that the information will be limited to relevant information from the child benefit database. Providers of nursery education, their employees and directors will not have access to this information. There are no comparable provisions in other Education Acts. Similar provisions are, however, to be found in part VII of the Social Security Administration Act 1992.

Mathematics

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will increase Government support and encouragement for the Basic Skills Agency's work to improve school students' abilities to understand and use mathematics. [22597]

Mr. Paice: The Basic Skills Agency is one of the partners, along with the Office for Standards in Education—Ofsted, the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority and the Teacher Training Agency, in the new literacy and numeracy project announced in January this year. This will establish, among other things, 10 numeracy centres from September 1996 to raise standards and improve teaching of numeracy in primary schools. Funding for this project is in addition to the core grant which the agency receives from the Department.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much her Department has spent in total in answering parliamentary questions in each parliamentary Session since 1989–90. [22879]

Mr. Robin Squire: This Department does not calculate the data requested and they could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the number and percentage of surplus places for (a) primary and (b) secondary schools for the periods ended (i) January 1994 and (ii) January 1993 in the counties of (1) Essex, (2) Cambridgeshire, (3) Norfolk and (4) Suffolk. [22909]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested was collected for the first time in January 1994. The figures in the following table show the number of surplus places at that date in schools where capacity exceeded pupil numbers.

Surplus school places, January 1994

	Primary		Secondary
	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
Essex	17,814	12	18,008	16
Cambridgeshire	7,978	13	2,837	7
Norfolk	7,383	11	4,041	9
Suffolk	4,559	10	6,000	11

Benefit Claimants (Hammersmith and Fulham)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many claimants have been suspended from benefit for not actively seeking work in the Hammersmith and Fulham area in the last 18 months. [21164]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Clive Soley, dated 26 March 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of claimants who have been suspended from benefit for not actively seeking work in the Hammersmith and Fulham area in the last 18 months.

We do not record statistics relating to periods of suspension for actively seeking work. However, we do publish, quarterly, half yearly and yearly reports on the volumes of adjudicated decisions both nationally and by Employment Service region.

This information is not broken down into parliamentary constituencies. Any statistical information in respect of Hammersmith and Fulham is included in the entry for London and South East. The publication, entitled "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions", details cases allowed and disqualified (or disallowed), by question type. The latest information can be obtained from the House of Commons library.

I hope this is helpful.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what would be the annual saving to the Exchequer for each year over the next 10 years from immediately ending the assisted places scheme for new entrants, and running the scheme down as individuals passed through the educational system. [22786]

Mrs. Gillan: The Government's expenditure plans, including those for the assisted places scheme in England published in Cm 3210, cover the period up to 1998–99 only. We do not intend to wind up the assisted places scheme.

Primary School Classes

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is her estimate of the additional cost which would result from limiting primary school classes taken by one teacher to 30 or fewer pupils; and if she will make a statement. [22788]

Mr. Robin Squire: The financial implications of any policy setting arbitrary limits on class size would depend on the resulting decisions taken at school level about the deployment of teachers and pupils, and in particular how pupils in excess of 30 per class were redistributed.

Training Provider Companies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance she has issued to training and enterprise councils on the advisability of issuing contracts to training provider companies whose principals are under investigation under section 447 of the Companies Act with respect to malfeasance and company liquidations involving training provider companies by the same principals. [22943]

Mr. Paice: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what consultations she has had with the chairman of the training and enterprise council national council concerning the status of Firland's Training of Aylesbury as a training provider in England and Wales. [22944]

Mr. Paice: My right hon. Friend has not had any discussions with the chairman of the TEC national council on this matter.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those schools where part of the annual maintenance grant of a grant-maintained school (a) is being paid and (b) will be paid, from departmental votes rather than solely from recoupment from the local education authority within the area of which the school lies; and if he will indicate the factors underlying this funding. [22976]

Mrs. Gillan: An element of the annual maintenance grant paid to the following grant-maintained schools in 1995–96 has not been, or will not be, recouped from the local education authority;

Alder Coppice Primary School, Dudley
Appleby Primary School, Cumbria
The Arnewood School, Hampshire
Bourne Abbey Primary School, Lincolnshire
The Burgate School, Hampshire
Chellaston School, Derbyshire
Costessey High School, Norfolk
Eaglesfield Paddle CE Primary School, Cumbria
The Ellowes Hall School, Dudley
The Greensward School, Essex
Greenwood Dale School, Nottinghamshire
Heanor Gate School, Derbyshire
Holy Trinity CE Primary School, Kent
Katherines Primary School, Essex
Merrill College, Derbyshire
Ringwood Comprehensive School, Hampshire
St. Anselm's College, Wirral
St. Peter and St. Paul RC High School, Lincolnshire
Sheringham High School, Norfolk
Upton Hall Convent School, Wirral
Wold Newton Primary School, Humberside
Woodnewton Way Infant School, Northamptonshire

We envisage that an element of the annual maintenance grant paid to the following grant-maintained schools in 1996–97 will not be recouped from the local education authority:

Alder Coppice Primary School, Dudley
Angley School, Kent
Appleby Primary School, Cumbria
The Arnewood School, Hampshire
Bay House School, Hampshire
Bourne Abbey Primary School, Lincolnshire
Broomhill Infant School, Sheffield
The Burgate School, Hampshire
Chase Lane Primary School, Essex
Chellaston School, Derbyshire
Costessey High School, Norfolk
The Curzon CE Primary School, Derbyshire
Dersingham First School, Norfolk
Eaglefield Paddle CE Primary School, Cumbria
Eastwood Infants School, Essex
The Ellowes Hall School, Dudley
The Greensward School, Essex
Greenwood Dale School, Nottinghamshire
Hardley School, Hampshire
Heanor Gate School, Derbyshire
Heathside School, Surrey
Holy Trinity CE Primary School, Kent
Katherines Primary School, Essex
La Retraite RC Girls School, Lambeth
Linton Primary School, Derbyshire
Loddon First School, Norfolk
The London Oratory School, Hammersmith and Fulham
Northwick Park Infant School, Essex
Old Leake Primary School, Lincolnshire
The Philip Morant School, Essex
Robinswood Primary School, Gloucestershire
Ringwood Comprehensive School, Hampshire
St. Augustine's RC Comprehensive School, Wiltshire
St. Peter and St. Paul RC High School, Lincolnshire

St. Thomas More High School for Boys, Essex
Sheringham High School, Norfolk
Wardle High School, Rochdale
Wold Newton Primary School, Humberside
Woodlands Community School, Derbyshire
Woodnewton Way Infant School, Northamptonshire

As a general rule, annual maintenace grant is recouped in full from the local education authority. However, we accept that there may be circumstances in which it is not reasonable to recoup the additional costs arising from the establishment of new provision in grant-maintained schools. Each case is considered on its merits.

Draft Admissions Circular

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will summarise the 218 responses to the draft admissions circular, issued for consultation on 8 January. [23002]

Mrs. Gillan: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 19 March 1996, Official Report, columns 122-23.

Comprehensive Schools (Hammersmith and Fulham)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the comprehensive schools in (a) Hammersmith and (b) Fulham. [23001]

Mr. Robin Squire: In the 1995 school performance tables the following secondary schools in Hammersmith and Fulham classify themselves as comprehensive.[1]

Burlington Danes CE School
Fulham Cross Secondary School
Henry Compton School
Hurlingham and Chelsea School
Lady Margaret School
The London Oratory School
Phonenix High School
Sacred Heart High School

[1]The Education (School Performance Information) (England) Regulations 1994 as amended, define a "comprehensive" school as one which admits pupils "wholly or mainly without reference to ability or aptitude or to whether pupils have been selected for a place at a selective school".

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress Bolton Bury TEC and Cilntec are making on meeting the criteria for the award of a three-year licence. [23280]

Mr. Paice: I am pleased to announce the award of a three-year licence to Bolton Bury TEC and Cilntec which have now completed the process of meeting the rigorous standards that we set.

Activity Centres Regulations

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made in drawing up the regulations required by the Activity Centres (Young Persons' Safety) Act 1995; and if she will make a statement. [23281]

Mrs. Gillan: After extensive consultation, and on advice from the Health and Safety Commission, we have today laid regulations prescribing a new licensing scheme under the Activity Centres (Young Persons' Safety) Act 1995. This will improve safety for children and young people by introducing a regular and improved inspection programme for providers who sell adventure activities to schools and the public. An order designating Tourism Quality Services Ltd. as the licensing authority has also been laid today.

The scheme will cover adventure activities under the broad headings of caving, climbing, trekking and watersports, with a focus on those in hazardous areas remote from immediate help.

We have made some changes to the draft measures consulted on by the HSC, to help small providers and sole traders with robust safety measures and competent staff. For example, the burden of having to apply for licences every year has been removed and providers can apply for licences which may be valid for up to three years. However, inspection of any provider will still take place more regularly where necessary. For multi-activity centres, this is likely to be every year.

Tourism Quality Services Ltd. will be the new, independent licensing authority. Its administration of the Wales Tourist Board voluntary accreditation scheme gives it highly relevant inspection experience. It will contract a team of inspectors who are experts in the range of activities, and to suit the various geographical and climatic conditions throughout Great Britain. There will be distinctive Scottish, Welsh and English arms.

The licensing authority may begin to process licence applications from providers as soon as the regulations come into force. They will be able to take firm action against unsafe providers from 1 August 1996. By October 1997, all providers must have been inspected and licensed. From then, providers will not be able to start operating until they hold a licence.

The list of activities covered will be kept under constant review. The scheme as a whole will be reviewed after three years.

Aided Places (Music and Ballet)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will place in the Library a list of the schools at which additional aided places will be offered under the music and ballet schemes. [23282]

Mrs. Gillan: My right hon. Friend announced on 29 February her intention to allocate some 100 additional aided places under the music and ballet schools scheme from September 1996, subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary regulations. I am placing a list in the Library.

Higher Education Institutions

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to allow greater flexibility to higher education institutions in the application of the proceeds of sale of Exchequer-funded assets; and if she will make a statement. [23283]

Mr. Forth: For many years, universities and colleges of higher education have enjoyed freedom, within specified limits agreed by the Secretary of State, to retain the proceeds of sale of Exchequer-funded land or buildings, without reference to the annual appropriation procedures. The purpose of these arrangements is to help institutions to make the most economic and efficient use of their land and buildings, with the objective of rationalising and disposing of those assets which institutions consider in the light of their strategic plans no longer to be needed.

Following consultations with the Higher Education Funding Council for England, my right hon. Friend is satisfied that these arrangements have enabled higher education institutions in England to make effective use of their estates and that it would be appropriate to consolidate and extend them.

Accordingly, the conditions attached to the disposal of Exchequer-funded land and buildings have been incorporated in a revised control framework designed to allow institutions greater flexibility to manage their own estate without the need for detailed vetting of every individual project. These conditions are among those set out in a revised financial memorandum between the Department and the HEFCE. Higher education institutions will be informed of the new arrangements in a model financial memorandum between the HEFCE and individual institutions.

The Government are still considering the relationship between the private finance initiative and controls on the disposal of Exchequer-funded assets. The new provisions for reinvesting the proceeds of sale of such assets do not take into account the full range of circumstances in which institutions might wish to procure assets or capital-related services under innovative PFI schemes. In consequence, there will be a need for special flexibilities to operate in some PFI cases. The Government will consider sympathetically requests for exceptions to the disposal provisions, on a case-by-case basis, in order to ensure that there are no financial disincentives to institutions seeking value for money through PFI schemes.

Copies of the Department's financial memorandum with the HEFCE and the model financial memorandum between the HEFCE and institutions will be placed in the Library.

Access to Work Scheme

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment is she will make a statement on the operation of access to work in 1996–97. [23284]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government are committed to helping people with disabilities to secure jobs and satisfying careers at work. Our Disability Discrimination Act 1995 will significantly improve opportunities for disabled people. The access to work programme also has a part to play, and the Government recognise the high regard which disabled people and employers have for the programme.

Access to work is not a demand-led programme. Although I increased the 1995 budget substantially during the year, from £13.4 million to £19 million, I had to announce on 14 December restrictions on eligibility conditions for the remainder of 1995–96 in order to prevent a major cost overrun. I also announced that, before I reached decisions on 1996–97, my Department would hold discussions with the disability and employer organisations principally concerned and I would take into account research and other data on the first year of operation of the programme.

In light of those considerations, I have decided for 1996–97 that, in addition to continuing to provide help to those who are unemployed, eligibility should be reinstated for employees and the self employed. This restores the eligibility criteria which applied before the December announcement.

As now, the Employment Service will continue to identify approved costs for the purposes of ATW with reference to the value of any wider benefit which accrues to the organisation. ATW will continue to meet 100 per cent. of the approved costs for unemployed disabled people. The ES will also pay 100 per cent. of approved costs for travel to work and for communicator support at interviews for all groups.

For disabled people in employment, ATW will meet up to 80 per cent. of approved costs above a cost threshold of £300 per year. With a view to the needs of the most severely disabled, ATW will however, provide 100 per cent. of all such costs in excess of £10,000 over three years. The Government recognise that particular factors may apply in the case of the self-employed and we shall consider this issue further.

Multi-year commitments to individuals will be made for a maximum of three years. The ES will accordingly review cases where commitments have been made for longer periods.

The new arrangements will apply from 1 April for the unemployed, as will travel to work and communication support at interviews for all groups. Other support for employed people will take effect from 1 June, so that the necessary new administrative arrangements on cost sharing can be implemented effectively by the ES, along with support for the self employed.

The ATW budget is cash limited and expenditure will be monitored closely. Should further prioritisation of ATW support prove necessary at any point, the Government will continue to give top priority to the unemployed, followed by those in work who suffer the onset of a disability or major worsening of a disability, and then those whose job circumstances change and those who seek to move to a new employer.

The ES will continue to discuss detailed implementation of the arrangements with the organisations principally concerned. On this basis, I am pleased to announce that I am increasing planned provision for ATW in 1996–97 from £12.9 million to £19 million. I shall be considering provision for ATW in future years in the course of the 1996 public expenditure round.

This significant increase in the budget for the programme will, I believe, be welcomed. In particular, I am pleased to be able to restore eligibility to the employed and the self-employed, as this will help them retain jobs and to progress at work. I believe that these new arrangements strike the appropriate balance in helping to meet the needs of people with disabilities, particularly those who need the most expensive types of help, while putting the available resources to best use.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which former public sector research establishments in his Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in his Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21942]

Mr. Howard: No research establishments in the Home Office have been privatised since 1979.

The police and scientific development branch of the Home Office is currently being reviewed as part of the programme of reviews of public sector establishments announced by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade on 26 January.

Gun Clubs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many gun clubs there are in each county in England and in each local authority area in Scotland and Wales; and how many members each of them has. [22459]

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 21 March, Official Report, column 295. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is responsible for gun clubs in Scotland. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 1 March, Official Report, column 168.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22502]

Mr. Howard: There have been no payments in respect of alleged equal opportunities breaches not proceeding to tribunals or courts. Information on alleged equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals is given in the table and relates to Home Office agencies. There were no awards; all the cases were settled.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans for publicising and disseminating the observations made by the United Nations committee on references to the elimination of racial discrimination in the United Kingdom's 13th periodic report. [22269]

Mr. Kirkhope: The concluding observations of the committee on the elimination of all forms of racial discrimination, following the United Kingdom's oral examination on its 13th periodic report, will be placed in the Library. The corrected summary records of the hearing will also be placed there once they have been issued by the committee. Both documents are published by the United Nations, and copies may be obtained from that source. Copies are also available from the Home Office on request and the non-governmental organisations which, to our knowledge, submitted evidence to the committee will be informed of these arrangements.

Harassment Prosecutions

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have taken place under the offence of causing intentional harassment, alarm or distress under the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994. [22154]

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Ms Anderson) on 13 February, Official Report, column 523.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes to take to ensure that the code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures is effectively enforced. [22195]

Mr. Sackville: The code provides guidance on best practice in the treatment and use of laboratory animals. It does not purport to set mandatory requirements which must be followed in all circumstances. I am satisfied that the code makes a valuable contribution to the effective operation of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. We have no present plans for further action.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that detailed housing requirements are included in the code of practice on the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures for all laboratory animals to ensure appropriate environmental enrichment and social contact for each species; and if he will make a statement. [22147]

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to amend the code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures. The existing code of practice is sufficiently flexible to reflect developments in scientific knowledge about the needs of particular species.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to ensure accountability for welfare standards for laboratory animals on the part of the designated certificate holders, the named veterinary surgeons, the named day-to-day carers and the individual Home Office inspectors; and if he will make a statement. [22148]

Mr. Sackville: No changes are necessary. Of the five categories of persons identified as holding responsibilities under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, three—the personal licence holder, the project licence holder and the holder of the certificate of designation—are directly accountable to the Home Office. The other two—the named day-to-day care person and the named veterinary surgeon—are accountable to the certificate holder for the maintenance of standards of husbandry and care and for the provision of advice on the health and welfare of animals, respectively.

The inspectors are accountable to the Secretary of State for checking that the specific responsibilities of these person are adequately met.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many exemptions he has granted in each of the last five years for the supply of animals for experimentation which have not come from a designated supplier; what were the animals concerned; and what was his reason for granting the exemption in each case. [22149]

Mr. Sackville: Schedule 2 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 lists the kinds of animals which may be obtained only from designated breeding or supplying establishments, unless the Secretary of State believes that an exemption from this requirement is justified.

Comprehensive information on the number of such exemptions is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. In almost all cases, the reason for granting the exemption would have been lack of availability of suitable animals from designated sources.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what checks are made on non-designated supply establishments for laboratory animals prior to his granting an exemption allowing them to be used; and if he will make a statement. [22150]

Mr. Sackville: No person may breed or supply animals of the species listed in schedule 2 to the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 for use in regulated procedures unless designated under the Act. By definition, therefore, any non-designated supplying establishment must be abroad, and outside the jurisdiction of United Kingdom law.

In respect of non-human primates, the Home Office inspectorate has taken steps to familiarise itself with conditions in the principal overseas breeding and supplying establishments. Arrangements shortly to be introduced will, in addition, require those wishing to use primates from abroad to submit to the Home Office details of the operations and facilities in the establishments from which they wish to obtain their animals.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many primates have been imported to the United Kingdom in each of the last five years to establishments licensed to perform procedures in animals under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 or to establishments designated to supply animals under that Act. [22151]

Mr. Sackville: The figures for the number of primates directly imported to establishments licensed to perform procedures on animals under the 1986 Act are as follows:

1991: 80

1992: 240

1993: 373

1994: 765

The figures do not include primates imported by designated breeders and suppliers under authorities which do not require notification the Home Office in respect of each consignment.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was his Department's response to the letter of 24 August 1994 from J. L. Frogley, laboratory superintendent to the Home Office inspector about the import of rhesus monkeys; what consideration he gave to the possibility of instructing the establishment to wait until animals became available from a designated breeding establishment; and if he will give the reasons for his decision. [22152]

Mr. Sackville: The request was handled in accordance with the current Home Office policy that primates may be acquired from non-designated sources only if suitable animals cannot be acquired from designated sources.

Racial Attacks Group

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the third report of the racial attacks group; and if he will make a statement on its recommendations. [22153]

Mr. Kirkhope: The draft report is still being discussed by members of the racial attacks group. Its principal purpose will be to report upon local multi-agency work to tackle this problem, and to make recommendations as to how this work can be made more effective.

Racist Material

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrests the police have made under the offence of production and distribution of racist material under the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994. [22155]

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of people arrested for specific offences is not collected centrally.

Information on cautioning and court proceedings data under section 155 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994, which made offences under section 19 of the Public Order Act 1986 arrestable under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 on 3 February 1995, will not be available until the autumn of 1996.

Racehorses

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute an independent inquiry into the deaths of racehorses at national hunt meetings; and if he will make a statement. [22206]

Mr. Sackville: No. The safety of horses at racecourses is the responsibility of the racing authorities, and I understand that they are to hold a full inquiry into the recent events at the Cheltenham festival.

Welsh Police

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of staff for each of the Welsh police constabularies indicating (a) uniformed and (b) civilian employees for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [22374]

Mr. Maclean: The information is set out in the tables:

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of answering parliamentary questions in each parliamentary Session since 1989–90. [22901]

Mr. Howard: This Department does not calculate the data requested and they could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Firearms

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many stolen or unregistered firearms have been repossessed by police in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [22294]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) handguns and (b) other firearms respectively were reported missing or stolen in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [22295]

Mr. Maclean: The available information relates to notifiable offences of burglary and theft recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been stolen by type of principal weapon.

The table shows the number of offences in England and Wales. More than one firearm may have been stolen in each offence.

Year	Pistols	Other firearms	Total
1990	187	1,358	1,545
1991	203	1,633	1,836
1992	273	1,851	2,124
1993	334	2,180	2,514
1994	266	1,950	2,216

Figures for 1995 are not yet available.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many lawfully held (a) handguns and (b) other firearms there are in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [22297]

Mr. Maclean: On 31 December 1994, the firearm certificates on issue were estimated to cover about 396,800 firearms. Figures on the breakdown between handguns and other firearms are not held centrally. Figures for 1995 are not yet available.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the current guidelines for the removal of firearms licences; how many people in each of the last five years have had their licences revoked; and if he will make a statement. [22298]

Mr. Maclean: A firearm certificate may be revoked if the chief officer of police is satisfied that the holder is, by virtue of previous convictions, prohibited from possessing firearms, or is of intemperate habits or unsound mind, or is otherwise unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm. The courts also have the power to cancel certificates.

The number of firearm certificate revocations in England and Wales in the last five years for which information is available is as follows:

1990: 192

1991: 210

1992: 146

1993: 147

1994: 193

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in England and Wales have a licence for (a) one firearm, (b) two firearms, (c) three firearms, (d) four firearms and (e) for more than four firearms; and if he will make a statement. [22299]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the (a) prosecuted, (b) convicted and (c) cleared up homicides in each of the last five years have involved (i) handguns, (ii) shotguns and (iii) other firearms; and if he will make a statement. [22301]

Mr. Maclean: The available information is contained in the table:

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what waiting period exists in the application process for a firearms licence; and if he will make a statement. [22302]

Mr. Maclean: There is no statutory waiting period, but a chief officer of police must first satisfy himself that the applicant has a good reason for possessing the firearm in respect of which the application is made, and can be permitted to have it in his possession without danger to the public safety or to the peace. The chief officer is precluded from issuing a certificate to anyone whom he has reason to believe to be, by virtue of previous convictions, prohibited from possessing firearms, or to be of intemperate habits or unsound mind, or to be for any reason unfitted to be entrusted with a firearm.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what current regulations exist concerning the storage of firearms and ammunition; and if he will make a statement. [22303]

Mr. Maclean: The Firearms Rules 1989 prescribed a new safekeeping condition to appear on all firearms certificates. This requires all certificate holders to store securely the firearms and ammunition to which the certificate relates, so as to prevent, as far as is reasonably practicable, unauthorised access. Certificate holders are also required to take reasonable precautions for safekeeping in other circumstances such as when the firearm is being cleaned, used or transferred. It is an offence not to comply with the conditions of a certificate. The maximum penalty for this offence is six months imprisonment or a fine of £5,000, or both.

National Lottery

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money the National Lottery Charities Board awarded to organisations in (a) October 1995, (b) November 1995 and (c) December 1995; and for each month what was the amount of money that has been transferred to those organisations at the present time. [22545]

Mr. Sackville: The National Lottery Charities Board awarded grants of approximately £40 million in October; £39 million in November 1995; and £80 million in December 1995.

Details of the amounts transferred to the organisations concerned is a matter for the National Lottery Charities Board. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the awards made to organisations in the north-west by the National Lottery Charities Board between 1 October and 31 December 1995 giving in each case (a) the date of the award, (b) the stage in the process for payments which each has currently reached and (c) which organisations have now received money. [22546]

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the National Lottery Charities Board. I have asked the board's chief executive to write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on how Government policy in respect of late payments is to be applied to the National Lottery Charities Board; [22547]

(2) what charter standards apply to the National Lottery Charities Board payment targets to organisations that have been awarded grants. [22548]

Mr. Sackville: The National Lottery Charities Board aims to make payments to grant recipients when the organisation concerned has indicated that it requires the money, and as soon as the board is satisfied that the terms and conditions in the grant offer letter have been fulfilled.

The financial directions which my right hon. and learned Friend has issued to the board require the board to bear in mind the need to ensure that funds are made available without undue delay when they are due for payment to the recipient. The financial directions also require the board to have regard to the need of grant recipients to settle bills promptly in accordance with standard commercial practice.

As to payment of bills by the board itself, it aims to ensure that invoices for goods and service are paid within 30 days of receipt, subject to the goods or services having been satisfactorily supplied.

Crime Prevention

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current level of Government spending on crime prevention. [22693]

Mr. Maclean: Expenditure on crime prevention activities across Government in 1994–95—the latest period for which figures are available—was approximately £260 million, an 8 per cent. increase on the previous year.

Identity Cards

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of departmental expenditure on identity card schemes in 1996–97; and if he will make a statement [22695]

Mr. Sackville: We have yet to take a final decision on whether an identity card should be introduced. Accordingly, no provision has been made in current estimates of expenditure for 1996–97 to cover the cost of such a scheme.

Police Officers

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the annual cost of providing 3,000 additional police officers. [22694]

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 5 December 1995, Official Report, column 205.

The estimated additional cost of 3,000 extra police constables in 1997–98 is £60 million, which the Government have promised to make available.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received the Metropolitan police committee's advice on proposed objectives for the Metropolitan police in 1996–97; and if he will make a statement. [23239]

Mr. Howard: Yes. Following consultation with the chairman of the Metropolitan police committee and the commissioner, I have approved the following objectives for the Metropolitan police in 1996–97:

(i) To improve performance against robbery, in particular:

(a) to achieve a detection rate for street crime of at least 15 per cent.;

(b) to increase the detection rate for robbery of business property to 20 per cent.;

(ii) To improve performance against burglary by achieving a detection rate for burglary of at least 20 per cent.

(iii) To reduce the supply of illegal drugs and the demand for them, including a specific target to increase the number of detections for the production of, supply of, and intent to supply controlled drugs by at least 10 per cent;

(iv) To provide high visibility policing so as to reassure the public, including a specific target to recruit 800 new special constables;

(v) To deliver the standards defined in the Metropolitan police service charter;

(vi) To improve performance against crime by achieving a detection rate for notifiable offences of at least 20 per cent.

These objectives and details of how to address the Government's key objectives for policing are set out in the Metropolitan police policing plan 1996–97, which the commissioner is issuing with my approval. I am sending copies of all right hon. and hon. Members whose constituencies fall wholly or partly within the Metropolitan police district, and I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library.

Justice and Home Affairs Council

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Justice and Home Affairs Council held on 19 and 20 March. [23240]

Mr. Howard: I represented the United Kingdom at the Council. The main matters dealt with at the meeting were as follows.

The Council agreed as "A" points, among other things, a recommendation on football hooliganism which followed an initiative proposed by the United Kingdom, and a joint action on the exchange of liaison magistrates between member states of the European Union.

The Council reached political agreement on a joint action on racism and xenophobia. The effect of the new measure will be to strengthen judicial co-operation between the member states in combating racist or xenophobic acts committed within the European Union.

The Council agreed the financial regulation relating to the budget for Europol, and considered briefly the question of whether the European Court of Justice should be given jurisdiction to interpret the Europol convention.

The presidency reported progress in negotiations on the draft external frontiers convention, and concluded that officials should continue work on developing the draft instrument.

The Council considered a draft multi-annual work programme, providing a framework for action in the third pillar, to be taken forward by several presidencies. A further version of the programme will be prepared in the light of discussion, for adoption at the Justice and Home Affairs Council in June.

The Council discussed proposals for areas of activity in the third pillar, which should be funded from the 1996 Community budget, and agreed that the issue should be examined further by officials.

The Council discussed a number of outstanding issues arising from negotiations on the draft convention on simplified extradition procedures. The presidency hoped that a final text of the contention would be ready to be adopted by the Council in June.

The Council noted progress on the draft convention on corruption, and agreed that work on the text should continue with a view to its being submitted for adoption by the Council in June.

The Council agreed that work should proceed on a draft convention on service of judicial documents within the European Union. The purpose of the convention would be to relieve delays in some member states in effecting service of process under the 1965 Hague convention on the service abroad of judicial and extra-judicial documents.

The presidency reported on a recent European Union seminar in Rome on fundamentalist terrorism. The Council reaffirmed its commitment to co-operation between the member states in the fight against terrorism.

The presidency reported to the Council on recent discussions in Oslo between the European Union and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees on the repatriation of refugees form the former Yugoslavia, and on a meeting in Rome with Andean pact countries which considered issues relating to illegal trafficking in drugs.

On the second day of the Council, member states' representatives met their counterparts from the central and eastern European states and Cyprus and Malta to continue the pre-accession structure dialogue with those countries on justice and home affairs.

Mr. Omar al Hassan

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what consultation he has had with ministerial colleagues about the activities of Mr. Omar al Hassan; and if he will make a statement; [17858]

(2) what investigations have been carried out into the activities of Mr. Omar al Hassan in respect of financial transfers from Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [17859]

Mr. Howard [holding answers 28 February 1996]: It is not the practice to comment on discussions which may or may not have taken place with ministerial colleagues and I am not prepared to comment on speculative inquiries about the alleged activities of individuals.

Parish Special Constables

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many parish special constables are now in place, and in which counties or police areas; how many he expects to be in place by 30 June 1996; and if he will make a statement. [9710]

Mr. Maclean [pursuant to his reply, 18 January 1996, c. 710-11]: The figure for the number of neighbourhood special constables attached to Norfolk constabulary should be 16, not 324 as reported. The total for all forces should therefore read 1,295. I apologise for the error, which occurred as a result of a misunderstanding between Norfolk constabulary and the Home Office.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22517]

Mr. Willetts: The Departments, agencies and other bodies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible paid £51,000 in 1996 in out-of-court settlements of two cases of alleged breaches involving former members of staff.

Equipment and Furniture Losses

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the cost and number of items of equipment and furniture that (a) have been stolen and (b) are otherwise unaccounted for from the Office of Public Service and its agencies in each of the past five years, listing by name any such items valued at £5,000 or more, and showing information technology material separately. [21704]

Mr. Willetts: Details of the cost and, where known, the number of items of equipment and furniture recorded as having being stolen or otherwise unaccounted for from the Cabinet Office, including the Office of Public Service, and its agencies are as follows:

[2] HMSO have no items otherwise unaccounted for.

Within this period, the only item valued at £5,000 or more stolen or otherwise unaccounted for was a Compaq Systempro file server valued at £10,000, which was stolen from the information technology system branch, ITSB, in the Horse Guards road building during 1991 to 1993.

Deregulation

Mr. Denham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to deregulate employment in small businesses. [20686]

The Deputy Prime Minister: Small businesses themselves have put forward suggestions on the areas of concern to them. Naturally, while safeguarding essential employment protection rights, we need to give careful consideration to all proposals for removing unnecessary burdens and promoting growth and flexibility.

As announced by the President of the Board of Trade on 11 March, the Government intend to publish, for consultation, a draft Bill on industrial tribunals.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Water Supplies (Asbestos)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what methods are employed by his Department to remove asbestos fibre from water supplies. [21984]

Mr. Moss: The normal water treatment processes, which are based on coagulation and filtration, remove the bulk of any suspended material.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average cost of answering an (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary question from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservation hon. Members in each Session since 1989–90. [21788]

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments do not collect the information in the form requested.

Amusement Industry

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to help the amusement industry in Northern Ireland cope with the effects of the national lottery. [22097]

Mr. Moss: On matters of interest to the amusement industry in the Deregulation (Gaming Machines and Betting Office Facilities) Order 1995, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for East Londonderry (Mr. Ross) on 14 March 1996, Official Report, column 739. These matters are part of the Government's ongoing deregulation initiative to remove unnecessary restrictions on businesses and are not linked to the effects of the national lottery.

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Deregulation (Gaming Machines and Betting Office Facilities) Order 1995 will be extended to Northern Ireland. [22096]

Mr. Moss: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for East Londonderry (Mr. Ross) on 14 March 1996, Official Report, column 739.

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which former public sector research establishments in his Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in his Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21945]

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments have not privatised any public sector research establishments since 1979.

A prior options study on the Department of Agriculture's scientific services has recently been completed, and its findings are currently under consideration. Prior options studies consider, among other things, the potential for privatisation or rationalisation.

Housing Executive

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of persons employed in each office of the Housing Executive, the travel-to-work areas from which they are drawn, and the number of (i) Roman Catholics, (ii) Protestants and (iii) others (a) between the ages of 18 and 64 years in each area and (b) in the population served by each office. [21981]

Mr. Moss: The information is not available in the format requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Department of the Environment

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in establishing new next steps agencies in the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland. [23320]

Mr. Moss: I am pleased to announce that six new agencies will be established within the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland with effect from 1 April 1996.

The Construction Service will be responsible for the provision of good quality and cost-effective professional design, maintenance and advisory services to Government Departments, agencies and other public bodies on construction-related matters. The following targets have been set for the agency for 1996–97:

- To achieve 3 per cent. efficiency gains on running costs expenditure.
- To maintain expenditure within cash limits and to approved budget plans.
- To achieve an 85 per cent. positive response in customer assessments of agency performance against service level agreements.
- To place 75 per cent. of orders within seven days of receipt of customer requests in the maintenance and supplies business areas.
- To achieve an 85 per cent. positive response in customer assessments in project evaluation reports.
- To respond to 75 per cent. of customer advisory inquiries within six weeks and 100 per cent. within 10 weeks.
- To ensure that overhead costs as a percentage of chargeable time value does not exceed 120 per cent.
- To ensure that staff time charged to customers is not less than 72 per cent. of total staff time.
- To recover the full cost of agency operations from customers.
- To ensure that actual costs as a percentage of approved target costs in project work does not exceed 105 per cent.
- To ensure that staff costs as a percentage of construction spend in the maintenance and supplies business areas does not exceed 18 per cent.

The Environment and Heritage Service will be responsible for implementation of the Government's environmental strategy and policies in Northern Ireland. Its main activities include the control of air, water and land pollution, the management of sites of nature conservation value, country parks, countryside centres and historic monuments and the protection and recording of historic monuments and buildings. The following targets have been set for the agency for 1996–97.

- To achieve 3 per cent. efficiency gains on running costs expenditure.
- To maintain expenditure within cash limits and to approved budget plans.
- To prepare effluent standards for 140 Water Service sewage treatment works with a current estimated population fo over 21,000 and place on a public register.
- To arrange an independent audit of 10 municipal waste landfill sites and produce recommendations for compliance with new controls.
- To submit proposals for the designation of four special protection areas under the EC birds directive and declare 25 areas of special scientific interest.
- To bring the basic habitat survey up to 80 per cent. completion by area.
- To schedule 60 historic monuments to bring the total to 1,225.
- To develop and produce 48 new information/education products.
- To provide a round-the-clock response service for all water pollution incidents reported to the agency and commence investigation of such incidents within 24 hours.
- To respond to 90 per cent of written inquiries or requests for information within 15 working days.

To issue 80 per cent. of licences, registrations, authorisations and consents within the time scale quoted in customer service guides.

To develop unit cost measures for appropriate activities.

The Planning Service will be responsible for the operation of the planning system and will plan and manage development in ways which contribute to a quality environment. The following targets have been set for the agency for 1996–97:

To achieve 3 per cent. efficiency gains on running costs expenditure.

To maintain expenditure within cash limits and to approved budget plans.

To complete a strategic planning review of the Belfast sub-region and present findings by 31 March 1997.

To adopt the following plans and studies by 31 March 1997:

Larne area plan;

Fermanagh area plan;

Derry area plan;

Belfast Urban area housing review;

North-east area plan alteration;

Armagh countryside proposals.

To deliver an agreed programme in support of urban affairs projects.

To establish a measure of customer satisfaction.

To take 75 per cent. of minor planning applications to district councils within eight weeks and 95 per cent. within 17 weeks.

To take 60 per cent. of major planning applications to district councils within eight weeks and 90 per cent. within 17 weeks.

To issue 45 per cent. of planning decisions within seven days of final district council consultation and 75 per cent. within 28 days.

To reduce the proportion of invalid planning applications received by 10 per cent.

To issue responses to 90 per cent. of property inquiries within 10 working days.

To establish accurate unit cost measures by 31 March 1997.

To recover 83 per cent. of the costs of determining planning applications.

To maintain full recovery of the costs of responding to property inquiries.

The Roads Service will be responsible for ensuring that the public network is managed, maintained, developed and improved; that appropriate road safety and traffic management measures are implemented; and that street lighting and public car parks are provided, operated and maintained. The following targets have been set for the agency for 1996–97:

To achieve 2 per cent. efficiency gains on running costs expenditure.

To maintain expenditure within cash limits and to approved budget plans.

To maintain the motorway network so that the proportion with a residual life of more than five years exceeds 85 per cent.

To maintain the regional route network so that the proportion with a residual life of more than five years exceeds 75 per cent.

To maintain the condition of other roads so that the overall road condition index does not exceed 70, plus or minus the 90 per cent. confidence limits.

To develop a new system to assess the extent of, and the trends in, structural maintenance priorities. System to be developed and tested by end March 1997.

To reduce the total number of injury accidents occurring at all treated sites in the three years prior to remedial works by 40 per cent. over the three years following the works.

To conduct a customer care survey, establish base line customer operations for future surveys and identify areas for improvement by September 1996.

To achieve consistently the key standards of service set out in the road user's charter statement.

To reduce the unit cost—£/km—of managing the road system, including all client activity associated with forward planning and structural, routine and winter maintenance, by 1.5 per cent. in real terms, compared with the 1995–96 outturn figure.

To reduce the ration of full input costs of contract design, management and supervision, to total contract payments by 2 per cent. compared with the 1995–96 outturn figure. Cumulative payments made in respect of contracts, excluding fee and term contracts, to be within 5 per cent. of total tender value.

To reduce the full cost of professional, advisory and other services to external customers by 2 per cent., in real terms, compared with the 1995–96 outturn figure.

The Water Service will be responsible for the supply and distribution of water in Northern Ireland, and for the collection and treatment of domestic sewage, surface water and trade effluent. The targets set for the agency in 1996–97 are as follows:

To achieve 3 per cent. efficiency gains on running costs expenditure.

To maintain expenditure within cash limits and to approved budget plans.

To achieve 98 per cent. compliance with drinking water standards set in the Water Quality Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1994.

To achieve 67 per cent. compliance with the sewage treatment works discharge standards.

To ensure that fewer than 1 per cent of properties experience unplanned interruptions to water supplies lasting more than 12 hours.

To issue substantive replies to 85 per cent. of written complaints within 15 working days of receipt.

To deliver water at a unit cost of 54p per cubic metre.

To treat sewage at a unit cost of 50p per cubic metre.

The Land Registers of Northern Ireland will be responsible for administering the land registry, the registry of deeds and the statutory charges registry. The main functions of the agency will be guaranteeing title to registered land, supplying accurate land information and providing a forum for the resolution of disputes regarding registered land. The following performance targets have been set for the agency for 1996–97:

To process applications for registration at the following rates per member of staff per month: land registry, 16.8; registry of deeds, 254; and statutory charges registry, 43.

To achieve the following average turnaround, in working days, for regular applications for registration: land registry, 20; registry of deeds three; and statutory charges registry, 15.

To achieve an average turnaround time of 10 working days for pre-completion land information services.

To achieve unit costs of £46.50 for agency registrations and £6 for agency pre-completion services.

To maintain expenditure within cash limits and to approved budget plans.

To increase overall productivity by at least 3 per cent.

To cover the agency's costs of its fee income.

To ensure that the number of customer complaints does not exceed Two per cent. of the number of applications received.

To achieve an accuracy rate of at least 98 per cent. in processing applications for registration.

I am confident that the new status as next steps agencies will lead to a significant and sustained improvement in the delivery of these important public services. I am delegating full managerial authority for day-to-day operations to the chief executive of each agency. The policy and resources framework for the new agencies is set out in their framework documents, and I shall arrange for copies of each to be placed in the Library of the House.

HEALTH

Child Supervision

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list those organisations which responded (a) favourably and (b) unfavourably to the proposal made in his Department's consultation paper to remove the Children Act 1989 registration and inspection requirement from certain people providing supervised activities used by children aged under eight years of age; and if he will make a statement; [20905]

(2) if he will list those organisations which (a) responded favourably, (b) responded unfavourably and (c) made an alternative proposal in response to proposals in his Department's consultation paper to make changes to the regulation in the Children Act 1989 which restrict the exemptions for holiday play schemes for children under eight years of age; and if he will make a statement. [20904]

Mr. Bowis: There were 309 responses to the consultation paper. Because of the difficulty of representing accurately complex views which were favourable in some aspects but unfavourable in other aspects, a simple list would not reliably reflect respondents' views.

A summary will be placed in the Library as soon as it has been prepared.

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which former public sector research establishments in his Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in his Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21941]

Mr. Malone: No former public sector research establishments under Department of Health control have been privatised since 1979.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 26 January at columns 421–23 which announced that prior options reviews of the following establishments are due for completion by December 1996:

Public Health Laboratory Service

National Radiological Protection Board

National Biological Standards Board.

Hospital Admissions

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the average time taken to complete the paperwork required on the admission of a patient to hospital; and if he will make a statement on his proposals on how it might be reduced. [22142]

Mr. Horam: The information to provide such an estimate is not available centrally. However, opportunities to streamline the admission process are provided by the information management and technology infrastructure. In particular, the new NHS number and the NHS administrative register enable quick reference to essential patient administrative information.

Out-of-School Activities

Sir Harold Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to deregulate organised out-of-school activities for children between five and eight years; and if he will make a statement. [22381]

Mr. Bowis: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 18 March at column 82.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Audit Commission's report on accident and emergency departments with specific reference to (a) the north-west and (b) Macclesfield district general hospital. [22289]

Mr. Horam: Accident and emergency services in the north-west and Macclesfield are matters for the North West regional health authority and South Cheshire health authority respectively. My hon. Friend may wish to contact Sir Donald Wilson, regional chairman, and Mr. Simon Cussons, chairman of South Cheshire health authority, for details.

Dental Services

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors underlay his decision to increase from £300 to £325 the maximum charge payable by an NHS patient for dental treatment and appliances from 1 April 1996. [22464]

Mr. Malone: Since 1951, successive Governments have thought it right that those who can afford to do so should pay national health service charges. In a full year, the increased maximum patient charge will bring in £1.5 million while still retaining a cap on the patient's contribution. However, more than 99 per cent. of courses of treatment do not attract the maximum charge. The average charge paid in 1994–95 by an adult liable for charges was approximately £21. Extensive exemption and remission arrangements protect those who are vulnerable or on low incomes and all NHS dental treatment is free for those under 18 years.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of (a) the annual cost of abolishing all charges for dental checks and (b) the annual number of people who currently make some payment for such checks. [22836]

Mr. Malone: The annual cost of abolishing charges for dental examinations, based on 1994–95 prices and charges, is £60 million. This assumes that abolishing the charge for examination does not lead to an increase in demand. The number of courses of treatment where patients pay some charge for dental examinations is estimated to have been approximately 14.5 million in 1994–95.

Blood Transfusion Centre, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the staffing levels now at the Liverpool blood transfusion centre; what cover will be available if members of staff are off sick or on annual leave; and when the Manchester facility will come into operation. [22220]

Mr. Horam: The staffing of blood centres is a matter for the National Blood Authority.

The Manchester centre will take over the bulk processing and testing work currently performed by the Liverpool centre by December 1997.

Organophosphate Poisoning

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many referrals there have been over the past five years to Guy's hospital poison unit concerning organophosphate poisoning; and if he will make a statement. [22372]

Mr. Horam: Between January 1991 and December 1995, the London centre of the national poisons information service received 1,708 inquiries about organophosphorus compounds. This number cannot be assumed to be equivalent to confirmed cases of poisoning.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to fund a medical centre for the south-west and Wales, to carry out assessment of suspected organophosphate poisoning sufferers; and if he will make a statement. [22366]

Mr. Horam: There are no plans to fund such a centre for the south-west. Any plans for Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

The assessment of suspected organophosphate poisoning sufferers can be carried out by general practitioners, who are able to obtain advice on diagnosis and treatment from any one of the seven United Kingdom national poisons information service centres. Furthermore, if they need to, they can refer patients to any hospital consultant including professors of occupational medicine and toxicology at a number of university departments.

NHS Authorities (Cars)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which chairmen of which health service bodies have been provided with a car in contravention of the regulations in each of the last five years; [22739]

(2) how many chairmen of health service bodies are currently in receipt of a leased car; what has been the number in each of the last five years; and if he will estimate the annual cost of such vehicles to the NHS. [22745]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22501]

Mr. Horam: In the current year, the Department paid out a total of £10,032.88 following two cases of alleged equal opportunities breaches. One case involved a former member of departmental staff which proceeded to an industrial tribunal where it was settled in the sum of £9,032,88 before the case concluded. The second case involved a former member of staff in an executive agency. This case was settled in the sum of £1,000 prior to proceeding to an industrial tribunal.

There are no cases recorded in the Department and its executive agencies in the previous two years. Comprehensive figures are not readily available for the non-departmental public bodies.

Leeds Health Authority

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his oral statement of 6 March, Official Report, column 356, what will be the amount of grant money allocated for services covered by the Leeds health authority; and what is his estimate of the number of (a) bids and (b) additional staff this will provide if it is all used for this purpose. [22499]

Mr. Horam: In 1996–97 Leeds health authority is planned to receive £310,704,000 for sending on hospital and community health services.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 18 March at column 79.

NHS Expenditure

Sir Terence Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each year since 1966 the annual expenditure on the national health service in real terms. [22668]

Mr. Horam: A consistent series of figures is available only from 1973–74. The information is shown in the table.

NHS total gross expenditure for England

Year	Gross Expenditure (adjusted by gross domestic product deflator to 1994–95 prices) in £ million
1973–74	16,266
1974–75	17,969
1975–76	18,899
1976–77	18,966
1977–78	18,447
1978–79	19,031
1979–80	19,380
1980–81	21,338
1981–82	21,817
1982–83	22,207
1983–84	22,530

NHS total gross expenditure for England

Year	Gross Expenditure (adjusted by gross domestic product deflator to 1994–95 prices) in £ million
1984–85	23,068
1985–86	23,124
1986–87	24,138
1987–88	25,216
1988–89	26,279
1989–90	26,462
1990–91	27,421
1991–92	29,230
1992–93	30,798
1993–94	30,975
1994–95	31,983
1995–96[1]	33,032

[1] Estimated.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost of answering parliamentary questions in each parliamentary Session since 1989–90. [22898]

Mr. Horam: This Department does not calculate the data requested, and they could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Chiropodists

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 6 December 1995, Official Report, column 225, about the proposals to extend to state registered chiropodists access to a restricted group of prescription only medicines; what progress has been made; when a final report will be published; and if he will make a statement. [21318]

Mr. Bowis: This proposal is still being considered.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the annual cost of cutting NHS prescription charges by (a) 1 per cent., (b) 2 per cent. and (c) 5 per cent. in (i) 1996–97 and (ii) 1997–98. [22837]

Mr. Malone: For 1996–97, a 1 per cent. reduction in the prescription charge would cost the national health service approximately £3 million in lost revenue, 2 per cent. would cost £6 million and 5 per cent. would cost £15 million. The costs for 1997–98 would be similar.

Eye Tests

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of (a) the annual cost of abolishing all charges for eye tests and (b) the annual number of people who presently make some payment for such tests. [22835]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 7 June 1995 at column 187.

Information is not available centrally on the number of people who currently make some payment for eye tests.

Suicide

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have committed suicide or attempted suicide in each of the last five years; how many involved (a) firearms and (b) stolen firearms; and if he will make a statement. [22300]

Mr. Bowis: Data are not available centrally on whether firearms used in the commission of suicide are stolen.

The following list shows the number of suicides—ICD[1] E950–E959, E980–E989 excluding E988.8—in England and Wales for each of the last five years for which data are available:

1990: 5,544

1991: 5,486

1992: 5,486

1993: 5,154

1994: 4,787.

[1] International Classification of Diseases, 9th revision.

The following list shows the number of deaths in England and Wales from suicide by means of firearms—ICD[1] E955.0-4 and E985.0-4—for each of the last five years for which data are available:

1990: 189

1991: 175

1992: 190

1993: 165

1994: 174.

[1] International Classification on Diseases, 9th revision.

The only centrally available information on attempted suicides is for those cases subsequently admitted to hospital.

The following list shows estimates—based on the recorded number of emergency admissions taken from hospital episodes statistics—of cases of suicide or self-inflicted injury caused by firearms or explosives in the last five financial years.

1990–91: 23

1991–92: 32

1992–93: 23

1993–94: 33

1994–95: 30 (provisional figures).

We are pursuing a wide range of initiatives towards the "Health of the Nation" target of reducing the rate of suicide by 15 per cent. between 1990 and 2000. These include improving mental health services, increasing public awareness of mental health issues, targeting demographic and occupational groups at particular risk of suicide and reducing access to means.

Bovine Serum (Vaccines)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's policy in relation to the use of bovine serum in vaccines. [22914]

Mr. Horam: Currently licensed vaccines do not contain any bovine material sourced from the United Kingdom. Bovine serum albumin, used in the manufacture of some vaccines, is covered by the European Committee on Proprietary Medicinal Products guideline on bovine spongiform encephalopathy and medicines entitled "Minimising the risk of transmission of agents causing spongiform encephalopathies via medical products". All UK licensed vaccines comply with this guidance.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the countries from which bovine serum for vaccine is banned for use in the United Kingdom and the date on which the prohibitions took effect. [22915]

Mr. Horam: There is no list of banned countries, but bovine serum albumin is not obtained from United Kingdom sources, or areas where bovine spongiform encephalopathy is endemic. Bovine serum albumin used in vaccine manufacture must comply with the European Committee on Proprietary Medicinal Products guideline on BSE and medicines, entitled "Minimising the risk of transmission of agents causing spongiform encephalopathies via medical products".

Drinking Water (Lead Levels)

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the safe level of lead in drinking water for (a) babies, (b) children under three years of age, (c) expectant mothers and their unborn babies and (d) adults suffering from osteoporosis; [22973]

(2) when the Chief Medical Officer of Health last made a statement on the health dangers of lead in drinking water. [22975]

Mr. Horam: In 1989 the Chief Medical Officer accepted and endorsed advice on lead in drinking water from the Department of Health's expert advisory committee on the medical aspects of contamination of air, soil and water, that

> "the aim in the long term should be to achieve compatibility both with the criterion that in not more than 2 per cent. of the population of interest should the blood lead concentration exceed 25 micrograms per decilitre, and with a weekly intake of not more than 25 micrograms lead per kilogram body weight in infants and children."

The advice was published in the Department of the Environment/Welsh Office "Guidance on safeguarding the quality of public water supplies", copies of which are available in the Library. Calculations published by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in food surveillance paper No. 27, copies of which are also available in the Library, indicate that the criteria would be met for adults by water with an average lead concentration of 30 micrograms per litre or less, and for bottle-fed babies by water with an average lead concentration of 10 micrograms per litre or less.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has undertaken and when into the health dangers of lead in drinking water. [22974]

Mr. Horam: Through the health survey for England, the Department is supporting research into the relationship between blood pressure and blood lead levels. Studies on lead and human health have been supported by the Medical Research Council, which is the main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research, and which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Hotel Accommodation Prices (Display)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to revoke the requirement to display accommodation prices in hotels. [13678]

Mr. Sproat: My Department has considered the case for revocation or amendment of the Tourism (Sleeping Accommodation Price Display) Order 1977, and has sought the views of the tourism industry and other interested parties. Future policy remains under consideration.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many questions were tabled to her Department in each Session since 1987–88; how many were not answered on the grounds of disproportionate cost; what percentage of the total number of questions this represented; how many were not answered on the grounds that the information was not centrally available; and what percentage of the total number of questions this represented. [21151]

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage was established in April 1992.

The available figures for the number of questions tabled to my Department in each parliamentary Session are as follows:

Session	Number of questions tabled
1992–93	1,281
1993–94	1,099
1994–95	1,226
1995–96[1]	516

[1] To 20 March 1996.

These figures have been produced from POLIS database the—the parliamentary online information system.

The rest of the information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sport (Business Sponsorship)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what are the latest figures on business sponsorship of sport. [22092]

Mr. Sproat: Estimates suggest that the size of the United Kingdom sports sponsorship markets in 1995 has increased from £265 million in 1994 to £285 million. Market surveys point to a welcome increase at grass roots level, with the Government's sportsmatch scheme having a significant effect on sponsorship of youth and school sport.

National Lottery

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to set lower partnership funding requirements under lottery rules of those arts institutions that are bound by charitable rules to provide access for people at low prices. [22012]

Mr. Sproat: There are no plans to change the current required levels of partnership funding. The arts, sports and heritage distributors are required to take into account the need for significant levels of partnership funding in applications. It is a matter for the distributing bodies themselves to determine the precise levels required for different types of awards.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many applications to each distributing body from organisations in Nottinghamshire have been received for lottery funding. [20379]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 14 March 1996]: The National Heritage Memorial Fund has received 19 applications from organisations in Nottinghamshire, the Sports Council has received 65 applications; the Arts Council of England has received 35 applications; the Millennium Commission has received 25 applications; and the National Lottery Charities Board has received 1,558 applications from the east midlands region—this includes Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, Lincolnshire, Leicestershire and Northamptonshire.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) in how many cases lottery funds have been paid to an organisation that had not at the time received planning permission for the building on which the funds were to be spent; [20492]

(2) in what circumstances lottery funds are made available to organisations which have not received planning permission on a relevant building; and what conditions are placed on the use of the funds. [20493]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 18 March 1996]: There have been four cases in which lottery funds have been paid out to organisations which at the time had not received planning permission.

The planning statutes of the four projects, funded by the Millennium Commission, are as follows:

the Earth centre—outline planning permission for an ecological park and detailed planning permission is being sought;

the Millennium forests in Scotland—planning permission is not required;

Sustrans, the nationwide cycle network—a rolling programme for which councils apply and then give details to Sustrans, and Rights of Way and public access in perpetuity are sought for cycle paths once the route has been agreed; the Groundwork projects—another rolling programme, comprising 21 sites. All have outline planning permission. Detailed planning permission is awaited on 10 sites and no problems are foreseen by Groundwork.

The Millennium Commission has not made any grants to projects which have not had outline planning consent where that consent was required. The commission, along with its professional advisers makes contact with local planning authorities to verify the status of planning applications and obtains assurance that detailed planning permission will be granted. The commission's stance is to avoid funding projects where full planning permission may not be granted, looks problematic or could result in or necessitate a public inquiry, and or compulsory purchase orders in view of the limited life of the commission.

Autistic Children

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much of the lottery proceeds have been distributed to charities or organisations specifically helping autistic children. [22446]

Mr. Sproat: To date, three awards totalling £150,070 have been made to organisations which support autism sufferers of all ages.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) her Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which she is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22504]

Mr. Sproat: No member of staff or former member of staff in my Department has received money for alleged equal opportunities breaches in the current year or in the previous two years. The Department is responsible for two agencies: The Historic Royal Palaces Agency and the Royal Parks Agency. No member of staff or former member of staff in the Historic Royal Palaces Agency has received money for alleged equal opportunities breaches in the period stated. One former member of staff in the Royal Parks Agency was paid £3,000 in February this year, for an alleged equal opportunities breach, in a case which was settled out of court.

Library Funding

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what public spending was spent on libraries in 1995–96; and what was the figure in 1980–81. [22722]

Mr. Sproat: It is estimated that total expenditure on public libraries in England in 1995–96 will be £640.94 million. The figure in 1980–81 was £263.02 million.

Museums and Galleries (Admission Charges)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the annual revenue obtained from charges for entry to public museums and galleries in the last year for which figures are available; and what proportion of it came from school parties. [22721]

Mr. Sproat: Information on annual revenue from charges for entry to public museums and galleries is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, of the 17 museums and galleries directly sponsored by my Department the total revenue from admissions, including admissions to special exhibitions, in 1994–95 was £15,481,852, of which £243,569 came from school parties. No data for the Royal Armouries exist as entry at that time was by a combined ticket to the Tower of London.

Television Licences

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what would be the cost of making television licences available at (a) no cost, (b) £5, (c) £10, (d) £15 and (e) £20 for (i) all pensioners, (ii) pensioners over 75 years and (iii) pensioners over 80 years. [22481]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 22 March 1996]: The information requested is contained in the following table. The estimates assume that the current number of pensioner households with television remains unchanged.

Estimated licence fee revenue loss under different levels of licence fee for pensioners

Cost of TV licence	(i) For all pensioners (£ million)	(ii) For pensioners over 75 years (£ million)	(iii) For pensioners over 80 years (£ million)
(a) no cost	540	190	80
(b) £5	510	175	75
(c) £10	480	165	70
(d) £15	445	155	65
(e) £20	415	145	60

Figures are rounded to the nearest £5 million.

WALES

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many questions were tabled to his Department in each Session since 1987–88; how many were not answered on grounds of disproportionate cost; what percentage of the total number of questions this represented; how many were not answered on the grounds that the information was not centrally available; and what percentage of the total number of questions this represented. [21141]

Mr. Hague: Parliamentary questions tabled to this Department in each Session since 1987–88 were as follows:

	Written	Oral
1987–88	1,881	470
1988–89	1,550	258
1989–90	2,354	242
1990–91	1,945	219
1991–92	1,022	78
1992–93	3,867	323
1993–94	2,112	178
1994–95	2,527	213
1995–96	[1]891	[1]97

[1] Figures for 1995–96 Session as at 20 March.

These figures have been produced from the POLIS database—the parliamentary online information system. The figures reflect the number of questions answered and should be treated as indicative only. Because of certain factors, complete accuracy on departmental activity cannot be provided.

The number of questions not answered on grounds of disproportionate cost or the information not being held centrally could itself be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost of answering parliamentary questions in each Session since 1989–90. [22906]

Mr. Hague: This Department does not calculate the data requested, and they could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which former public sector research establishments in his Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in his Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21950]

Mr. Hague: No former public sector research establishments in my Department have been privatised since 1979. The research and development activities of ADAS, an executive agency owned jointly by MAFF and the Welsh Office, are currently undergoing a prior options review to determine their future status.

Village Shops and Post Offices

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will clarify the definition of (a) a village and (b) a shop for the purposes of the new initiative outlined by him in the White Paper, "A Working Countryside for Wales", for a new rate relief scheme targeted at village shops and post offices. [22197]

Mr. Hague: As the White Paper makes clear, I shall consult shortly on the detail of my proposals for this scheme.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the earliest date proposed for the coming into force of new provisions to relieve village shops and post offices in rural Wales from the burden of business rates; and if he will make a statement. [22196]

Mr. Hague: The White Paper "A Working Countryside for Wales" proposes a rate relief scheme for village shops and post offices, details of which will be subject to public consultation shortly. Inclusion in the Government's future legislative programme will depend upon a number of factors, including the outcome of the consultation.

Multi-storey Housing Blocks

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his estimate of the total number of people living in multi-storey blocks of flats in Wales; and if he will make a statement; [22369]

(2) what is the total number of blocks of multi-storey flats over 10 floors high in Wales; and where they are located. [22397]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Pupils with Hearing Difficulties

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will draw up guidelines for the new unitary authorities in Wales for the provision within each county of education in mainstream schools for pupils with hearing difficulties. [22286]

Mr. Hague: Each new authority is responsible for deciding how to deliver particular services, including those for pupils with special educational needs. Authorities and schools have to provide appropriate education for children with special educational needs and to have regard to the code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs. All unitary authorities have been sent copies of Welsh Office circular guidance and associated regulations.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish details of the measures taken in Wales following the recommendations of the 1995 world government meeting on land-based sources of marine pollution; and if he will make a statement. [22230]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The UK delegation took a leading part in the conference organised by the UN environment programme in Washington DC on 23 October to 3 November 1995, which adopted the global programme of action for the protection of the marine environment from land-based activities. This programme of action reflects the approach being adopted throughout the United Kingdom, and by other states in north-west Europe, to this task. Implementation in Wales will therefore be achieved by continuing our present policies.

Bridges

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost of upgrading bridges in Wales to meet the weight requirement of EU regulations for heavy lorries; and what estimate he has made of the proportion of this cost likely to fall on (a) the Welsh Office and (b) local highway authorities. [22594]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 1 March, Official Report, column 783.

Home Insulation Grants

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many disabled applicants have received home insulation grants in each of the last three available years in Wales; and what was, in each year, the percentage change over the previous year. [22234]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Home insulation grants have been superseded by grants available under the home renovation and home energy efficiency schemes. Information is not available on the number of disabled people receiving help with insulation under these schemes.

Council Tax

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will pay council tax reduction scheme grant to Welsh local authorities. [23295]

Mr. Hague: Council tax reduction scheme grant will be paid under section 88A of the Local Government Finance Act 1988, in three equal instalments in April, July and October 1996.

Parliamentary approval of this new expenditure is being sought in the 1996–97 main supply estimate for the local government, Wales vote—class XIV, vote 5. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure of £29.945 million on the first two instalments of grant to eligible authorities will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

Departmental Cash Limits

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes he is proposing to make to the cash limits for his Department for the current financial year. [23296]

Mr. Hague: The cash limit for class XV, vote 6 will be reduced by £330,000 from £2,264,342,000 to £2,264,012,000; the cash limit for the Welsh Office/LACAP will be reduced by £5,857,000 from £515,533,000 to £509,676,000, and the cash limit for Welsh Office/Housing for Wales will be increased by £6,187,000 from £105,510,000 to £111,697,000. The changes take account of two transfers.

A sum of £330,000 will be transferred from an underspend on the budget of the Valuation Office in vote 6 to the local authority capital cash limit—WO/LACAP partly to finance mandatory compensation costs.

Also, a sum of £6,187,000 will be transferred from local authorities to Housing for Wales, which will enable housing associations to provide additional housing units.

These proposed changes will not add to the overall level of public expenditure.

Wilprint

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what instructions have been issued and on what date to non-departmental public bodies concerning the inclusion of Wilprint on the tender lists for public sector printing work. [21429]

Mr. Hague [holding answer 19 March 1996]: No instructions were given to non-departmental public bodies either to include, or to exclude, Wilprint from tendering for public sector printing work.

However, non-departmental public bodies were notified on 8 June 1992 that, as a result of relationships between an ex-official of my Department and Wilprint, the company would not be invited to tender for Welsh Office contracts while the matter was investigated by the police. The decision would be reviewed when the investigations were concluded.

My Department informed NDPBs on 13 November 1995 that it had decided to continue its policy of not inviting Wilprint to tender following the conviction of the ex-official and the managing director of Wilprint.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Equipment and Furniture

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the cost and number of items of equipment and furniture that (a) have been stolen and (b) are otherwise unaccounted for from his Department and its agencies in each of the past five years, listing by name any such items valued at £5,000 or more, and showing information technology material separately. [19032]

Mr. Boswell: The table details the cost and number of items of equipment and furniture which have been (a) stolen or (b) unaccounted for from the Department during the financial years 1991–92, 1992–93, 1993–94, 1994–95 and the first 11 months of 1995–96.

Unfortunately, without incurring disproportionate cost, it is not possible to split IT equipment from other losses for the first three years, owing to the way in which the manual records were held.

The chief executives of ADAS, the Meat Hygiene Service, the Pesticides Safety Directorate, the Veterinary Laboratories Agency, the Central Science Laboratory and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate will be writing to the hon. Member separately.

Letter from G. K. Bruce to Mr. Ian McCartney, dated 26 March 1996:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply, in respect of the Pesticides Safety Directorate (PSD), to your question concerning stolen or unaccounted for items.

The Directorate was launched as an executive agency on 1 April 1993. Since that time there have been no instances of equipment or furniture that have been stolen or otherwise unaccounted for.

Letter from Johnston McNeill to Mr. Ian McCartney, dated 26 March 1996:

As Chief Executive of the Meat Hygiene Service (HMS), your question regarding items stolen or otherwise unaccounted for has been passed to me for reply with regard to this Executive Agency. (19032)

As you may know, the MHS was established on 1 April last year. Therefore, we only have data covering the period since then. In that time, we have encountered the theft of two items of computer equipment valued at a total of £2190. We have no other items unaccounted for in any way.

Letter from T. W. A. Little to Mr. Ian McCartney, dated 26 March 1996:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question on items of equipment and furniture which have been stolen or are otherwise unaccounted for in the Veterinary Laboratories Agency (VLA).

The VLA was established on 1 October 1995, from the merger of the existing Central Veterinary Laboratory with the Veterinary Investigation Service, which was part of the State Veterinary Service.

The figures are as follows:-

	1996 (to date)	1995	1994	1993	1992
Number of items stolen	9	12	—	—	6
Cost of items stolen	£3,073	£3,000	—	—	£1,660

No items of IT equipment have been stolen.

Letter from Professor P. I. Stanley to Mr. Ian McCartney, dated 26 March 1996:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your question about the cost and number of items stolen or unaccounted for in the past five years in respect of his Central Science Laboratory (CSL) Agency, as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible.

In terms of non-IT equipment or furniture, items with a total value of £330 were otherwise unaccounted for. In addition a CSL vehicle was stolen, but because of its age and condition its asset value was zero.

In terms of Information Technology, approximately £10,000 worth of IT equipment was stolen during a recent burglary. No individual item had a value of £5,000 or more.

Letter from J. M. Rutter to Mr. Ian McCartney, dated 26 March 1996:

The Minister has asked me to reply to your question about stolen and unaccounted for items of furniture and equipment from the Veterinary Medicines Directorate as this is an operational matter for which I am responsible.

The only item of VMD equipment lost in the last five years has been a Tandon PC valued at approximately £250, which was stolen recently from the Veterinary Investigation Centre, Newcastle. The theft has been reported to the local constabulary.

Letter from Phillip Needham to Mr. Ian McCartney, dated 26 March 1996:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question concerning the cost and number of items stolen or unaccounted for in the past five years in ADAS. (19032)

ADAS was formed as an Executive Agency of MAFF and the Welsh Office in 1992. Any detail relating to items stolen prior to that date would be available from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

The figures are as follows:

	1992	1993	1994	1995

Quarantine Kennels

Mr. Gale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the standards of animal care in quarantine kennels; and if he will make a statement. [21673]

Mrs. Browning: I have recently invited representatives of the two trade associations, the Quarantine Kennels Owners Association and the Quarantine Kennels Professional Association to a meeting to discuss animal welfare standards in quarantine kennels.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22516]

Mr. Boswell: Neither the Ministry, its executive agencies and non-departmental public bodies, nor the Intervention Board has made any payment to any current or former member of staff in relation to alleged equal opportunities breaches, whether or not they have proceeded to tribunal or court, in the current year or the two preceding ones.

Fishing

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what EC fund is used to buy fishing opportunities in non-EC waters. [22795]

Mr. Baldry: Funding for the third country fishing agreements comes under chapter B7-80 of the Community budget, covering international fisheries agreements.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which countries benefit from EC agreements with non-EC countries regarding fishing opportunities. [22771]

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 15 January 1996, Official Report, columns 444–50.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what financial contribution the EC has made to non-EC countries in order to obtain fishing opportunities; and if he will list the amounts paid to each such non-EC country. [22794]

Mr. Baldry: Details of the financial contributions under current fisheries agreements are set out in the table. The contributions cover fishing opportunities as well as providing funds for scientific and technical programmes and for study and training grants for nationals of the third country.

Alcohol

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has held on the presentation of information on units of alcohol on the labels of alcohol containers; and what plans the Government have for the introduction of information on units of alcohol on the labels of alcohol containers. [22449]

Mrs. Browning: The 1992 White Paper "Health of the Nation" said that there would be discussions with trade bodies on a possible format for voluntary display of alcohol units at point of sale. A working party of officials and the interests concerned made some progress, but decided to await the report of the inter-departmental working party on sensible drinking. That report was published in December 1995. Discussions are now taking place with the interests to see what further progress can be made on display of alcohol units.

Live Animal Transport

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many notices under paragraphs 15 and 16 of the Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1994 have been issued during the last 12 months by local veterinary inspectors in the area of Dover when they have identified sheep or calves which are unfit to travel; [22077]

(2) which policy or guidelines he has issued to local veterinary inspectors to assist them in deciding whether to issue a notice under the Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1994 when they find an animal which is unfit to travel; and if he will make a statement. [22078]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 21 March 1996]: No article 15 or article 16 notices have been issued by local veterinary inspectors in the area of Dover. It is the responsibility of the local veterinary inspector to ensure that he or she does not provide unfit animals with export health certification. Training and guidance on the procedures for this is provided for LVIs by the divisional veterinary manager.

ENVIRONMENT

Capital Challenge

15. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the local authority associations concerning capital challenge. [20951]

Mr. Gummer: The Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration met them on Monday 18 March.

Housing Need

18. Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the backlog of unmet housing need. [20954]

Mr. Clappison: The number of people in severe housing need is small in absolute terms, and we are taking steps to drive the figure lower. The number of people who are in overcrowded or bed-and-breakfast accommodation, or are sleeping rough has all fallen substantially in recent years. The Environment Committee's report on housing need did not endorse suggestions of a large backlog of unmet need, but did ask us to do further work, and we are considering this as part of our response to its report.

Pollution

19. Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about volatile organic compound emissions. [20955]

Mr. Clappison: We have a strategy in place to deliver the 30 per cent. reduction in volatile organic compounds—VOC—emissions to which we are committed under the United Nations economic commission for Europe VOC protocol. We are well on course to achieve this reduction. We shall address the need for further reductions and the means by which they may be achieved in our forthcoming air quality strategy.

Opencast Mining

20. Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to amend the mineral planning guidance on opencast mining. [20956]

Sir Paul Beresford: None. Revised guidance was published in mineral planning guidance 3 in July 1994 after extensive consultation and is working well.

Local Government Finance

21. Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the methodology used to distribute central Government grant to local authorities. [20957]

Sir Paul Beresford: The methodology used to distribute revenue support grant for 1996–97 is set out in "The Local Government Finance Report (England) 1996–97" approved by this House on 31 January 1996.

22. Mr. Touhig: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next meet local government leaders to discuss financial management practices. [20959]

Mr. Curry: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets the leaders of the local authority associations regularly throughout the year to discuss a range of issues affecting local government finance, but financial management is a matter for local authorities and their appointed external auditor.

Construction Industry

23. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what submissions he has received from the construction industry concerning local authority capital investment. [20960]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have regular meetings with the construction industry to discuss a range of issues of mutual concern.

Regional Assembly, Yorkshire

24. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities in Yorkshire in respect of the establishment of a regional assembly. [20961]

Mr. Curry: Local authorities in Yorkshire and Humberside publicised their proposals to establish a regional assembly of local councils in December 1995. Some information about these proposals has been passed to the Government office in the region, but I have received no formal representations on the matter.

Marine Oil Pollution

25. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what duties the new Environment Agency will have in relation to marine oil pollution. [20962]

Mr. Clappison: The new Environment Agency will continue to exercise the same controls over oil pollution of the sea from land-based sources as are currently exercised by the existing regulatory bodies. Operational matters on board ships at sea relating to pollution will continue to be overseen by the Marine Safety Agency. The marine pollution control unit—MPCU—remains the competent national authority for dealing with marine pollution from ships. In a major spill, MPCU is responsible both for directing at-sea operations and co-ordinating the shoreline response.

Air Quality

26. Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase resources available to local authorities to measure air quality. [20963]

Mr. Clappison: The Government have provided £2 million in 1996–97 to help local authorities develop guidance in advance of their new duties to review and assess air quality next year. In addition, the Government aim to integrate around 35 local authority air quality monitoring stations into the national network by providing support for quality assurance and control by the end of 1996.

27. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to improve the quality of air in cities and towns. [20964]

Mr. Clappison: The Environment Act 1995 set up the legislative framework for a national air quality strategy and for action by local authorities to assess and manage air quality. The strategy, which will be published for full public consultation during the summer, will set out air quality standards and objectives, and will outline the measures which will be taken at international, national and local level in order to meet those objectives.

Urban Environment

28. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to improve the urban environment; and if he will make a statement. [20965]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government are promoting the improvement of the urban environment through a wide range of policies and programmes.

Chief among these is the single regeneration budget, SRB, which has brought together 20 separate programmes previously operated by five different Government Departments into a single flexible fund for local regeneration. The SRB challenge fund encourages local partnerships to produce comprehensive packages for regeneration, including the improvement of the environment and quality of life in their area.

The SRB also incorporates English Partnerships, the main public body facilitating the regeneration of brown-field sites throughout England, in partnership with the private sector, local authorities and communities, and the urban development corporations, which are tackling successfully the major problems of dereliction in their areas.

The Government's quality initiative continues to raise awareness of the importance of good design both in individual buildings and in the built environment as a whole, stimulating ideas on how to achieve quality in the future for all those involved. A key element is our national urban design campaign, sponsoring local partnerships in 21 urban design projects in cities, towns and villages across the country.

Our greening the city initiative, launched last October, will promote discussion and ideas about the opportunities for creating or enhancing the landscaping of urban areas. An important step is the publication today of my Department's good practice guide "People, Parks and Cities", which will help local authorities and other agencies develop future strategies for their parks and adopt good practice in their management and funding.

Taken together, these measures will contribute substantially to the sustainable improvement of our urban environment, for the benefit of all those who live, work and visit our towns and cities.

Mining and Quarrying Waste

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tons of (a) mining and

(b) quarrying waste is produced in the United Kingdom every year. [21734]

Mr. Clappison: The best available estimates of production of waste materials from mineral extraction in the United Kingdom between 1985 and 1994 are summarised below. Wastes produced by deep mining of coal have fallen steadily since 1985 and in 1994 amounted to only 40 per cent. of the weight produced in 1985. Wastes from other mining and quarrying activity rose by 38 per cent. between 1985 and 1988 and then fell back to 1985 levels by 1992. Since 1992 they have risen again.

Production of waste materials from mineral extraction in the United Kingdom, 1985–1994 thousand tonnes

Year	Wastes from deep mined coal	Wastes from other mining and quarrying	Total
1985	41,360	57,641	99,001
1986	49,701	60,767	110,468
1987	47,276	66,384	113,660
1988	46,069	79,818	125,887
1989	43,795	77,247	121,043
1990	40,094	69,292	109,386
1991	40,346	64,943	105,289
1992	32,528	59,051	91,579
1993	28,050	63,013	91,063
1994	16,500	62,450	78,950

Contaminated Land

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made by English Partnerships on the clearing and redevelopment of contaminated land. [21736]

Sir Paul Beresford: The remediation of contaminated land is one of English Partnerships' key objectives and high priority is given to the regeneration of sites suffering from contamination. In 1994–95, English Partnerships regenerated 1,700 hectares of vacant, derelict or contaminated land.

Waste Incinerators (Fires)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigations have been conducted by Her Majesty's inspectorate into the recent fire at Whitley incinerator, Coventry, and what measures have been taken to reassure the local residents over the question of public health safety. [22279]

Mr. Clappison: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, HMIP, is investigating the fire which occurred on 8 March at the Whitley incinerator.

It has asked for a report of the incident from the company. Initial investigations suggest that the fire may have started as a result of a power failure causing the extraction fans to stop. This led to the combustion chambers in the incinerators becoming pressurised, causing hot material such as sparks to be thrown out of the combustion chamber which set light to unincinerated refuse in the main bunker.

The investigation is targeted at identifying the causes of the incident in order that a recurrence can be prevented. HMIP is also co-operating with the local council and the public health department in their investigations into the possible health effect of the fire, and will consider these findings in relation to any further action.

Mr Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many fires at waste incinerators there have been in the past five years. [22284]

Mr. Clappison: Fires at waste incinerators are infrequent, but records of the number of such incidents are not kept either locally or centrally by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Housing Corporation Grants

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent grants from the Housing Corporation are based on the rent calculations provided by the housing associations; and if he will list the (a) bids from and (b) grants to housing associations in the northern region. [22221]

Mr. Clappison: In considering bids for the allocation of approved development programme resources in 1996–97 the Housing Corporation took into account prospective rents alongside other relevant factors in assessing value for money. The process is explained in the Housing Corporation's "Guide to the Allocations Process" published last year. The Housing Corporation will shortly be publishing details of 1996–97 allocations for each of its regions, including the northern region. I have asked that a copy be sent to the hon. Member. The Housing Corporation does not publish information about individual bids which are not successful, but its regional offices are always prepared to discuss them with the applicant.

Organic Pollutants

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Enviornment if he will make it his policy (a) to impose a ban on all identified persistent organic pollutants and (b) to support the development of safer alternatives. [22225]

Mr. Clappison: The UK has played a major role in developing a proposed protocol on persistent organic pollutants under the United Nations economic commission for Europe convention on long-range transboundary air pollution. The development of such a protocol involves the careful identification of potential persistent organic pollutants, their assessment and a consideration of the most appropriate action to control the identified risks. This will not always result in a total ban. In some cases, there may be an essential use of a substance which should be preserved. Each substance identified as a persistent organic pollutant will have to be judged on its own merit.

An expert working group of the intergovernmental forum on chemical safety will meet on 17 to 19 June 1996 to evaluate the availability, including costs and effectiveness, of safer substitutes. The Government will be taking an active role in developing the way forward.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to phase out the disposal of raw sewage and industrial waste in rivers and oceans. [22226]

Mr. Clappison: Currently, 96 per cent. of the UK population is connected to a sewage system and 83 per cent. of sewage is treated. In line with the requirements of the urban waste water treatment directive, an implementation programme, which includes the provision of treatment for all significant discharges of sewage, has been established. A copy of this programme is in the Library of the House.

The discharge of industrial waste from prescribed processes is controlled by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. In issuing permits, it requires dischargers to apply the best available techniques not entailing excessive costs.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of the measures taken in England following the recommendations of the 1995 world Government meeting on land-based sources of marine pollution; and if he will make a statement. [22229]

Mr. Clappison: The UK delegation took a leading part in the conference organised by the UN environment programme in Washington DC on 23 October to 3 November 1995, which adopted the global programme of action for the protection of the marine environment from land-based activities. This programme of action reflects the approach being adopted throughout the United Kingdom, and by the other states in north-west Europe, to this task. Implementation in England will therefore be achieved by continuing our present policies.

Environmental Marketing

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to impose stricter controls in respect of marketing claims that products are environmentally friendly. [22264]

Mr. Clappison: The Government are at present considering a report on the existing controls, including an assessment of possible changes, which was commissioned from the National Consumer Council and published by the council earlier this month. My Department has at the same time produced a document outlining the Government's intended strategy across the whole area of information for consumers about the environmental properties of products. This strategy paper addresses the question of controls over marketing claims made by manufacturers and has been circulated to interested organisations for comment. I am placing copies of the paper in the Libraries of the House.

The Government believe that it would be in the interests both of consumers and of manufacturers for there to be clear ground rules about the terms in which environmental claims on products are expressed. We therefore plan to encourage the formulation of a code of practice for the making of such claims. The Government's preference is to make progress in this area by stimulating the market to work better, rather than by adding to regulation. We will nevertheless consider the case put forward by the National Consumer Council for forms of statutory backing to support a code of practice.

Unitary Authorities (Council Tax)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average change in the council tax between 1995–96 and 1996–97 for council tax payers in each of the unitary authorities which come into existence this year. [22214]

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Waterson) on 20 March 1996, Official Report, column 213.

Right to Buy

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have exercised the right to buy their council house since May 1979; what number of (a) council and (b) housing association properties remain; and if he will make a statement. [21170]

Mr. Clappison: In the period between the introduction of the legislation in October 1980 and the end of September 1995, the latest date for which information is available, local authorities in England reported total right-to-buy sales of 1.235 million homes. In the same period, housing associations and new towns reported right-to-buy sales of 28,000 and 10,000 respectively.

The stock of local authority dwellings in England at 1 April 1995 was 3.565 million. The corresponding figure for housing associations is 856,000.

Homelessness

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless households were accepted by local authorities in 1995; and what were the figures for 1979. [21286]

Mr. Curry: In 1995, local authorities in England accepted responsibility to secure accommodation for 120,810 households under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985. The corresponding figure for 1979, adjusted to exclude intentionally homeless households which were no longer included after the first quarter of 1991, was 55,530. These figures are not strictly comparable because of changes made to reporting arrangements in 1980, for non-metropolitan districts, and 1982, for London boroughs and metropolitan districts.

Lambeth

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the domestic rates, community charge and council tax arrears owed to the London borough of Lambeth. [22129]

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on Wednesday 20 March 1996, Official Report, column 214.

Countryside Commission

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when each member of the Countryside

Commission was appointed; what were the number of meetings held since that appointment and the number of meetings attended; and when each term of office is to be completed. [22126]

Mr. Clappison: Dates of first appointment, the end of the current term of appointment, and the number of commission meetings held and attended are listed below for each member of the Countryside Commission.

Member	Date appointed	Term ends	Number of meetings held	Meetings attended
Richard Simmonds (Chairman from 1 October 1995)	1 August 1995	30 September 1998	4	4

Right Rev. Alan Chesters	1 October 1995	30 September 1998	4	3
David Barker MBE	1 October 1995	30 September 1998	4	4

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the fees and expenses paid to each member of the Countryside Commission since they were appointed. [22127]

Mr. Clappison: As chairman of the Countryside Commission, Richard Simmonds' remuneration is £37,990 for a three-day week. The other commissioners each receive remuneration of £5,455 based on a time input of two days per month. Total payments to 31 March 1996 are shown in the table.

Commissioners' expenses are paid in line with standard civil service terms and conditions. Total expenses claimed by each commissioner from 1 April 1993 to 19 March 1996 are also shown below. Earlier figures are not readily available.

Brown-field Sites

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to promote the development of brown-field and contaminated sites in preference to green-field sites. [20958]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Through our planning and environmental policies, we are encouraging the use of recycled urban sites and are increasing market confidence in them. For example, the housing White Paper proposes that 50 per cent. of all new housing should be built on such sites, assisting regeneration as well as protecting the countryside.

Council Tax (London)

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 London boroughs with the lowest record on collecting council tax, the cash and percentage owed and the political control of each authority. [22128]

Sir Paul Beresford: The information requested is as follows:

	1994–95 council taxes received as a percentage of annual net collectable debit April 1994–March 1995	Uncollected 1994–95 council taxes during the period April 1994 –March 1994[1] £000	Political control as at February 1996
Lambeth	56.4	21,846	Noc
Newham	72.8	7,254	Lab
Hackney	75.5	5,389	Lab
Southwark	79.9	5,924	Lab
Lewisham	81.2	6,439	Lab
Islington	81.2	4,958	Lab

Camden	82.0	7,627	Lab
Tower Hamlets	84.6	2,531	Lab
Hammersmith and Fulham	85.7	4,083	Lab

[1] Based on information supplied to the Department in May 1995. NB. £23 million of council tax arrears in respect of the years 1993–94 and 1994–95 has been collected in the period April 1995 to December 1995 by these 10 authorities. This figure cannot be broken down between the two years.

Compulsory Competitive Tendering

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the annual report for 1995 on compulsory competitive tendering in local authorities in England. [22716]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department has published today the compulsory competitive tendering annual report for 1995. The report charts the progress made during 1995 in establishing the new framework for competition for local authority white collar professional services. It also takes a wider look at what local authorities have achieved through voluntary competition and partnership with the private sector, and at what research tells us about the impact of competition and on costs and service standards.

Last year saw local authorities in London boroughs and metropolitan authorities preparing to let contracts for construction and property related services and legal services. Last year also saw information technology, finance and personnel services, as well as the cleaning of police buildings, being added to the list of defined activities subject to CCT and many authorities will be preparing to let contracts for these activities during the coming year.

During 1995, my Department investigated 66 cases of alleged anti-competitive behaviour. Frequently, a satisfactory resolution of complaints was achieved without statutory action, but in seven cases directions were given to authorities. Most of the directions required authorities to re-tender work early and to seek the Secretary of State's consent if they wished to reassign work to the direct services organisation, DSO. My right hon. Friend also gave 49 directions to authorities where activities had failed to meet the specified financial objective; some of these prevented the local authority from carrying out the work in-house.

Copies of the report will be sent to all local authorities in England, and to the main trade associations and others involved with CCT. Copies have also been placed in the House Library.

Water Byelaws

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will issue guidelines relating to the revision of water byelaws. [23008]

Mr. Clappison: My Department issued a consultation paper on the format, scope, enforcement and administration of measures to replace the water byelaws in January 1995. We will establish shortly a water regulations advisory committee to consider proposals for inclusion within regulations under section 74 of the Water Industry Act 1991.

Sewerage and Water Services

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the optimum size for the most efficient delivery of (a) sewerage services and (b) water services. [23010]

Mr. Clappison: The optimum size for the most efficient delivery of water and sewerage services will be determined by market forces, subject to satisfying the requirements of the competition and regulatory authorities.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the total population covered by each of the water and sewerage companies in order of size, in respect of (a) water supply and (b) sewerage service. [23009]

Mr. Clappison: Information on the resident connected population for water supply and for sewerage services for each of the water and sewerage companies is given in table 1.7 in "Waterfacts 1995" published by the Water Services Association. A copy of this report is available in the Library.

Mrs. Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what criteria he will judge whether the long-term public interest is served by mergers of the large water and sewerage undertakings. [23011]

Mr. Clappison: Mergers involving two or more water enterprises, each with assets of over £30 million, are referred automatically by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. If the MMC concludes that a merger would be against the public interest, it is for the president to decide what action, if any, should be taken to remedy or prevent any adverse effects arising from the merger.

Drinking Water

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the treatment necessary to make safe drinking water contaminated by run-off from land fertilised with abattoir waste. [22979]

Mr. Clappison: The location of abattoir waste disposal sites is included in the National Rivers Authority's catchment control plans and run-off from farmland is carefully monitored to prevent pollution of watercourses.

Drinking water treatment processes offer multiple barrier protection against harmful organisms that might be present in abattoir and other polluting organic wastes.

As a primary barrier the water abstracted for treatment is monitored, often on a continuous basis, so that abstraction can be suspended in the event of pollution.

The secondary barriers are the clarification and filtration stages which remove suspended matter and greatly reduce the concentrations of harmful organisms.

As a tertiary barrier, disinfection of the treated drinking water, using chlorine or ozone, ensures that harmful organisms are either absent or present in such low concentrations that they do not present an identifiable risk to the health of consumers.

London Pensions Fund Authority

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the management statement agreed between his Department and the London pensions fund authority. [23321]

Sir Paul Beresford: The statement agreed between my Department and the authority sets out in detail the responsibilities of the parties towards each other. The statement is due to come into operation on 1 April 1996. I have placed a copy in the Library.

Water Bills

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the average water bill (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) for customers of Severn Trent Water for each of the last six years in (i) real terms and (ii) as a percentage change on the previous year. [21280]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 21 March 1996]: This information is not kept on a United Kingdom basis. The information for England and Wales and for Severn Trent Water is as follows:

Average unmeasured household water and sewerage bills

1995–96 prices

	England and Wales		Severn Trent
Year	Average water and sewerage charges (£)	Annual real percentage change	Average water and sewerage charges (£)	Annual real percentage change

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Libel Claims (Legal Aid)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is his estimate of the cost of extending legal aid to libel claims; and if he will make a statement. [22692]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: No estimate of the cost of extending the scope of legal aid to libel claims has been made; nor is it the Government's intention at the present time to extend the scope of legal aid to libel cases. However, following consultation, the Lord Chancellor introduced on 8 February 1996 the Defamation Bill which is designed to bring the law of defamation up to date and to improve and simplify the procedures for litigants.

Judges (Retirement)

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Deaprtment on how many occasions the Lord Chancellor has used his powers under section 26 of the Judicial Pensions and Retirement Act 1993 to extend a judge's period in office beyond his or her statutory retirement age; and if he will list the names of those judges whose period in office has been extended. [23042]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Lord Chancellor has exercised his powers under this section twice, in relation to his honour Judge Paul Baker QC and his honour Judge Robin David QC. The Lord Chancellor has exercised his power to extend the judges' service in the public interest to meet specific requirements for their assistance in the disposal of court business.

TRANSPORT

Aircraft Safety Standards

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 8 March 1996, Official Report, column 397, if he will list the countries whose aircraft are listed by the Federal Aviation Administration as being unsafe to fly into the United States of America. [21377]

Mr. Norris: The Federal Aviation Administration is carrying out an international aviation safety assessment programme of foreign countries' aviation safety regulatory procedures, as a result of which they have listed countries in various categories according to the FAA's judgment of how fully the requirements of the International Civil Aviation Organisation are being met. The assessments do not relate to individual aircraft or airlines.

Details of this programme, the precise meaning and effect of the categories used and the latest country listings should be sought from the FAA office at the United States of America embassy in London.

Airport Development

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment the Civil Aviation Authority has made of the current terminal capacity for each of the major United Kingdom airports. [21289]

Mr. Norris: The CAA does not itself carry out assessments of terminal capacity. However, when producing assessments of overall airport capacity, it requests and takes into account data on terminal capacity provided by airport operators. The most recent CAA work in this area—an assessment of capacity for some London airports—was presented to the Heathrow terminal 5 public inquiry in November 1995 in supplementary proof of evidence.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 6 March 1996, Official Report, column 212, what sites the Civil Aviation Authority has identified in the south-east of England and for airport development. [21363]

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority, in its advice to the Government in July 1990—in civil aviation publication No. 570—identified seven airport sites in the south-east of England which appeared, on initial examination of airspace and air traffic considerations, to be able to handle additional traffic, but it concluded that further detailed assessments would be needed to confirm these findings. The sites identified by the CAA were as follows:

Heathrow

Gatwick

Stansted

Luton

Southampton

Manston

Lydd.

Airport Development

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information the Civil Aviation Authority collates in respect of the current terminal capacity for each of the major United Kingdom airports. [21875]

Mr. Norris: The CAA does not collate information in respect of the terminal capacity for each of the major Untied Kingdom airports. However, it may request such information when carrying out specific studies.

RAF Northolt

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 6 March 1996, Official Report, column 211, if he will make a statement on the assessment he has made on possible improvements to RAF Northolt. [21365]

Mr. Norris: I hope to make an announcement shortly.

Maintenance Mechanics

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the training and qualification requirements for mechanics undertaking maintenance work (a) on railway rolling stock and (b) aircraft. [21773]

Mr. Watts: The Railway (Safety Critical Work) Regulations 1994 underpin general health and safety duties and require employers to ensure that employees are fit and competent to carry out maintenance work. The detailed training and qualification requirements necessary for undertaking maintenance work on railway rolling stock are a matter for the railway operator to decide.

Details of the training, qualifications and licensing requirements for aircraft maintenance engineers are given in civil aviation publication No. 468, "British Civil Airworthiness Requirements, Section L—Aircraft Engineers". I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Railtrack (Assets)

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 13 March, Official Report, column 609, if the figure of £3,250 million was the total estimated by W. S. Atkins as required for maintenance of Railtrack's assets over 10 years. [22463]

Mr. Watts: As I said in my answer of 13 March, Official Report, columns 609–10, the figure of £3,250 million is W. S. Atkins' central estimate of Railtrack's required expenditure under its asset maintenance plan for maintenance and renewals work on its track and route structures only in the 10 years from 1 April 1994. This estimate does not include day to day maintenance carried out under contract by the infrastructure maintenance companies on these assets or maintenance work on any other category of Railtrack asset.

Overcrowded Trains

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the safety implications of overcrowded trains. [22444]

Mr. Watts: Following the Clapham and Cannon Street accident inquiries, the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate commissioned a study into the effects of rapid train deceleration on both standing and seated passengers. It concluded that there was no need to prohibit passengers from standing in trains, but recommended that vehicle interiors should be designed to minimise the likelihood of injury from flying luggage, hard surfaces and sharp corners.

All rolling stock is designed to run safely when fully loaded.

London Underground Northern Line

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which Northern line stations are being or will be improved or rebuilt as part of the modernisation of the Northern line. [22431]

Mr. Norris: London Underground Ltd. has plans to modernise or refurbish all the stations on the Northern line; most of this work would be undertaken as part of the Northern line modernisation project.

High-Speed Train (Fire)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what factors underlay the decision of the Health and Safety Executive not to publish a detailed account of the accident on a high-speed train at Maidenhead on 8 September 1995; [22146]

(2) if he will order a full report into the fire on a high-speed train at Maidenhead on 8 September 1995. [22145]

Mr. Watts: The Health and Safety Executive acknowledged the seriousness of the accident and the level of public interest by announcing on 11 September 1995 that it would make public the findings of its investigation into the fire on a high-speed train at Maidenhead on 8 September 1995. The findings, with recommendations, were published by the HSE on 16 January 1996.

A fully detailed report supporting those findings and recommendations was not prepared for publication because in the HSE's view it would have delayed publication of the findings and recommendations, it was not considered necessary, given the public nature of the associated inquest, and it would have diverted the inspectors concerned from work more directly related to accident prevention.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodes and other organisations for which he is accountable to parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22509]

Mr. Norris: The only such payment was by the Driving Standards Agency, which made an ex gratia payment of £11,000 to a former member of staff earlier this year.

Rail Privatisation

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of Railtrack he now proposes to sell in the forthcoming flotation. [22539]

Mr. Watts: No decision on the precise figure has been taken. We expect to offer at least 51 per cent. of the equity of Railtrack.

Office of Passenger Rail Franchising

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the leasing costs (a) paid and (b) expected to be paid for properties occupied by Opraf. [22657]

Mr. Watts: In 1995–96 Opraf has paid £447,000 to Property Holdings to cover the lease costs of property it occupied. In 1996–97 Opraf has budgeted £530,000 to cover leasing costs.

Heavy Goods Vehicle Licences

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the main medical conditions which lead to the loss of a heavy goods vehicle driving licence. [22753]

Mr. Norris: The main types of medical condition which must or may lead to refusal or revocation of a group 2 driving licence are:

neurological disorders, including epilepsy

neurosurgical disorders

cardiovascular disorders

diabetes mellitus

psychiatric disorders or severe mental handicap

alcohol misuse or dependency illicit drug misuse or dependency visual disorders.

Other miscellaneous conditions may also in certain cases lead to refusal or revocation of a licence.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many drivers of heavy goods vehicles have lost their licences, for each of the last five years, for reportable medical conditions. [22754]

Mr. Norris: The information requested is shown in the table.

	Applications refused[1]	Entitlement revoked
1991[2]	824	360
1992	1,856	2,164
1993	1,062	1,400
1994	946	1,363

[1] The figures do not differentiate between refusal to grant heavy goods entitlement on a first application and refusal to renew existing entitlements.

[2] Figures available for five months only.

Transport Research Laboratory

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to complete the sale of the Transport Research Laboratory; and what is the expected price. [22770]

Mr. Norris: I expect to announce completion of the sale and the price paid shortly.

Rail Network Computer System

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the objectives and purpose of the A-Plan computer system to co-ordinate access to the rail network by passenger train operating companies and rail freight companies purchased by Railtrack; which companies provided this system; what it cost; and when it will come into operation. [22993]

Mr. Watts: The development of this system is entirely a matter for Railtrack.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has spent in total in answering parliamentary questions in each parliamentary Session since 1989–90. [22892]

Mr. Norris: This Department does not calculate the data requested, which could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the actual or planned annual expenditure in 1995 prices on (a) road maintenance and repair, (b) new roads and (c) other roads expenditure, for each year from 1979–80 to 1998–99. [22772]

Mr. Watts: The following table gives the expenditure on trunk roads in England from 1979–80 to 1994–95, provision for 1995–96 and plans for 1996–97 to 1998–99. The columns represent new construction, maintenance, both capital and current, and other expenditure, including research and development from 1989–90 and design, build, finance and operate shadow tolls from 1996–97. All figures are at 1993–94 prices; figures at the later price base requested are not yet available.

Buses (Fuel Duty Rebate)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what would be the cost of restoring the full value of the fuel duty rebate for United Kingdom buses. [22774]

Mr. Norris: Approximately £80 million per year on the basis of current mileage claimed.

Rail Network (Investment)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the actual, or planned, annual investment, in 1995 prices, in the United Kingdom rail network in each year from 1979–80 to 1998–99. [22773]

Mr. Watts: The table shows annual investment in the rail network between 1980 and 1994–95.

£ million

	1994–95 prices

1991–92	1,454
1992–93	1,633
1993–94	1,276
1994–95	1,022

[1] 1984-85 was a 15-month year. The figure given is the 12 month equivalent.

Investment in 1995–96 is expected to be around £1 billion. Investment in 1996–97 and later years is expected to increase, following the privatisation of Railtrack and other businesses.

Cones Hotline

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost throughout its existence of the cones hotline; and how many calls to it led to action being taken. [22809]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 25 March 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 10 July 1995 at column 403. This gives information about follow-up action after calls to the cones hotline, and about costs in the financial year 1994–95. The cost of establishing and running the cones hotline prior to March 1994 is not available as, until then, calls were routed through the Department of Transport's general inquiry number. The cost of running the cones hotline from April 1995 until September 1995 inclusive, when it was replaced by the Highways Agency information line, is estimated at £20,000, including staff and call charges.

Organophosphate Dips

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the transportation of organophosphate dips. [22367]

Mr. Norris: The transport of organophosphorus dips by road and rail in Great Britain is controlled, like other goods classified as dangerous for transport, through a number of regulations made under the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974. These regulations place a wide range of duties for health and safety mainly on those consigning dangerous goods for transport or on the operators of the transport being used. There are also duties placed on drivers of road vehicles carrying dangerous goods.

Similar provisions apply to transport by sea and air.

Inquests

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road death inquests involving accidental verdicts are followed by criminal prosecution of the responsible drivers in each of the last 10 years. [22212]

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available.

Amey Construction Ltd.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will list projects in which Amey Construction Ltd. was employed by his Department as contractors, by subject and by value, in the financial years 1994–95 and 1995–96. [22029]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 25 March 1996]: The information requested is listed. The contracts are divided into two groups; those contracts which started before 1 April 1994, but which reached completion within the time period specified; and those contracts which were awarded to the company in its own right, or in joint venture with another firm during the two financial years in question.

Marine Environment

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to designate areas of risk to the marine environment; and what protection these areas will receive. [20908]

Mr. Norris: The Government are considering recommendation 59 of Lord Donaldson's report, "Safer Ships, Cleaner Seas", that marine environmental high risk areas should be established. We are supporting the work of the EC in establishing criteria for environmentally sensitive areas; any such designations need to be agreed internationally if they are to be effective. In addition, we are conducting surveys of maritime traffic to monitor the effectiveness of current routing arrangements. Surveys to date indicate that those arrangements are working; we will be consulting on the results.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the recommendations of the Donaldson report together with the date that the recommendations were implemented. [21877]

Mr. Norris: Lord Donaldson's report, "Safer Ships, Cleaner Seas", CM 2560, contains 103 recommendations, which are listed in chapter 23. The position on each recommendation is summarised in my reply to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) on 14 March 1996, Official Report, column 722. Where recommendations have been implemented in full, this was often phased over several months, so a precise implementation date cannot be given.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the estimated completion date of the M11 link road (a) from Redbridge roundabout to Hackney and (b) through Wanstead to the Green Man; [22466]

(2) if he will recalculate the cost benefit analysis used to justify the M11 link road, taking into account the costs of constructing sections of the road but not achieving the expected benefits for several years due to the whole scheme being uncompleted; [22476]

(3) what estimate he has made of the cost to Tesco of delaying the opening of the superstore on the site of Leytonstone house due to the decision to put back the completion of the whole of the M11 link road; what assessment he has made of the risk of reduced planning benefit to the London borough of Waltham Forest from its agreement with Tesco; and if he proposes to compensate them both; [22477]

(4) if he will compensate those residents living within the vicinity of the M11 link road in Leyton and Leytonstone who wish to sell their property within the period of the delay in the completion of the road and who are unable to realise the full value of their home due to the extended period of blight on the area; and if he will make a statement; [22471]

(5) what security measures to avoid vandalism and theft, and at what estimated cost, will be in place when the section of the M11 link road through Leyton and Leytonstone is completed and vacated by the construction contractor until the road is in operation; what arrangements will be made, and by whom, to (a) clear rubbish dumped on this section of road, (b) stop young children gaining access to it, (c) stop car or drag races occurring on it and (d) stop access to this section of road by would-be squatters and anti-road protesters; and if he will make a statement; [22470]

(6) what assessment (a) he and (b) the Highways Agency have made of the effects, with special reference to catering for the volume of through traffic, of the severing important traffic routes and their proposed replacement in Leyton and Leytonstone prior to the completion of the link road; and what measures are planned to ameliorate the negative effects; [22468]

(7) what is the financial saving to Her Majesty's Government of delaying completion of the two phases of the M11 link road; [22479]

(8) if he will keep Leyton way open for through traffic until the M11 link road is completed; [22472]

(9) what cost benefit analysis he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated of leaving 2.4 km of newly constructed three-lane dual carriageway road through Leyton and Leytonstone vacant for a period of two years; [22469]

(10) what is the estimated completion date for contract 2 (Temple Mills to the Green Man) of the M11 link road; [22465]

(11) if he will provide compensation in the form of additional resources for recreational park and green space in Leyton and Leytonstone in recompense for the adverse environmental effect upon the area of delaying the completion of the M11 link road; and if he will make a statement; [22473]

(12) what is the estimated completion date of the Green Man replacement phase of the M11 link road; [22467]

(13) what is his assessment of the effect upon (a) the work at Leyton Yard, (b) the plans for Leyton relief road and (c) the single regeneration budget activity in this area of the delay in completing the relevant phase of the M11 link road. [22478]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 26 March 1996:

As you know I have been asked by the Secretary of State for Transport to reply to your Parliamentary Questions about the A12 Hackney to M11 Link Road; I have taken them in the order they were asked.

The programme announced in November 1995 envisaged completion of the A12 Hackney to M11 Link Road in 1999. We hope to open the section from Redbridge, through Wanstead to just east of the Green Man roundabout early in 1998.

We will not be undertaking a further cost benefit analysis. Cost benefit analyses are carried out as part of the decision making process for road schemes. We do not carry out further analysis once the scheme is under construction.

We have not made any estimate of the cost to Tesco of delaying the opening of their store nor of the risk of reduced planning benefit to the London Borough of Waltham Forest. All our programmes are subject to change and to the availability of funding, this is a known risk which developers and local authorities must take into account in their planning.

Part 1 of the Land Compensation Act 1973 provides a right for people to claim compensation if they consider their property has suffered depreciation in value due to specified physical factors—including noise, smell, fumes, smoke and artificial lighting arising as a direct result of the use of a new or altered road.

Claims may normally be made one year after the road first opens to public traffic and public notices are placed in the local press at the appropriate time. But if any of your constituents need to sell before then, there is scope for claims to be made earlier.

The question of security and measures to prevent vandalism is still under consideration and we will be having discussions with the police, local authorities and others in the run up to the completion of this section. I shall let you know the outcome nearer the time.

The construction of new roads inevitably has a disruptive effect on the local road network, particularly so in urban areas. We are discussing with the London Borough of Waltham Forest what can be done for road users in Leyton and Leytonstone.

There are no savings over the life of the scheme. All we are doing is managing the roads programme within the budget available.

We are in discussion with the London Borough of Waltham Forest about traffic management measures for road users in Leyton and Leytonstone. However, any measures identified would require the co-operation of the local authority in making the orders for the local roads.

We have not undertaken any further cost benefit analysis for the reasons I mentioned earlier.

The estimated completion date for Contract 2 is Summer 1997, assuming that we can resolve with the London Borough of Waltham Forest the acquisition of the necessary land.

We do not plan to provide compensation in the form of additional resources for recreational park and green space in recompense for the delay in completing the Link Road.

Replacement of the Green Man roundabout will determine the completion of the whole of the Link Road; it is currently estimated to be in the Autumn of 1999.

The delay to the overall scheme will have knock-on effects for some regeneration projects in the area. The Stratford Development Partnership have already made representations to officials about this and we will be responding to them shortly. Officials from the Government Office for London will be happy to discuss with the Partnership and others what effect these delays will have on their programme.

Railway Station Staff

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total number of staff employed at rail stations in London in (a) 1994 and (b) 1995; and what is the estimated number for 1996. [22403]

Mr. Norris: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Coastguard (Display Screen Equipment)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 12 February 1996 Official Report, column 417, if he will list separately for each Coastguard office the date when the last risk assessment was undertaken of the Display Screen Equipment Regulations and the Workplace Regulations. [21821]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Coastguard Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 26 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about risk assessments of display screen equipment in the Coastguard Agency.

The dates of the last completed risk assessment in each office is as follows:

Traffic and Economic Growth

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the relationship of economic growth and traffic growth and its impact on the environment; and what assessment he has made of future trends. [22361]

Mr. Norris: I refer to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member on 18 March 1996, Official Report, column 44. Forecasts of a number of environmental impacts are already prepared—for example, of vehicle emissions—which take into account the impacts from traffic growth.

Child Car Seats

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many fatalities or injuries have occurred in each of the last five years as a result of the improper fitting of a child car seat; [22755]

(2) how many fatalities or injuries have occurred in each of the last five years as a result of a front passenger seat airbag hitting a child car seat. [22752]

Mr. Norris: The information requested is not available.

Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded by his Department and its executive agencies on the basis of single negotiated contracts in each of the last three years; if he will list the companies involved and the value of the contract in each case; what percentage this represented of contracts awarded by his Department and its agencies after competitive tendering; and, in each case, why the contracts were awarded on the basis of a single negotiated tender. [22865]

Mr. Norris: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines are currently in force in his Department and its executive agencies relating to competitive tendering and the use of single negotiated tenders; on what grounds single negotiated tenders can be used; and what procedures are in place within his Department to ensure that the use of single negotiated tenders in competitive tendering processes is justified in all cases. [22849]

Mr. Norris: General guidance on procurement is contained in the Department of Transport's procurement manual. Goods, works and services are acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. Single tender action may be justified where the proposed supplier was successful in a competitive exercise within the previous 12 months by tendering the best price and is prepared to offer the same or lower prices; it is known that goods or services can be provided only by one supplier; repairs to specialist equipment is required which can be carried out only by the original supplier; specialist spares are required which may be obtained only from the original supplier; essential compatibility with existing equipment or previous service is required. Single tender cases which exceed the relevant EC threshold are dealt with under the negotiated procedure. All procurement takes place within a framework of contractual delegations. Delegation holders are responsible for the proper exercise of delegations within their areas of responsibility and ensuring that delegation limits are not breached. Delegations are set lower for single tender cases than for competition.

M25 Widening Scheme (Exhibition)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) at what hours it is proposed that the exhibition relating to the widening of the M25 between junctions 12 and 15 to be held at Egham sports centre will be open to the public; and if he will extend the duration of the exhibition to three days; [23035]

(2) what advance publicity it is proposed to give to the exhibition relating to the services for widening the M25 between junctions 12 and 15 due to be held at Egham sports centre on 9 May; [23034]

(3) if he will make a further statement on the proposed widening of the M25 between junctions 12 and 15 in advance of the exhibition on 9 May to be held at Egham sports centre. [23036]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Andrew Mackinlay dated 26 March 1996:

As you know John Watts, the Minister for Railways and Roads, has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the proposed widening of the M25 between Junctions 12 and 15 and the proposed public exhibitions.

We hope to publish an Environmental Statement on this scheme shortly. We shall provide details of the dates of the public exhibitions at that time, but expect them to be held over a number of days at a number of local venues.

We would expect to provide full advance publicity about the exhibitions, which would include a press notice, a public notice and advertisements in local papers, and leaflets explaining the proposals will be distributed to local residents. We will also be writing to all those who commented on the previous Link Road proposals.

Ministers will make an announcement when the proposals are published.

Railway Industries

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has set revised figures for external finance limits and contributions for the railway industries; and what estimates he has made of proceeds form the sales of businesses and the external finance contributions lost when those businesses were sold. [23238]

Mr. Watts: The revised figures for 1995–96 are as follows:

	£ million
Grants	1,805
BR EFC	–730
Railtrack EFC	–114
BR/Railtrack EFL	961
Privatisation effects	–980
Total national rail	–19
EPS + Union Railways	317
Total rail	298

1. EFC means external financing contribution. EFL means external financing limit.
2. Grants include support to passenger rail services paid by the Franchising Director and metropolitan railway grant, including approximately £70 million of grant paid by the Scottish Office in support of passenger transport executive services in Scotland.
3. Privatisation effects is an estimate of the proceeds from sales of rail businesses less their EFCs. Proceeds are forecast to be some £1,280 million, of which some £740 million is attributable to sale of the rolling stock lease companies, some £133 million to the sale of British Rail Telecommunications Ltd and some £30 million to the sale of British Rail Maintenance Ltd. Proceeds may be subject to adjustments when completion accounts are agreed. Lost EFCs in 1995–96 are forecast to be approximately, £300 million. Total of proceeds from the sale of the rolling stock lease companies will comprise approximately a further £1 billion in 1996–97 and a deferred consideration of up to £80 million.
4. The EPS and Union Railways EFL was increased in year by calls on the Reserve of £197 million. The EFL set at the beginning of the current financial year covered only the period 1 April 1995 to 30 September 1995.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Underpayments

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the £182.7 million underpaid to claimants by the Benefits Agency in 1994–95 was subsequently paid. [22577]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. George Mudie, dated 25 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how much of the £182.7 million underpaid to claimants by the Benefits Agency in 1994–95 was subsequently paid.

The information requested is not available as statistics on the amount of benefit paid retrospectively are not maintained. The National Audit Office's report of 1994–95 reported that £182.7 million of Income Support (IS) was underpaid. This includes non-cash underpayments concerning the apportionment of IS and other benefits.

When an underpayment of benefit is identified in a particular case, payment of arrears will normally be made.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits Agency

Mr Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of Benefits Agency employees earning between (i) £30,000 and £40,000 and (ii) 40,000 and £50,000 in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95. [22678]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. George Mudie, dated 25 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will list the number of Benefits Agency employees earning between (i) £30,000 and £40,000 and (ii) £40,000 and £50,000 in (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95.

£30,000—£40,000	315	294
£40,000—£50,000	149	134

Figures are provisional and subject to change.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Income Support

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the number of staff and cost of the quality support team in 1994–95; [22679]

(2) if he will list the financial savings made as a result of the work of the quality support team in 1994–95; [22681]

(3) if he will list the target figures and the achievement figures set for the Benefits Agency in respect of accuracy of income support for (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95; [22576]

(4) if he will list the gross total errors in income support for 1994–95 (a) recorded by and (b) notified to his Department indicating the amount attributed to mortgage interest payments. [22578]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. George Mudie, dated 25 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking: if he will list the numbers of staff and cost of the Quality Support Team (QST) in 1994–95; if he will list the financial savings made as a result of the work of the QST in 1994–95; if he will list the target figures and the achievement figures set for the Benefits Agency (BA) in respect of accuracy of Income Support (IS) for (a) 1993–94 and (b) 1994–95; and if he will list the gross total of errors in IS for 1994–95 (a) recorded by and (b) notified to his Department indicating the amount attributed to mortgage interest payments.

In 1994–95 there were 46 members of staff in the QST. The total running cost, which includes staff salary costs and goods and services, was £1,419,602. Although the QST do not generate financial savings they do provide the BA with an objective and reliable internal measurement of performance on an ongoing basis, they estimate the likely cost to the public account of all errors and they identify key areas of weakness and offer potential solutions. The QST also inform the BA's improvement programme investment appraisal and strategic process and they monitor the impact of newly introduced national and local initiatives.

The Secretary of State target for accuracy of IS payments in 1993–94 and 1994–95 was 92 per cent. The BA achieved an accuracy rate of 90.7 per cent. in 1993–94 and 86.3 per cent. in 1994–95.

The information is not available in the format requested because it is not possible to identify mortgage interest payments separately from other housing costs. The gross monetary value of the errors for 1994–95 recorded by the BA was £514 m, which includes both under and overpayments. £112M was attributable to housing costs which includes mortgage interest.

The National Audit Office notified an error rate of 16.1 per cent. for 1994–95. The gross monetary value was £848.2 m. Of this £108.6 m was attributable to housing costs which includes mortgage interest.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the annual cost of restoring the full rate of income support to those people in the 18 to 25 years age group. [22784]

Mr. Evans: The estimated annual cost in 1996–97 of raising the income support rate for 18 to 24-year-olds to that payable for people aged 25 and above is £360 million.

1. Estimates are based upon the 1994 Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry and the 1991, 1992, and 1993 Family Expenditure Surveys uprated to 1996–97 levels.

2. The estimated figure includes the cost of linked increases in Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit thresholds and has been rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the £546.1 million estimated to have been paid in error by the Benefits Agency in 1994–95 was recovered. [22575]

Mr. Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. George Mudie, dated 25 March 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking how much of the £546.1 million estimated to have been paid in error by the Benefits Agency (BA) in 1994–95 was recovered.

This information is not available because the figure quoted is based on a small sample of cases checked by the National Audit Office which estimated that £546.1 million of benefit was overpaid during 1994–95.

However the BA will seek recovery in any individual cases where a recoverable overpayment is identified.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Year	Expenditure (£000's)
1990–91	8,600
1991–92	23,000
1992–93	15,000
1993–94	12,400
1994–95	77
1995–96[1]	63,000

[1] Up to and including 19 March 1996.

Social Fund

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of expenditure on the social fund for each of (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98. [22783]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Social Fund Estimated Expenditure at time provision was voted

£ million

Expenditure met from	1995–96 estimated out-turn	1996–97 plans	[3]1997–98 plans
Regulated Social Fund[2]	[1]86	83	100
Discretionary Social Fund	140	143	150
Total	226	226	250

[1] Care is needed in the interpretation of expenditure on the regulated fund as cold weather payments are demand led. The 1995–96 outturn for cold weather payments, including a spring supplementary estimate of £24 million, is now expected to be about £55 million higher than the original estimate of £8 million included in the figure given.

[2] Projections in the regulated fund include a reduction in funeral payment expenditure as a result of reforms introduced during 1995–96.

[3] 1997–98 figures are rounded to the nearest £50 million.

Pensions Uprating

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the annual cost of giving non-resident pensioners the same pensions uprating as for resident pensioners. [22778]

Mr. Heald: The estimated cost of paying fully indexed benefits to all state retirement and widow pensioners living abroad whose benefits are not uprated is £235 million a year—latest available figure based on April 1994 rates of benefit. The estimated cost of paying just the April 1994 uprating to these pensioners is estimated to be £16 million.

Child Benefit

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the annual cost of raising the level of child benefit by £5 per week for each first child only. [22782]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: It is estimated that the net cost would be £1.35 billion in 1996–97 prices, after taking account of the effect on income-related benefit expenditure.

Christmas Bonus

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of replacing the Christmas pensioners bonus with a double payment of state pension in the first week of December. [22780]

Mr. Heald: The £10 Christmas bonus is paid to all those who are entitled to receive a qualifying benefit in the first week in December. To replace the bonus with an extra week's entitlement of basic state pension for the recipients of retirement pension alone would cost [1]£440 million at December 1996.

[1] 1996–97 prices rounded to nearest £10 million.

Indian Sub-continent

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will break down by categories and amounts, the money form the social security budget sent to the Indian subcontinent over the last year for which figures are available. [22838]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table:

	£ Amount
Retirement pension	15,634,083
Widow's benefit	2,079,196
War pension	9,067
Total	17,722,346

1. The information relates to 1995.
2. Figures are provisional and subject to change.
3. Figures have been rounded to nearest £.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recommendation he has received from the Social Security Advisory Committee about the proposal to remove the disability living allowance mobility component from long-term hospital patients; and if he will place a copy of the Social Security Advisory Committee's comments in the Library. [22581]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The Social Security Advisory Committee has recently submitted its report, which we are studying carefully. A command paper containing the committee's recommendations and the Government's response will be laid before Parliament with the draft regulations in due course.

National Insurance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the annual cost of raising the starting rate for the payment of employee national insurance contributions to the same level as the personal income tax allowance; and how many people would cease to pay employee national insurance contributions as a consequence. [22718]

Mr. Heald: The estimated loss in revenue from employee national insurance contributions would be some £650 million in a full year. On average, about 0.7 million employees in any week would no longer be liable to pay contributions.

Source:

Government Actuary's Department.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the additional annual revenue which would accrue to the Exchequer from extending employer national insurance contributions to all benefits in kind. [22719]

Mr. Heald: The estimate is £250 million based on 1995–96 figures.

Note:

The information available relates only to extending employer national insurance contributions to taxable benefits in kind.

State Pensions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of abolishing the contributory principle for state pensions. [22777]

Mr. Heald: The additional cost in 1996–97 of paying the basic state retirement pension at the full rate of £61.15 to all individuals over state pension age in Great Britain is estimated at £4 billion.

Notes:

1. A gross cost of £5.5 billion is estimated by calculating the total cost of a Pension of £61.15 per week for everybody over state pension age in the GB population and deducting the estimated cost of the contributory benefits currently payable to those people. The net cost of £4 billion takes account of the effects on income-related benefits.

2. The estimated cost assumes that additions to basic retirement pension (adult dependency increases, increments, graduated pensions, age addition and invalidity addition) will continue to be paid and that overseas pensioners continue to get all benefits under the current rules.

3. It is not possible to estimate the costs of making the state earnings-related pension scheme (SERPS) non-contributory as it is an earnings-related scheme.

4. All costs are in 1996–97 prices, rounded to the nearest £0.1 billion and are based on the September 1995 public expenditure settlement.

Unemployment (21-hour Rule)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the annual cost of abolishing the 21-hour rule for unemployed people studying or being trained for more than 21 hours per week. [22781]

Mr. Roger Evans: The 21-hour rule is a concession to help unemployed people who have left full-time education but who wish to take up part-time study or training while they are unemployed. There are insufficient data on which to base a reliable estimate of the cost of abolishing this rule.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the annual cost savings from the introduction of the jobseeker's allowance. [22785]

Mr. Roger Evans: The current estimates for the savings from the introduction of the jobseeker's allowance are £60 million in 1996–97 and £240 million in 1997–98. These figures are lower than the estimates given in the financial memorandum to the Jobseekers Bill. This is due to the deferral of introduction from April 1996 to October 1996, revised forecasts of unemployment, changes to the transitional arrangements for those in receipt of unemployment benefit when jobseeker's allowance is introduced and the use of more recent data.

Benefit Restriction (Young People)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the annual saving from restricting income support and other benefits to people between the ages of 16 and 18 years. [22717]

Mr. Roger Evans: Young people aged 18 years are entitled to income support under the normal rules; 16 and 17-year-olds not required to be available for work are similarly entitled. There is no restriction on access to any other benefit.

Since 1988, the Government have further encouraged unemployed 16 and 17-year-olds to take the more positive option of youth training in place of dependence on benefit. Reliable estimates of the number of claims that would have been made by this group under the previous arrangements are not practicable. They would be dependent on a variety of economic and other assumptions.

Departmental Performance Targets

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what performance targets he has set his Department's agencies for 1996–97; and if he will make a statement. [23285]

Mr. Lilley: The targets I have set the Department's executive agencies for 1996–97 are as follows.

The targets represent a significant challenge to each agency, and focus effort on the key elements of their individual businesses.

The resettlement agency will have fulfilled its overall objectives by completing its disengagement programme by 31 March 1996, and will have transferred all its residual functions to this Department's headquarters by that date.

Further information on the agencies' plans for 1996–97 is contained in their individual business plans which have been published today. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The targets for 1996–97 are:

BENEFITS AGENCY

1. Benefit claims clearance times

CHILD SUPPORT AGENCY

1. Performance

Sixty per cent. of new maintenance applications to be cleared within 26 weeks and as at 31 March 1997 no more than 10 per cent. of all maintenance applications received by Agency to be over 52 weeks old.

To achieve a continuing improvement in accuracy so that in at least 85 per cent. of cases checked during March 1997 the cash value of the assessment will be correct.

Where a client is dissatisfied with a Child Support Officer's decision and requests a review, 55 per cent. to be cleared within 13 weeks; 80 per cent. within 26 weeks; and no more than 15 per cent. to be older than 26 weeks at 31 March 1997.

A band of £380–£400 million of maintenance to be collected or arranged for direct payment from the absent parent to the parent with care in 1996–97.

Ninety five per cent. of payments to parent with care to be made within 10 working days of receipt from an absent parent.

WAR PENSIONS AGENCY

1. Performance

Disablement First Claims (UK)—60 per cent. cleared in 145 days.

Disablement Second and Subsequent Claims—60 per cent. cleared in 135 days.

War Widows' Claims (UK)—80 per cent. cleared in 70 days.

Claims accuracy—95 per cent.

All appeals—60 per cent. in 260 days.

As at 31 March 1997, to have no more than 30 per cent. of outstanding appeals more than 260 days old.

To clear 12,000 appeals during 1996–97.

2. Resource management

To manage the Agency's administration resources so as to deliver the Business Plan within a total budget of £34.14 million.

3. Customer satisfaction

To achieve a level of 85 per cent. of war pensioners sampled who regard the Agency's service as satisfactory or better, as determined by an independent survey.

INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY SERVICES AGENCY

1. Performance

Deliver an overall business efficiency improvement of 13.5 per cent.

Deliver 92 per cent. of services to customers to service levels for time, budget and quality as agreed in contracts.

To develop, test and deliver, to agreed timescales and with agreed functionality the Jobseeker's Allowance Payment System (JSAPS) to enable JSA implementation from 7 October 1996.

To develop, test and deliver, to agreed timescales for the Customer Accounting and Payment System (CAPS) programme, the necessary facilities to support payment by card and improved programme accounting.

Define and develop, to agreed timescales, an approach to customer satisfaction measurement which is consistent with industry standards.

Define and develop ITSA's business strategy, to agreed timescales, according to the needs of the Departmental Change Programme and the Agency's customers.

2. Resource management

Manage ITSA's resources within the Agency's Funding Regime.

Savings

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the annual savings from his social security reforms (a) at the end of the century and (b) in 2030. [19721]

Mr. Lilley: The reforms I have announced to date are expected to reduce public spending by £5 billion a year in today's prices by the turn of the century. By 2030 this will rise to £15 billion a year.

TREASURY

ECOFIN

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent Council meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers of the European Union. [20892]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I represented the UK at the Economic and Finance Council of the European Union in Brussels on 11 March.

ECOFIN adopted the Council's recommendation to the European Parliament for the discharge of the 1994 budget and considered the European Court of Auditors' annual report and the first statement of assurance on the 1994 budget. I noted that although the court's reports showed that there were still unacceptable levels of error, poor management and lack of financial control there were significant improvements in comparison with the previous year. In particular, I was encouraged by the steps taken by the Commission to address criticisms in earlier reports and to improve its internal financial management through the SEM 2000 programme. I announced that the UK would shortly be writing to the court responding to its detailed observations on UK management of Community funds, in line with the Madrid European Council conclusions, and that I hoped other member states would do the same. I also underlined the importance of the Madrid European Council's request that the Council and Commission should consider extending the system of fines for the misapplication of funds in the agriculture sector to other sectors of the budget and hoped that this would be taken forward as quickly as possible.

The Council endorsed the Commission's 1996 work programme for the fight against fraud and expressed support for its four major themes, stronger presence on the ground, strengthening the partnership between the Community and member states, improving the Community's legislative framework and compatibility between national laws.

In accordance with the June 1995 ECOFIN conclusions, the Commission gave its biannual presentation on the situation in categories 3 and 4 of the financial perspective. Germany tabled a declaration that any proposal to amend the financial perspective would be unacceptable. This was supported by France, Netherlands, Sweden and Austria as well as by the UK.

The Council took note of my reservations as well as those expressed by Denmark, Germany and the Netherlands on the Commission proposals for the creation of an audiovisual guarantee fund to be managed by the European investment fund.

The Council agreed a proposal for up to 15 mecu of macro-financial lending to Moldova. The Council did not reach agreement on the proposal for extending the mandate for European investment bank—EIB—lending to Asia and Latin America, which expired at the end of 1995.

The Council mandated COREPER to continue work on the Commission proposals to allow member states to apply a reduced VAT rate to flowers and other horticultural and forestry products. The Council also invited the Commission to come forward with new proposals for common parameters within which member states which wished to do so could introduce carbon/energy taxes.

In the afternoon, ECOFIN had its fifth meeting with the central and east European Finance Ministers and discussed the macro-economic challenges faced by the countries preparing for accession.

Department Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21586]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The number of staff recorded as being paid for overtime which took their hours worked to over 48 hours in a week is 278, which represents 24 per cent. of the Department's staff.

No records are held centrally of the hours worked either by senior staff not eligible for paid overtime or by those on flexible working schemes.

Earnings

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the average weekly earnings (i) including and (ii) excluding overtime for part-time workers in (a) Great Britain, (b) Scotland and (c) each region of Scotland, broken down for men and women (1) in manual employment, (2) in non-manual employment and (3) in other employment. [22059]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Available information from the New Earnings Survey, April 1995, is shown in the table.

Average weekly earnings, of part-time employees on adult rates, whose pay for the survey period was not affected by absence[1]

New Earnings Survey, April 1995 (GB).

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the average hourly earnings of (a) full-time and (b) part-time employees in England (i) including and (ii) excluding employees covered by national agreements. [22248]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 22 March 1996]: Information available from the new earnings survey, April 1995 shows that the average hourly earnings of full-time employees in England were £8.42 and £8.32 including and excluding employees covered by national agreements respectively. Corresponding figures for part-time employees were £5.62 and £5.19.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average cost of answering an (a) oral and (b) written parliamentary question from (i) Opposition and (ii) Conservative hon. Members in each Session since 1989–90. [21814]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Treasury calculates the annual average cost of answering written and oral questions. These are Government-wide averages and the party allegiance of questioners is not recorded. The figures for April of each year since 1989—data are not maintained by parliamentary Session—are given in the table.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those employment areas which have assisted area status and whose unemployment level on his latest assessment is less than 10 per cent. [22202]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Information on percentage rates of claimant unemployment is available for assisted areas which have boundaries which align with travel-to-work areas. This information can be obtained from the Nomis database accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Company Cars

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of (a) the cost of the tax relief on company cars and (b) the number of such cars (i) in each year since 1980 and (ii) in the current tax year. [19063]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 March 1996]: The cost of tax relief on business cars is to a large extent offset by the tax yield on the private use of such cars. Detailed estimates of the overall number of business cars are not available but the estimated cost in 1995–96 of capital allowances claimed on all business cars, including those purchased by unincorporated businesses, is £2.2 billion. This compares with an offsetting yield from the taxation of the private use for employees of £1.4 billion. Estimates of the cost of relief are not produced on a regular basis.

The table gives estimates of the number of employees who are provided by their employers with cars which are available for private use. There are also currently about 1.8 million self-employed people who claim relief for business cars against schedule D income tax liability. Figures for other business cars—taxis, pool cars, drive hire cars, etc.—are not available.

EU Monetary Committee

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total cost to date in the financial year 1995–96 of travel, accommodation and subsistence for attendances by the Second Permanent Secretary of Her Majesty's Treasury at meetings of the Monetary Committee of the European Union. [21484]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 19 March 1996]: There have been 11 meetings of the Monetary Committee in 1995–96. Part of the costs of attendance are refunded by the European Commission. In the period to 21 November 1995 the costs of attendance by the Second Permanent Secretary of HM Treasury amounted to £4,250, of which £2,587 has been reimbursed. Since then, the costs of attendance have been £1,674, some of which will be reimbursed too.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current estimate of the number of people who were counted more than once in Government employment statistics in each of the past five years. [22806]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 25 March 1996]: Estimates from the employer-based work force in employment series are derived from employers' reports of the number of people they employ and, as such, individuals holding two jobs with different employers will be counted twice. Estimates of the number of such "double-jobbers" are not available. Estimates from the Labour Force Survey of the number of people with two or more jobs are provided in the following table:

SCOTLAND

Dunblane (Shootings)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his oral statement of 14 March 1996, Official Report, columns 1107–16, who issued a firearms certificate to Thomas Hamilton; on whose recommendation; and how many firearms it covered. [21666]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: These matters are sub judice following Lord Cullen's appointment to conduct an inquiry under the Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act 1921.

Child Care Initiative

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money he has allocated to the local enterprise companies for the out-of-school child care initiative in 1996–97; and how much each LEC plans to spend on it. [21574]

Mr. Kynoch: A total of £0.5 million has been made available to the enterprise network as a whole for the out-of-school child care initiative in 1996–97. The amount spent by each LEC will depend on local needs and priorities.

Council Tax Arrears

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the accumulated arrears of community charge and council tax in each existing Scottish local authority which will be handed to their successor unitary authority; and what proportion of those arrears he estimates are capable of collection. [21699]

Mr. Kynoch: Information on uncollected community charge and council tax, including water charges, is collected by regional and islands council area. The difference between amounts billed and amounts collected as at 31 December 1995, the most recent date for which the information is currently available, is set out in the table below. We expect the new local authorities to use their best endeavours to collect all outstanding amounts.

Dumfries and Galloway Health Board

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what severance payments were made to the general manager who recently resigned from Dumfries and Galloway health board other than standard health retirement rights. [21724]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The general manager of Dumfries and Galloway health board will resign with effect from 31 May 1996 on six months paid notice in terms of his contract of employment. In the interim, he is working on secondment elsewhere within the health service in Scotland.

NHS Management

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the chief executives of national health service trusts and general managers of health boards whose employment has ceased during the last 18 months. [21768]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The list shows those chief executives of NHS trusts and general managers of health boards who have ceased NHS employment in Scotland since 1 September 1994.

Health board general managers

Mr. D. Banks, Dumfries and Galloway

Mr. J. T. Donald, Common Services Agency

Mr. J. Eckford, Ayrshire and Arran

Mr. J. Lusby, Lothian

Mr. R. Mullan, Western Isles

Mr. D. A. Peters, Borders

Mr. I. C. Smith, Argyll and Clyde

Trust chief executives[1]

Ms M. Boyle, Stobhill

Mr. St. John Hattersley, Highland Communities

Mrs. E. Hogg, Moray Health Services

Mr. R. Smail, Kirkcaldy Acute Hospitals

Mr. H. Sutherland, Ayrshire and Arran Community

[1] The list excludes chief executives who resigned from one NHS employer in Scotland and became employed by another

Commercial Premises (Valuation Appeals)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate for each regional and island council in Scotland the total number of appeals lodged against the valuation of commercial premises, the number and percentage of appeals which have so far been dealt with, the number of appeals which so far have been (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful and the average amount of time taken to deal with a valuation appeal for each council. [21770]

Mr. Kynoch: I refer the hon. Member to my answer to him on 17 January 1996, Official Report, column 641. The first information on the progress of appeals up to the end of March 1996 should become available around the end of April 1996.

Capital Receipts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate for each stock transfer undertaken by Scottish Homes the amount of capital receipt generated, the organisation which took over the housing stock, the number of properties involved and the average capital receipt generated for each property. [21766]

Mr. Kynoch: Both the Panel Secretaries' Association and the regional valuation panel chairmen's committee were consulted on the regulations providing for all expenses incurred by a panel or valuation appeal committee, including any remuneration or allowances payable, to be defrayed by the appropriate unitary council or joint board as the valuation authority for the area served by the panel.

Valuation Appeals Committees

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department decided to transfer the responsibility for the operation of valuation appeals committees to the new joint valuation boards. [21777]

Mr. Kynoch: After local government reorganisation responsibility for funding valuation appeal panels and committees will continue to rest, as at present, with the relevant valuation authority, or as the case may be, joint board. Powers were taken in the Local Government Etc. (Scotland) Act 1994, following consultation, for the Secretary of State to specify the combination of areas for which a single assessor should be appointed and how the joint arrangements will work and for the establishment of valuation appeal panels and committees to parallel the new valuation authorities or joint boards.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the valuation appeals committees operating in Scotland indicating (a) the membership of each and (b) how many committee members have been appointed by the Scottish Office. [21769]

Mr. Kynoch: Following are the current local valuation appeal panels, from which valuation appeal committees are drawn as required to deal with appeal hearings. Appointments to valuation appeal panels are made by sheriffs principal and lists of panel members are not held centrally. No valuation appeal panel or valuation appeal committee members have been appointed by the Scottish Office.

Local Government Employees (Political Restrictions)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many local government employees have appealed against political restriction because of their employment in local government; and how many of these appeals have been successful for each calendar year since its introduction. [21767]

Mr. Kynoch: Appeals relating to the rules on political restrictions are considered by the political restrictions exemptions adjudicator. Information supplied by his office indicates that the total number of employees who have appealed against political restriction because of their employment in local government is 172. Of this total, 146 made successful appeals as follows:

1990: 79

1991: 38

1992: 10

1993: 6

1994: 5

1995: 7

1996: 1 (to date).

Dykes

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many dry stone dykers have been employed on repairing or rebuilding dykes on Scottish farms with support from grants under the farm and conservation grant scheme; if he will make a statement on the effect of the closure of that scheme; and what plans he has for further incentives for such work in future. [21874]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Responsibility lay with farmers to employ dykers for projects on which grant was claimed from the farm and conservation grant scheme. Dykers were not employed directly by the Scottish Office, and no records are held on the numbers engaged in grant-assisted works.

The nationally-funded component of FCGS closed on 19 February when the governing legislation expired. Improvement plans approved under the EC-funded component of the scheme are not affected. Closure of the scheme was widely anticipated by Scotland's farming communities, and most farmers were able to submit claims for grant before the 19 February deadline.

It is important to note that the FCGS is not the only source of public assistance towards dyking projects. For example, farmers in environmentally sensitive areas can receive payments for dyke building, depending on the terms of their management agreements. In addition, the agricultural business improvement scheme, which operates in the Highlands and Islands, provides 70 per cent. grants for dyking projects on inbye and hill land, and the crofting counties agricultural grant scheme currently provides grants at the rate of 55 per cent. for traditional walls in the crofting counties. Scottish Natural Heritage can also provide assistance towards traditional field boundaries such as dry-stone walls which enhance the attractiveness of the landscape.

With regard to the future, the Government announced in the Scottish rural White Paper our intention to consult on proposals for a new conservation scheme for farmers and crofters which would extend the range of conservation incentives currently available, and also contribute to the rationalisation of the agri-environment programme. Our proposals are set out in a consultation paper published on 8 March. It is intended that the restoration of traditional stone dykes will feature in the scheme as a capital item eligible for assistance.

Student Maintenance Awards

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the total assessed parental contribution to higher education students' maintenance awards. [22223]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The total assessed parental contribution to awards made under the student allowances scheme and the postgraduate students allowances scheme for the academic year 1994–95, the latest year for which data are available, was estimated to be £82 million.

Inheritance Law

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals the Government have to bring forward changes in Scots law to allow an individual to leave all their property by will to a local organisation in order to disinherit their family; and if he will make a statement. [22445]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government have no proposals to bring forward changes in Scots law whereby an individual could leave all of his or her property to an organisation or an individual outside the family.

Scottish Homes (Stock Transfer)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate for each stock transfer undertaken by Scottish Homes the amount of capital receipt generated, the organisation which took over the housing stock, the number of properties involved and the average capital receipt generated for each property. [21766]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information requested is as follows.

Forestry

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what developments there have been in forestry since the statement made on 19 July 1994. [23339]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State announced in his statement on 19 July 1994 the Government's intention to establish Forest Enterprise, the forest management arm of the Forestry Commission, as a next steps agency. The Government have also completed preparation of the new agency's framework document and it is published today. A new edition of the access guidelines, dealing with procedures for protecting continued public access to disposals subjects has also been published today. Copies of both documents have been placed in the Library. The new agency will come into existence on 1 April 1996.

The arrangements set out in the framework document will enable the commission to set out and explain its proposals for achieving environmental, financial, social and other outputs; permit clear targets to be set for the agency;

allow the agency to demonstrate its success in meeting those targets. The Government expect these new arrangements to allow Forest Enterprise to achieve a real improvement in all areas of its output. Forest Enterprise will, of course, continue to operate firmly within the Government's multi-purpose forestry policy.

In August 1994 we published the consultation document, "Our Forests—The Way Ahead" which explained in greater detail the changes to the woodland grant scheme, the creation of the new agency and our proposals to ensure that the Forestry Commission's forest sales programme has the minimum possible impact on public access. Organisations and individuals sent in comments and we have considered them carefully.

The largest number of comments reflected concern about access. The Forestry Commission owns over 1 million hectares of land throughout Britain. Some of its forests, such as the New forest, are very intensively used for recreation and it is not our intention that this land should be sold. On the other hand some tracts of land owned by the commission are of little recreational importance and this is where the bulk of the disposals programme will be concentrated. The Forestry Commission may also wish to sell some woods that are of recreational importance if this will help rationalise the estate, making management more efficient, but in future such sales will normally take place only where it is possible to guarantee future public access.

The details of how the Forestry Commission will implement measures to protect public access are set out in a new edition of the access guidelines. Central to the new arrangements will be the requirement that, in considering forests as candidates for sale, a check-list will be completed analysing the use of the forest by the public, taking account of forms of recreation other than walking, such as horse riding and cycling. Local authorities will be informed of all proposed sales and will be sent a copy of the completed check-list and be able to comment on it. In all appropriate cases, the Forestry Commission will offer the local authority the opportunity to enter into an access agreement which will protect public access in perpetuity. The Forestry Commission will also be prepared to meet the reasonable legal costs of local authorities in drawing up agreements. The Government expect local authorities to give careful consideration to all such proposals, taking into account the views of local communities.

In addition to seeking to protect access to woods that are sold, we are providing important new opportunities to open more woodland for public access. The Forestry Commission will seek to purchase the freeholds of woods where lease terms at present prohibit public access in areas where there is high demand for such access.

We are also very keen that people should have easy access to information about the location of Forestry Commission woods where they can walk. We have asked the commission to examine, with the Ordnance Survey, ways of identifying its land on Ordnance Survey maps.

Of course, a good deal of recreation takes place in woodlands that do not belong to the commission and many private woodland owners have an excellent record in welcoming the public. We have introduced a new woodland improvement grant for projects that will increase recreational opportunities in privately-owned woods.

Nearly a quarter of all responses to "Our Forest—The Way Ahead" concerned the New forest and there was some concern that there would be a greater emphasis on commercial timber production in the New forest. I am pleased to say that this is not the case. The New forest has a special position in the commission's estate and the Government's objectives for the forest were reaffirmed in 1992 by my right hon. Friend the then Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, in a mandate for the New forest which states that "the Forestry Commission will in its management of the Crown Land give priority to the conservation of the Forest's traditional character."

The Government remain committed to that approach.

Finally, I confirm that we fully recognise the close interdependence between wood processors and growers. The commission has a general duty of promoting the production and supply of timber and will continue to work closely with the wood processing sector to achieve the common interest in a prosperous British timber industry.

TRANSPORT

HGV Drivers (Eyesight Tests)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what dates he received letters from officials of the Transport and General Workers Union requesting meetings to discuss the European driving licence directive, 91/439/EEC; what was his response; and if he will make a statement. [23066]

Mr. Norris: The national secretary of the road transport (commercial) division of the Transport and General Workers Union wrote to me on 22 January commenting on the new eyesight standards for drivers of large goods vehicles and passenger carrying vehicles and requesting a meeting to discuss this; I received a further letter on 22 February again requesting a meeting. I replied fully to the first letter on 6 March setting out the considerations underlying the new requirements and did not therefore consider that a meeting could usefully take matters forward. I confirmed this in a letter of 13 March. I replied to a further letter, dated 11 March, on 18 March.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated concerning the number of (i) fatal and (ii) other accidents, concerning the drivers of heavy goods vehicles in each of the last five years; and in respect of how many such accidents the cause was attributed to the heavy goods vehicles' drivers wearing glasses, contact lenses, or having below standard eyesight. [23076]

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the replies that I gave to earlier questions covering the same issue, recorded in the Official Report dated 6 February, column 302 and 8 February, columns 157–58.

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his oral statement of 6 March, Official Report, column 306, if he will name the 95 bodies consulted; and which bodies were in favour and which opposed to the continuation of grandfather rights. [22891]

Mr. Norris: Those consulted are as listed.

London Underground

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reduce (a) delays on London Underground and (b) the number of station closures (i) for over 15 minutes due to attributable causes and (ii) due to repair work. [22946]

Mr. Norris: Responsibility for minimising delays and temporary station closures on the underground is an operational matter for London Underground Ltd. However, I have recently set new quality of service objectives for LUL to achieve by March 1999, with interim objectives for 1996–97. These objectives include higher targets for service reliability and for customer satisfaction with the quality of train service, and a new target for the percentage of scheduled train miles operated.

All of the targets are set out in the table.

Percentage

Measure	1995–96 target	1995–96 to date	1996–97 target	1989–89 target
Train service regularity (percentage headways achieved)	95.7	95.8	95.7	96.2
Percentage schedule operated	—	96.4	96.5	97.2
Ticket purchase (percentage queuing under 3 minutes)	98.0	97.5	98.0	98.0
Escalator availability	92.0	92.7	92.0	94.5
Lift availability	95.0	95.7	96.0	96.0
Train service CSR	77.0	76.0	76.0	78.0
Train and station information CSR	—	73.0	73.0	76.0
Customer security and safety CSR	83.0	82.0	83.0	83.0
Staff helpfulness and availability CSR	69.0	68.0	69.0	71.0
Train and station cleanliness CSR	—	68.0	69.0	71.0

CSR = Customer Satisfaction Rating.

London Transport

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to provide the bulk of funds to London Transport announced by the Secretary of State in 1991. [22947]

Mr Norris: Grant for London Transport in 1992–93 was paid in line with that announced in the 1991 autumn statement. The plans then announced for grant in later years have been superseded by subsequent years' announcements. The Government's current plans for the provision of grant for London Transport were announced in the unified Budget in November 1995.

Departmental Secondment

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the individuals, by name, civil service post and receiving company, who are on temporary secondment from his Department to industry as part of the continuing programme of interchange of staff with the private sector. [22791]

Mr. Norris: The information is set out in the table.

Transport secondees to private sector

Name	Grade in civil service	Company seconded to
Mr. Steve D. Allen	7	J. Henry Schroder & Co. Ltd.
Mr. William Hills	7	Union Railways Ltd.
Mr. Alan Jeffs	7	Black Country Development Corporation
Ms Lynda Jones	SEO (part time)	Cispotel (lifeboat fund-charity)
Mr. John H. Mairs	SPTO	International Atomic Energy Agency
Mr. Nick Patel	7	Bristol Development Corporation

Motorways (New Service Areas)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on providing access from the motorway network to new motorway service areas; and if he will make a statement. [23721]

Mr. Watts: The Highways Agency is consulted on all planning applications for new motorway service areas—MSAs. It will not normally object so long as the proposal meets a range of minimum requirements relating to the facilities to be provided and the spacing of the site from other MSAs, and provided the proposed access arrangements are acceptable in safety and traffic management terms. As a matter of policy, however, we do not expect to connect new MSAs to any motorway which, because of exceptional traffic circumstances, has been or is expected to be widened to dual five lane standard. To do so would invite further congestion on what are the most heavily used parts of the motorway network

Weighbridges

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trials are currently being undertaken in the United Kingdom of weighing-in-motion weighbridges; and what proposals he has to implement them nationally. [23300]

Mr. Norris: The Vehicle Inspectorate is trialling weigh-in-motion equipment at three sites. The results of the trials will inform decisions on how such equipment might be used most effectively to support enforcement against overloading.

Highways Agency Expenditure

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the expected outturn expenditure of the Highways Agency for the financial year 1995–96, broken down between (i) assessment, strengthening, repair and upgrading of structures, (ii) capital maintenance of roads, (iii) motorway control and communications equipment, (iv) network enhancements, (v) national schemes, (vi) routine maintenance, (vii) research and development and (viii) other activities; and what proportion, by value of the work planned for 1995–96 in the Highways Agency's business plan, is expected to be completed within this financial year. [22757]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Graham Allen, dated 27 March 1996:

The Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr John Watts, has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question in which you asked for details of the expected outturn of the Highways Agency for the financial year 1995–96. I attach detailed forecasts, broken down into the categories which you requested, which were prepared on the basis of outturn figures available at the end of February. I expect the final outturn to be rather higher but still within the Agency's overall Vote of £1782m.

You also asked what proportion, by value of the work planned for 1995–96 in the Business Plan, is expected to be completed within this financial year. The Agency is on course to meet all of the targets in the Business Plan, as amended by Ministers in January.

	Forecast Outturn 1995–96 £ million
(i) assessment, strengthening, repair and upgrading structures	108.1
(ii) capital maintenance of roads	303.7
(iii) motorway control and communications equipment	48.6
(iv) network enhancements	67.3
(v) national schemes	775.6
(vi) routine maintenance	161.5
(vii) research and development	11.8
(viii) other activities (including Preparation and Supervision and Land)	410.6
Total Programme Forecast (Gross)	1,887.2
Total Programme Forecast (net of appropriations-in-aid)	1,749.2

Note:
Routine Maintenance includes Routine and Winter Maintenance and Communications Maintenance.

Forth Rail Bridge

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much British Rail and its successor bodies have spent on the painting of the Forth rail bridge in each of the last four financial years, and in the current financial year; and what changes have occurred in the method used for painting the bridge. [22843]

Mr. Watts: On the question of costs, I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 22 November 1995, column 150.

I understand that the painting methodology changed in the early 1980s when British Rail began moving from a short-term cycle of repainting to a long-term cycle.

Aircraft Movements

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 7 March, Official Report, columns 308-9, what records the Civil Aviation Authority maintains of aircraft taking off and landing without allocated slots. [21733]

Mr. Norris: The CAA does not maintain records specifically of aircraft taking off or landing without being allocated a runway slot.

ENVIRONMENT

Organic Pollutants

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Government will support the efforts of the UN environment programme to draw up a global, legally binding treaty to ban the most dangerous identified persistent organic pollutants at the forthcoming meeting of the Commission on Sustainable Development. [22265]

Mr. Gummer: The UK has played a major role in developing a proposed protocol on persistent organic pollutants under the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe convention on long-range transboundary air pollution. The Government support the United Nations Environment Programme initiative to build on this work and will play an active role in its development.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to draw up a national plan of action (a) to end the United Kingdom's use of the most dangerous identified persistent organic pollutants and (b) to phase out the disposal of raw sewage and industrial waste in rivers and oceans. [22266]

Mr. Gummer: The 12 most dangerous persistent organic pollutants identified by the United Nations Environment Programme are no longer used in this country, except for polychlorobiphenyls, the use of which is being phased out.

In line with the requirements of the urban waste water treatment directive, an implementation programme, which includes the provision of treatment for all significant discharges of sewage, has been established. A copy of this programme is in the Library of the House.

The discharge of industrial waste from prescribed processes is controlled by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. In issuing permits, it requires dischargers to apply the best available techniques not entailing excessive costs.

Incinerators

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the operators of purpose-built incinerators concerning the Government's policy statement, "Making Waste Work". [22955]

Mr. Clappison: I have received a number of representations from organisations representing the industry.

Drinking Water

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the estimated average cost per gallon of treating drinking water drawn from (a) reservoirs, (b) rivers and (c) groundwater. [22980]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 26 March 1996]: The information requested is not held by my Department.

Trafford Home Improvement Services

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what actions have been taken by his Department since the liquidation of Trafford Home Improvement Services to safeguard (a) public money and (b) moneys owed to owner-occupiers and building firms; and when these actions were taken; [23043]

(2) if he will make a statement on the position of creditors of Trafford Home Improvement Services; [23044]

(3) if he will make a statement on the discussions he has held with Trafford council in respect of the liquidation of Trafford Home Improvement Services; [23045]

(4) if he will make a statement on the liquidation of Trafford Home Improvement Services in Trafford, Greater Manchester; [23046]

(5) if he will make a statement on the relationship between his Department, Trafford council and Trafford Home Improvement Services, with reference to appointments to that body or concerning that body which were made by him, or by Trafford council and the financial regulations which he imposed; [23047]

(6) when his Department was made aware of the financial position of Trafford Home Improvement Services which led to its liquidation; and what action his Department took. [23048]

Mr. Clappison: In early February, my Department was informed by Trafford council that Trafford Home Improvement Services had gone into voluntary liquidation. Trafford Home Improvement Services is a private company limited by guarantee, used by Trafford council to provide home improvement agency services in its area. None of the directors or guarantors of the company is appointed by the Government. I am unable, therefore, to comment on the position of the creditors. It is understood that the receivers appointed by the creditors will prepare a report in due course.

Local authorities are invited each year to submit bids for grant towards the costs of providing home improvement agency services in their area. Authorities are responsible for agreeing individual budgets produced by home improvement agencies and for claiming grant on their behalf. In view of the collapse of Trafford Home Improvement Services, the Department has asked for a full report from Trafford council on affairs of the agency. The Department is also seeking to establish whether the authority has breached any of the grant conditions and, if appropriate, will seek recovery of grant.

The Department has agreed to fund Trafford council's costs in employing an official for one month to assist with the orderly closure of the agency. Care and Repair Ltd., the national co-ordinating body appointed by the Government to advise on home improvement agencies, is also closely involved with the programme of work to wind up the affairs of the agency.

Departmental Cash Limits

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to change his Department's cash limits for 1995–96. [23438]

Mr. Gummer: I propose to make the following changes:

(a) The DOE/HC (Housing Corporation) non-voted cash limit, covering grants and capital expenditure by the Housing Corporation in England, will be increased by £4,316,000 from £1,149,089 to £1,153,405,000. The increase is to fund an additional £2,820,000 in respect of city challenge expenditure; and to effect a transfer of £1,496,000 from current to capital expenditure under the rough sleepers' initiative.

(b) The DOE/LACAP (local authority capital) non-voted cash limit will be increased by £1,649,000 from £1,924,064,000 to £1,925,713,000. The increase is due to take up of end-of-year flexibility for supplementary credit approvals to local authorities to enable funding of projects within the Housing Partnership Fund. The EYF entitlement of £933,000 was announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995, Official Report, columns 776-82, but was subsequently recalculated following revised forecast outturn data. The increase will be charged to the reserve and will therefore not add to the planned control total of public expenditure.

(c) The DOE/RCW (regeneration and countryside and wildlife) non-voted cash limit will be decreased by £2,262,000 from £1,504,274,000 to £1,502,012,000. The decrease is the net effect of a transfer of £2,820,000 to the non-voted cash limit for the Housing Corporation (DOE/HC), to allow expenditure on city challenge projects financed by the Housing Corporation in England and an increase met by a transfer of £558,000 from the cash limit on class VII, vote 4 to allow the issue of supplementary credit approvals in respect of the urban programme.

(d) The external financing limits will be increased for urban development corporations by £500,000 from £259,514,000 to £260,014,000 to allow Merseyside development corporation to bring forward regeneration projects; and for housing action trusts by £2,855,000 from £89,979,000 to £92,834,000 to accelerate progress on the redevelopment of housing action trust estates.

(e) The DOE/OES (other environmental services) non-voted cash limit will be increased by £4,703,000 from £32,832,000 to £37,535,000. This increase reflects the take up of end year flexibility (£2,310,000) as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995, Official Report, columns 776-82, to fund increases in provision for: contaminated land; recycling; and, Isles of Scilly water and sewerage supplementary credit approvals. The increase also includes a technical transfer of £2,393,000 from the DOE/NT (new towns) non-voted cash limit in respect of local authority contributions to the Commission for the New Towns under road cost sharing arrangements. The increase will be used to provide supplementary credit approvals to local authorities to cover their capital contributions to the Commission for the New Towns.

(f) The DOE/NT (new towns) non-voted cash limit will be reduced by £2,025,000 from –£125,000,000 to –£127,025,000. The reduction is the result of additional receipts of £2,393,000 from local authorities financed by the increase in DOE/OES described above. In addition, there is a decrease of £315,000 resulting from a change in the final EFL (from nil to –£315,000) of the former Letchworth Garden city corporation which ceased to exist on 30 September. This is offset by an increase of £683,000 through take up of end year flexibility as announced by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on 13 July 1995, Official Report, columns 776-82. I draw attention to the presentation of the DOE/NT (new towns) non-voted cash limit for 1995–96 in the Summary and Guide to the Supply Estimates 1995–96 (Cm. 2775). It incorrectly showed the cash limit to be –£134,301,000 instead of the correct figure of –£125,000,000.

(g) The external financing limits for the British Waterways Board will be increased by £200,000 from £49,640,000 to £49,840,000. The increase arises from savings on other sub-heads within vote 3 (environmental protection and water) and it will fund additional capital and maintenance expenditure.

(h) The cash limit for class VII, vote 4, (local government and planning, England) covering sections A to F of that vote, will be reduced by £558,000 from £30,086,810,000 to £30,086,252,000. This change is to allow savings due to lower charges for Valuation Office Agency non-domestic rating work on section A (valuation services) to be transferred to the non-voted cash limit for regeneration and countryside and wildlife to allow the issue of supplementary credit approvals for the urban programme.

All the increases will be offset either by savings or charged to the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) requests for information and (b) applications for grants were made under the home energy efficiency scheme in (i) February 1995, (ii) February 1996, (iii) March 1995 and (iv) March 1996 to the latest available date; and if he will supply the information in the same form as his answer of 7 February, Official Report, column 201. [23073]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The table shows the numbers of requests for information received by Eaga Ltd. the scheme managers, and the numbers of applications made for grant.

Month	Requests for information	Grant applications
February 1995	27,322	42,801
February 1996	53,874	58,551
March 1995	18,805	32,390
March 1996 (until 22nd)	37,398	43,450

HOME DEPARTMENT

Merseyside Fire Brigade

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the current situation in the Merseyside fire brigade dispute; and if he will make a statement. [22494]

Mr. Sackville: The dispute is a local matter about changes to leave arrangements proposed by Merseyside fire and civil defence authority. I understand that the authority and the Fire Brigades Union are engaged in talks at the Advisory, Consiliation and Arbitration Service and I hope that these discussions will lead to an early end to the dispute. In the interim, military assistance to provide fire cover if there are further strikes continues to be available to the fire and civil defence authority.

Loyal Orange Lodge (Liverpool)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many marches have been made by the Loyal Orange Lodge on the streets of Liverpool in each of the past three years; how many police were involved in policing the marches; what was the cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [22450]

Mr. Maclean: The deployment of police resources and details of police arrests at particular events in Liverpool are operational matters for the chief constable of the Merseyside police. Such information is not held centrally.

Immigration (Computers)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for introducing computers into the handling of immigration casework. [23566]

Mr. Kirkhope: The immigration and nationality department has developed a programme to computerise the handling of immigration casework in order to deliver improvements in service, to strengthen the administration of the control and to produce substantial efficiency savings. A seven-year contract is to be awarded to Siemens Business Services under the private finance initiative, by means of which the company will design, build, finance and operate a comprehensive new information technology system for this purpose and assist IND in the introduction of appropriate working methods.

National Lottery

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the effect of the national lottery on charitable income. [23567]

Mr. Howard: The national lottery has provided an unparalleled source of new funds for charities and the voluntary sector generally. The National Lottery Charities Board has so far made awards totalling £159 million, exclusively for the benefit of the voluntary sector. Furthermore, a very large part of the awards from the other lottery distributors has gone to the voluntary sector. Of the £1 billion allocated so far to arts, sports, heritage and millennium projects, almost £400 million has been awarded to voluntary sector organisations. This means that almost 50 per cent. of available lottery moneys for good causes has gone to charities and voluntary organisations. As the lottery continues, similar sums of money will be available to the sector year on year.

The claims which have been made so far have been based on surveys in which people state whether they have made any recent unplanned donations. These surveys say little about the size of donations, nor about whether any changes in giving are due to the lottery. A wide range of economic and social symptoms has been blamed on the lottery, from a decline in savings to a reduction in cinema attendances; but the causal link, not least for charities, is far from clear. The situation is further complicated by the fact that, while there are charities which have seen donations declining since the introduction of the national lottery, others have reported an increase.

During the passage of the National Lottery etc. Bill, the Government gave a commitment to monitor changes in charities' income following the introduction of the Lottery. With the participation of the National Council for Voluntary Organisations, the Government have set up a research programme to look at charities' income before and after the lottery was established. Provisional findings should be available by late spring, more comprehensive findings by next year and final results by early 1998.

Examination of charities' accounts is a more reliable and factually based method of approaching this issue than surveys of the public can be. It is, however, inevitably a longer-term exercise and, in the meantime, public surveys, a useful but secondary method of researching the issue, remain the main source of information. While this is the case, firm conclusions cannot be drawn.

John Kearney

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the escape of John Kearney from prison officer custody. [21753]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 27 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to your recent Question about the escape of John Kearney from prison officer custody.

Mr. Kearney has served nine years of a life sentence. In August 1995, he successfully completed an escorted visit to his aged father who could not travel and whose health was failing. Mr. Kearney made a second request to visit his father. The governor, having taken into consideration Mr. Kearney's successful completion of an escorted visit, his continued good prison behaviour and his father's health, decided to allow another escorted visit.

Mr. Kearney was handcuffed during the journey, but on the instructions of the governor, the handcuffs were removed on arrival. Mr. Kearney made good his escape by going out the front door and locking it, the officers were unable to follow. The escape was reported to the police and a thorough search of the area was conducted. Mr. Kearney is still at large. An investigation into the escape was ordered by the area manager responsible for Kingston.

The investigation report into the escape is currently with the area manager responsible for Kingston who will decide what action needs to be taken.

Life Sentences

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what percentage of those convicted (a) twice and (b) more than twice for each of the last five years for each offence for which a lift sentence is imposable by discretion, were sentenced to (i) life, (ii) a determinate sentence of (1) 20 years or more, (2) 15 years or more, (3) 10 years or more and (4) under 10 years by type of offence; in respect of how many of those cases, in each category, the Attorney-General referred the sentence to the Court of Appeal; and if he will make a statement. [23033]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 26 March 1996]: The information requested is not collected routinely and data for each of the last five years are not available. A sample of those convicted in five weeks of 1993–94 for indictable offences includes 1,086 offenders convicted of offences carrying a discretionary life sentence. Some 132 offenders in the sample had been convicted twice of offences carrying a discretionary life sentence and 50 had been convicted more than twice. The sentence length given to these repeat offenders in the sample is shown for each offence in the tables. Information is not available on referrals to the Court of Appeal for the offenders included in the sample.

Casinos and Bingo Clubs

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reference number was given to the consultation paper concerning the deregulation of casinos and bingo clubs published on 27 February; to whom it was sent; how many copies were printed: if it is available from (a) Her Majesty's Stationery Office and (b) other outlets; and at what price. [22767]

Mr. Kirkhope: The consultation paper on casinos and bingo clubs has the reference number ISBN: 1858935725.

A full list of those consulted is given in appendix 1 to the paper. In addition, copies were sent to all hon. Members. Approximately 2,200 copies of the paper were printed.

The paper is not available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office but can be obtained, free of charge, direct from the Home Office.

Prisons (Drug Testing)

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make changes to the methods used for the mandatory drug testing of women prisoners. [22663]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Pearson to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 27 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question regarding the methods used for the mandatory drug testing of women.

The introduction of mandatory drug testing into women's prisons followed a thorough consideration of the issues involved. Mandatory drug testing procedures are subject to constant review and refinement. There are no immediate plans to alter the methods used for the mandatory drug testing of women.

Director General of the Prison Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to date to fill the vacant position of the Director General of the Prison Service; and if he will make a statement. [21086]

Mr. Howard: I am considering the matter carefully and will make an announcement as soon as possible.

Reconviction Rates

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest reconviction rates two years and four years after release for (a) adults, (b) 15 to 17-year-olds and (c) 18 to 21-year-olds, breaking down the figures by gender. [22462]

Miss Widdecombe: The most recent available information is as follows:

Two year reconviction rates[1] for sentenced prisoners discharged from Prison Service establishments during 1992

England and Wales

Age at sentence	Males	Females	Total
Aged 15–17	82	[2]56	81
Aged 18–20[3]	68	49	68
Aged 18–21	65	48	65
All young offenders	72	51	71
Adults	45	36	45
Total	52	38	51

[1] Relates to convictions for "standard list" offences only. These offences include all indictable offences and some of the more serious summary offences. Rates are based on a sample of prisoners.

[2] This figure is based on only 59 discharges.

[3] Figures are supplied for those aged 18 to 20 in addition to those aged 18 to 21 as prisoners aged 21 at sentence are included among adults.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Death and Redevelopment Scheme

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who was the last guarantor for the industrial death and redevelopment scheme. [22997]

Mr. Page: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation, which remains liable to meet all entitlements under the industrial death and retirement scheme.

Marathon Oil Well (Douglas Head)

Dr. Godman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the decision by Marathon Oil plc to drill an exploration well 5.6 miles east-south-east from Douglas head. [22455]

Mr. Page: The proposed drilling activity will take place in block 112/29 which falls within the Isle of Man territorial waters and is therefore a matter for the Isle of Man Government.

Seismic Tests (Solway Firth)

Dr. Godman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the decision by Esso plc to carry out exploratory seismic operations in the Solway firth; and if he will make a statement. [22454]

Mr. Page: Esso Exploration and Production UK Ltd. is the licensee of blocks 112/10, 112/14, 112/15 and 113/11 in the north Irish sea, which are located to the west of the Solway firth bay closing line. The licensed area of these blocks does not extend into the Solway firth.

These blocks were awarded in the 14th round of offshore oil and gas licensing and are subject to strict conditions—which were agreed with other Government Departments and the Joint Nature Conservation Committee—to take account of the concerns of other users of the sea and protect any environmental sensitivities which have been identified in the area. I have placed a copy of the 14th round indicative licence conditions in the Library of the House.

The company has already completed seismic operations in the area, and is close to concluding an extensive and wide-ranging consultation exercise regarding its plans to drill. Those consulted include Government Departments, the JNCC, the fishing industry and local authorities.

Institute of Animal Health

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many scientists and researchers were employed at the Institute of Animal Health in Edinburgh in each year since 1990 up to the current date. [22951]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The number of people in terms of full-time equivalents employed at the neuropathogenesis unit in the science grades for the respective years since 1990 is:

Year	Number of science employees
1990	25
1991	30
1992	40
1993	41
1994	36.5
1995	26
1996	33

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied by them. [21865]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 21 March 1996]: My Department is not required to consult its advisory non-departmental public bodies prior to legislative proposals, although it does so whenever appropriate. Nor is it required to publish its response to advice supplied by advisory non-departmental public bodies.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency Offices (Wales)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Benefits Agency offices there have been in Wales in each of the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [22375]

Mr. Roger Evans: The Benefits Agency was established in 1991 and the information requested from that date is set out in the table:

	Main processing offices	Public caller outlets
1991	37	38
1992	37	38
1993	37	38
1994	36	39
1995	35	40
1996	34	41

National Insurance (Actors)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has (i) to take actors out of class 1 national insurance and (ii) to consult them before implementing such plans; and if he will make a statement. [22697]

Mr. Heald: We have been considering for some time the implications of treating actors as self-employed for national insurance purposes as the majority are now for tax purposes and we have already consulted widely on the matter. We have written to the British Actors' Equity Association and other performers' representatives to invite them to further discussions.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Somalia

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of (a) food stocks in Somalia, (b) the number of people suffering malnutrition in Somalia and (c) the possibility of famine in Somalia in the coming months. [23078]

Mr. Hanley: The food supply situation in Somalia has been affected by insecurity, erratic rains and pest infestation. The World Food Programme estimates a 1996 food shortfall of about 150,000 tonnes. The WFP plans to distribute 2,500 tonnes per month to meet immediate needs. To date, it has pledges of 39,000 tonnes.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of (a) the internal conflict in Somalia and (b) the capacity for reconciliation; and what measures are being taken, or are planned, by (i) Her Majesty's Government and (ii) the EU to assist such reconciliation. [23079]

Mr. Hanley: We remain concerned at the instability in Somalia caused by factional fighting. A return to peace can be achieved only by agreement among the Somalis themselves. We are supporting efforts by the EU and UN to encourage national reconciliation.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made, and what discussions have taken place, between Her Majesty's Government and British and non-British non-governmental organisations of the possibility of making food aid available in Somalia; and what assessment he has made of the security of that food aid and of the people involved in distributing it. [23080]

Mr. Hanley: My noble friend Baroness Chalker and officials are in regular contact with international NGOs about food aid needs throughout the Horn of Africa. We have no outstanding requests for food aid for Somalia. We remain ready to consider further assistance if needs increase. In doing so, we would take into consideration the provision of adequate security for the food aid and those distributing it.

Indonesia

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Indonesian police officers have received training in the maintenance of public order in each year since 1990 under the police management training project (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in Indonesia by United Kingdom police officers. [22876]

Mr. Hanley: The training provided under this project has included courses on personnel management, business administration, training management, organisation development, leadership, and training for trainers, as well as attachments to UK police forces. It has not included training in the maintenance of public order.

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which former public sector research establishments in the Overseas Development Administration have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in the Overseas Development Administration are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21940]

Mr. Hanley: From 1979 to date, no ODA research establishment has been transferred to the private sector. Over the period, a number of separate bodies were brought together to form the Natural Resources Institute. The transfer of the NRI to the private sector is in progress; a preferred bidder was announced on 5 March, Official Report, column 166.

TREASURY

Income Tax

Mr. Forman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was taxable income after all allowances and reliefs as a percentage of total taxpayers' income in (a) 1979, (b) 1983, (c) 1987, (d) 1992 and (e) the latest year for which figures are available. [20344]

Mr. Jack: Estimates based on the survey of personal incomes are given in the table. A comparable figure is not available for 1996–97. For years prior to 1994–95, the married couple's allowance and mortgage interest relief affected the calculation of taxable income. From 1994–95, these have been available at a specified rate, so they no longer affect the calculation of taxable income. Taxable income—after allowances and reliefs given at marginal rates—on the new basis as a percentage of total taxpayers' income is estimated to be 73 per cent. in 1996–97.

Year	Taxable income after all allowances and reliefs as a percentage of total taxpayers' income (per cent.)
1978–79	61
1982–83	62
1986–87	59
1991–92	62
1996–97	—

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the additional annual revenue which would be raised from Welsh taxpayers if the basic rate of income tax were increased from 24 to 25 per cent. [22688]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 March 1996]: It is not possible to provide a reliable breakdown below United Kingdom level for 1996–97. The latest available information is for 1993–94. The full-year yield from an increase in the basic rate of tax under the 1993–94 tax regime and at 1993–94 income levels is £1,600 million for the United Kingdom and £60 million for Wales.

Privatisation

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines the Government have produced in relation to prospectuses for privatisation of public utilities. [20693]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 25 March 1996]: At the time of an initial or subsequent offer, the Government, as seller of the shares, and the company concerned, as issuer of the shares to be sold, are subject to the same legal and regulatory framework as other vendors or issuers. There are no guidelines relating specifically to the prospectuses for offers of shares in privatisations.

Public Sector Borrowing

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in which years since 1978–79 the public sector borrowed more than was required to finance its net capital spending. [22389]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 25 March 1996]: The public sector borrowing requirement exceeded net capital spending in the years 1978–79 to 1985–86 inclusive and 1991–92 to 1994–95 inclusive.

Small Pension Schemes

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total number of small self-administered pension schemes at the most recent date for which figures are available. [23055]

Mr. Jack: Information held by the Inland Revenue's pension schemes office shows that there are currently about 28,000 small self-administered pension schemes.

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Inland Revenue staff are engaged in work relating directly to the administration of small, self-administered pension schemes. [23054]

Mr. Jack: Approximately 60 full-time staff units of the Inland Revenue's pension schemes office are engaged in work relating directly to the tax approval and monitoring of small self-administered pension schemes. In addition, some staff in local tax offices are periodically involved in this work, as a consequence of dealing with the tax affairs of specific companies and individuals.

Personal Tax Allowance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the revenue which would be raised by restricting the value of the personal tax allowance to relief of tax at the 24 per cent. rate and below. [22833]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 March 1996]: The estimated full-year yield at 1996–97 income levels from restricting personal allowances to the basic rate is £1.6 billion.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the full year cost to the Exchequer of raising the value of the personal tax allowance by (a) £100, (b) £200, (c) £300, (d) £400, (e) £500, (f) £1,000, (g) £1,500 and (h) £2,000. [22832]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 March 1996]: Estimates are given in the table.

Estimated full year costs at 1996–97 income levels (£ billion)

Increase in non aged and aged personal allowance£	Full year cost £ billion
100	0.6
200	1.2
300	1.8
400	2.4
500	3.1
1,000	6.0
1,500	9.0
2,000	11.5

Married Couple's Allowance

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present annual cost to the Exchequer of the married couple's allowance. [22830]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 March 1996]: The estimated full-year cost at 1996–97 income levels is £3.3 billion. This includes the cost of allowances related to the married couple's allowance—the additional personal allowance and the widow's bereavement allowance.

Taxation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the addition to Exchequer revenues which would result from raising the basic rate of tax from 24 per cent. to 25 per cent. in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99, (d) 1999–2000 and (e) 2000–2001. [22834]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 March 1996]: The estimated full-year yield would be about £1.6 billion at 1996–97 income levels. The yields for future years would depend on levels of incomes, tax reliefs and allowances in those years.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the present annual cost to the Exchequer of mortgage interest tax relief at source. [22831]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 March 1996]: In 1995–96, the estimated total cost of mortgage interest relief is about £2.7 billion, of which £2.6 billion is given through the MIRAS—mortgage interest relief at source—scheme.

These figures are based on the assumption, by convention, of no change from the current estimated average building society interest rate of 7.3 per cent. The rate of relief is 15 per cent.

VAT (Historic Buildings)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost of ending the payment of value added tax on repairs to historic buildings. [22690]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 26 March 1996]: The best estimate is £60 million per year.

Tobacco Duty

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the full-year revenue effect of raising the level of tobacco duty by the equivalent of 5p extra on a standard packet of cigarettes. [22691]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 26 March 1996]: The Treasury publication "Tax Ready Reckoner and Tax Reliefs" shows that the estimated full-year revenue effect of raising the level of tobacco duty by 5p is £175 million.

Duty (Hydrocarbon Oils)

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken to prevent avoidance of duty on hydrocarbon oils by mixing products after the duty has been paid. [23503]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Subject to a resolution of the House, the Government will be bringing forward two new clauses at the report stage of the Finance Bill. These clauses will ensure that duty at the appropriate rate will have to be paid if non-dutiable kerosene is added to diesel road fuel, or to gas oil for use in off-road vehicles respectively. The first new clause will also ensure that lead or octane enhancers cannot be added to unleaded petrol by distributors or retailers without the higher rate of duty being paid. Both new clauses will come into force on a date to be specified in an order made by the commissioners of Customs and Excise.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the law covering the duty on hydrocarbon oils. [23507]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs and Excise will shortly be starting a major review of the legislation covering the way hydrocarbon oil duty is charged with the aim of bringing forward proposals next year for having it set out more clearly and simply. Customs will be consulting fully with the trade and other interested parties. The intention is not to review the rates of duty charged or the current rebates and exemptions or the time at which duty is charged, matters on which the Chancellor of the Exchequer will make his decisions in the normal way, but to put the existing provisions in a simpler and more robust format which will be better able to cope with the introduction of new products.

Valuation Office

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what targets will be set for the Valuation Office executive agency for the year 1996–97. [23504]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The following key targets have been set for the Valuation Office in 1996–97:

Operational

to clear 100,000 appeals against the council tax valuation lists; to clear 330,000 appeals in aggregate against the 1990 and 1995 rating lists;

to undertake 64,000 valuation cases for the Inland Revenue for capital gains tax and inheritance tax purposes.

Financial and cost efficiency to ensure that the agency's net operating cost, after deducting the cost of statutory non-chargeable work, is at least fully covered by receipts; to break even from year to year within each business segment, after charging for the full cost of chargeable services including notional interest of 6 per cent. on the average working capital; to achieve efficiency savings of 7.9 per cent. on the agency's gross expenditure.

Quality of service to reply to 100 per cent. of correspondence within 20 working days of receipt; to achieve specified time limits on 97 per cent. of cases undertaken; to achieve a specified valuation quality standard in 85 per cent. of cases carried out.

Further details are set out in the agency's forward plan, copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House on publication.

Government Borrowing

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the Government's borrowing programme for 1996–97. [23505]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Yes. The Government today published the 1996–97 debt management report. This report, the second of the series, includes details of the 1996–97 borrowing programme and the Government's remit to Bank of England for gilt sales in 1996–97. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Sales of Debt

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to publish a remit for sales of debt by the Department for National Savings. [23506]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The remit for the Department for National Savings for 1996–97 is as follows:

Objectives

The Department for National Savings' declared aim is to support the Government's management of their debt and their policies for personal savings by attracting and retaining investments from the retail market efficiently and cost-effectively.

The Department's primary task is therefore to be an efficiency and cost-effective source of funding for Her Majesty's Government. It is also charged with maintaining a suitable range of schemes to encourage savings among the population.

Volume of Funding in 1996–97

The net contribution of national savings to funding in 1996–97 is assumed to be around £3.0 billion.

Responsibilities

The Treasury is responsible, under the National Loans Act 1968, for setting the terms of national savings products. DNS will normally take the lead in bringing forward proposals to Treasury Ministers on product terms, including rates.

Cost Comparisons

The Government intend that National Savings' contribution to funding should offer value for money overall compared with other sources of funding. Product terms will take account of the need for DNS to retain the capability and market presence to contribute to the Government's funding needs over the medium term.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many questions were tabled to his Department in each Session since 1987–88; how many were not answered on the grounds of disproportionate cost; what percentage of the total number of questions this represented; how many were not answered on the grounds that the information was not centrally available; and what percentage of the total number of questions this represented. [21150]

Sir John Wheeler: The figures for the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments since 1987–88 are in the table.

Year	Oral questions	Written questions
1987–88	354	2,205
1988–89	264	1,275
1989–90	247	1,461
1990–91	227	1,214
1991–92	123	757
1992–93	332	1,775
1993–94	220	1,285
1994–95	235	1,761
1995–96	87	639

These figures have been produced from the POLIS—parliamentary on-line information system—database. The figures reflect the number of questions answered and should be treated as indicative only; because of certain factors, complete accuracy on departmental activity cannot be provided.

The further information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Fish Farming

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, what the annual production of table-sized rainbow trout from the 104 fattening ponds has been in each of the last 10 years. [21799]

Mr. Ancram: This information is not available. The licences under which these small ponds operate precludes the sale of the fish produced.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, which Government Department sanctions and licences the movements of the live juvenile rainbow trout from the fish farms which supply to each of the fattening ponds. [21803]

Mr. Ancram: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, if he will list by title and location each of the ponds where rainbow trout are artificially fed. [21811]

Mr. Ancram: A list of the names and addresses of those holding fish culture licences for garden ponds has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, if he will publish the licences of recorded movements of juvenile rainbow trout from the fish farms which supply each fattening pond. [21805]

Mr. Ancram: A copy of the permits issued during 1995 under the Fisheries Act (Northern Ireland) 1966 which authorise the movement of live fish and which relate to the supply of juvenile rainbow trout from the fish farms which supply each pond has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, how often the ponds are tested for enteric red mouth disease. [21809]

Mr. Ancram: No routine disease monitoring is undertaken at these ponds where production is not permitted to exceed 500 fish per annum. Testing for a range of diseases, including enteric redmouth is carried out when exposure to infection is suspected and when abnormal mortalities or disease outbreaks are reported as required under the terms of fish culture licences.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, what information the operators of the ponds are required to provide to the Fisheries Conservancy Board. [21797]

Mr. Ancram: None.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, if a fish dealer's licence is required to purchase the mature rainbow trout from the fattening ponds for supply to fishmongers, hotels and the catering trade. [21801]

Mr. Ancram: The supply of fish to fishmongers, hotels and the catering trade is precluded by the terms of the licences under which these ponds operate.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, how many recorded uses of chemicals at the ponds there were in (i) 1993, (ii) 1994 and (iii) 1995. [21808]

Mr. Ancram: None.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, on what date each of the 104 ponds were granted a fish culture licence under section 11 of the Fisheries Act Northern Ireland 1966. [21800]

Mr. Ancram: This information is contained on the list of holders of fish culture licences in respect of garden ponds which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, how many of the sites where rainbow trout are artificially fed have been granted a fish culture licence under section 11 of the Fisheries Act Northern Ireland 1966. [21804]

Mr. Ancram: All known sites where rainbow trout are artificially fed have been granted a fish culture licence under section 11 of the Fisheries Act (Northern Ireland) 1966.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, how often officials of the Fisheries Conservancy Board visit each of the fattening ponds. [21802]

Mr. Ancram: There is no routine monitoring of ponds by officials of the Fisheries Conservancy Board for Northern Ireland: the monitoring of compliance with fish culture licence conditions is the responsibility of the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, what measures are in place to ensure that rainbow trout from the ponds have been reared to Government standards. [21806]

Mr. Ancram: Appropriate requirements are imposed as conditions of the fish culture licence.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, how many of the ponds are used and supplied directly by Movanagher fish farm to grow on to maturity. [21810]

Mr. Ancram: None.

Mr. Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 525, if he will list the fish farms which have supplied and are currently supplying juvenile rainbow trout to the 104 fattening ponds. [21798]

Mr. Ancram: Historic information on those fish farms which have supplied juvenile rainbow trout to the ponds is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

During 1995, Seven Springs trout hatchery, Bush Valley fish farm and Movanagher fish farm supplied juvenile fish to ponds.

Organised Crime

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he is taking to combat organised crime. [23509]

Sir John Wheeler: The Government are continuously seeking to enhance the effectiveness of the law to combat racketeering and organised crime in Northern Ireland in a way which balances the freedom of law-abiding people to go about their business against the threat from those who would pervert this freedom.

Our primary concern has been to counter the murderous campaigns of republican and loyalist terrorists. This will remain the case so long as it is necessary to combat the activities of groups, or a particular group, who espouse violence as a means of achieving their ends. The Government recognise that racketeering in Northern Ireland is intimately bound up with the activities of the terrorists. Indeed, the problem did not disappear during the ceasefires.

There has never been a clear distinction between "terrorist" racketeering and racketeering for personal gain and the report of the Home Affairs Select Committee on Organised Crime has recently warned that combating this menace "should not be hindered by concern about what is and is not 'organised' crime".

This is why we are taking a number of measures to strengthen the law in dealing with organised crime—no matter what its motivation.

It is vital that those who are willing to testify against criminals are properly protected. Included in the Criminal Procedures and Investigation Bill are proposals which protect the fairness of trials from being prejudiced by intimidation: it will be possible for acquittals to be reopened where there has been an offence involving intimidation of witnesses and jurors. In the same Bill, the rules of disclosure in advance of trial are to be recast, with the intention of reducing the risk of unmeritorious acquittals, as where a prosecution has to be stopped to protect the identity of informers. And we hope shortly to bring forward proposals for a new offence of witness intimidation. In other areas, changes which will enable the security services to become involved in the investigation of serious crime will extend to Northern Ireland. No less importantly, we will be taking steps to strengthen and update the law on the confiscation of the proceeds of criminal activity of any nature, in the draft Proceeds of Crime (Northern Ireland) Order which I hope will be laid soon.

I will also be looking for ways to enable improved co-operation and exchange of information between the RUC and other forces, whether this concerns intelligence, information technology, DNA samples or other issues. I will look carefully at arrangements between police forces to make sure that arrangements which best serve the needs of the RUC and other forces in the UK are implemented in Northern Ireland. I am also considering ways to facilitate the sharing of information between different agencies and to make sure that Northern Ireland can benefit from full participation in new arrangements at the international level.

Orders in Council

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the annual number of extra Northern Ireland Orders in Council that will flow from the proposed Deregulation and Contracting-out Order in Council. [14546]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 13 February 1996]: A composite deregulation Order in Council will be introduced next year and as frequently as necessary thereafter, to carry forward in Northern Ireland, as appropriate, changes being made in Great Britain under the order-making powers in the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994 and any measures unique to Northern Ireland.

Unemployment

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current number of (a) men and (b) women unemployed (i) as a percentage of the work force and (ii) in total for each council or other convenient geographical area. [22010]

Mr. Ancram: Travel-to-work areas are the only geographical areas within Northern Ireland for which both unemployment numbers and rates are available. Male, female and total figures for Northern Ireland TTWAs at 8 February 1996 are shown in the following table:

Numbers and percentages of unemployed claimants in travel to work areas[1] on 8 February 1996

Travel-to-work area	Total unemployed by travel-to-work area			Percentage unemployed[2]

[1] Travel-to-work areas are designated by the name of the major town in the area. Some of them coincide with a single District Council area and some are made up from several District Council areas.
[2] All rates are based on the estimated workforce at June 1994.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Attorney-General what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22515]

The Attorney-General: No such payments have been made by the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers, the Treasury Solicitor's Department, the Government Property Lawyers or the Serious Fraud Office.

The Crown Prosecution Service has made the following payments in respect of alleged equal opportunities breaches which did not proceed to tribunals or courts:

1994: 2 payments of £4,000 each to existing staff.

1995: 1 payment of £17,595.80 to a former member of staff.

1996: Nil.

Electro-shock batons

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Attorney-General if he will seek to prosecute (a) SMDS, (b) J and S Franklin, (c) Compass Safety International/Compass Maritime, (d) CCS, and (e) Civil Defence Supply for their role in the supply of electro-shock batons. [22978]

The Solicitor-General: The question of prosecution does not arise unless there has been a prior criminal investigation. These companies to which the hon. Member refers have not featured in the investigation carried out by the Ministry of Defence police. If she has any evidence tending to support allegations that these companies or their employees have committed criminal offences, then she should make it available to the police.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) her Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which she is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22518]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Financial year	(a) (i)	(a) (ii)	(b) (i)	(b) (ii)
1995–96	1 person £1,000	2 people £5,000 + £12,000	1 person £1,000	—
1994–95	—	—	1 person £16,105	—
1993–94	—	—	1 person £500	1 person £1,500

Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidelines are currently in force in her Department and its executive agencies relating to competitive tendering and the use of single negotiated tenders; on what grounds single negotiated tenders can be used; and what procedures are in place within her Department to ensure that the use of single negotiated tenders in competitive tendering processes is justified in all cases. [22847]

Mr. Robin Squire: Written guidance is fully in accordance with Government procurement policies, including the principles set out in the recent White Papers "Competing for Quality" and "Setting New Standards" and compliant with the EC procurement directive has been disseminated to staff.

Tendering processes are designed to ensure that the Department achieves best value for money when entering into contracts. Single tender action is undertaken only after justification has been provided to, and written agreement received from, senior management.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded by her Department and its executive agencies on the basis of single negotiated contracts in each of the last three years; if she will list the companies involved and the value of the contract in each case; what percentage this represented of contracts awarded by her Department and its agencies after competitive tendering; and, in each case, why the contracts were awarded on the basis of a single negotiated tender. [22861]

Mr. Squire: Information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what discussions have taken place with (a) the voluntary sector, (b) trade unions and (c) other groups to encourage people from outside the private sector to join training and enterprise council boards of directors; and if she will make a statement. [22173]

Mr. Paice: The membership of training and enterprise council boards is a matter for individual TECs, subject to the requirements for two thirds of the board to comprise chief executives or senior directors of private-sector organisations. The remaining directors must be chief executives or their equivalents from education, economic development, trade unions, voluntary organisations or the public sector.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research her Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated into the local consequences of the mergers between training and enterprise councils and chambers of commerce; and if she will make a statement. [22174]

Mr. Paice: The Department has commissioned independent consultants to look at the impact of training and enterprise council-chamber mergers. They have been asked to report their findings by November 1996.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will take steps to improve the communication and consultation between training and enterprise councils and local democratically elected bodies; and if she will make a statement. [22175]

Mr. Paice: The Government's strategic guidance to training and enterprise councils stresses the need for TECs to work in partnership with other local organisations to meet the needs of their local communities. The criteria for the award of a three-year licence to TECs to take account of TEC participation in local partnerships.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to alter the auditing requirements of training and enterprise councils; and if she will make a statement. [22176]

Mr. Paice: The Department is carrying out a review of training and enterprise councils audit arrangements in conjunction with the TEC National Council. Any agreed findings will be implemented as soon as practical.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action will be taken where training and enterprise councils do not fulfil the criteria for a three-year licence; and if she will make a statement. [22177]

Mr. Paice: After 1997, the Government do not propose to contract with training and enterprise councils which fail to meet the criteria for a licence. The round 3 licensing prospectus, due to be issued shortly, explains what happens if a TEC fails to meet the criteria. A copy of the prospectus will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will ensure that answers to hon. Members' questions on training and enterprise councils are published in the Official Report. [22178]

Mr. Paice: Answers to hon. Members' questions on training and enterprise councils are published in the Official Report.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what mechanisms are available to ensure that training and enterprise councils are accountable to Parliament; and if she will make a statement. [22179]

Mr. Paice: Training and enterprise councils are private companies operating under contract with a number of Government Departments. They are accountable through their contract with the appropriate Secretaries of State, and through them to Parliament.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how the different costs of training schemes in different sectors are taken into account when providing funding for training and enterprise councils; and if she will make a statement. [22180]

Mr. Paice: Training and enterprise councils prepare annual business plans setting out their training proposals. Funding, based on these plans, is negotiated between the TEC and its local Government office. The extent to which the cost of training in different sectors is taken into account is an issue for negotiation between the TEC and the Government office.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidelines her Department issues in respect of the levels of reserves held by training and enterprise councils. [22183]

Mr. Paice: The Department requires each training and enterprise council to specify a prudent minimum reserve level, together with a target level to be met at the end of each operational year. The prudent minimum is determined by each TEC's directors and will include reserves earmarked for specific purposes such as funding fixed assets, financing working capital and specific projects such as business link support.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list those training and enterprise councils that currently hold more than £3 million in reserve; and if she will make a statement. [22184]

Mr. Paice: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on 29 February 1996, Official Report, column 38. This provides a list of training and enterprise councils and their reserves, as shown in their annual statutory audited accounts, at the end of the financial year 1994–95.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will introduce measures to ensure that the system for measuring training and enterprise councils' performance is (a) simplified, (b) standardised and (c) gives greater value for money and efficiency; and if she will make a statement. [22186]

Mr. Paice: The management information collected from training and enterprise councils provides a sound basis for measuring and comparing TEC performance. We are always looking, with TECs, to improve performance measurement arrangements.

Training (Outcome-related Payments)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to bring within the system of successful outcome payments the training costs of basic skills up to NVQ level 1. [22181]

Mr. Paice: Payments for qualifications in basic skills below NVQ level 1 are already made. Foundation level wordpower and numberpower are payable outcomes for individuals with endorsed literacy and numeracy training needs in training for work and youth training. A separate pre-vocational training programme for unemployed adults, including basic skills, is to be piloted in 1996–97. Basic skills qualifications below NVQ level 1 will be payable in the pilots.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to alter the definition of a job placement for the purpose of outcome-related payments in order to take account of the quality and content of the position gained and the likely length of its duration. [22182]

Mr. Paice: My right hon. Friend has no plans to alter the definition of a job placement for outcome related payments in training for work.

Training Schemes (Administrative Costs)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the annual administrative costs of youth training and training for work schemes for all available years; and if she will make a statement. [22185]

Mr. Paice: The Department does not collect information on the administrative costs of individual programmes.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate he has made of the number of existing postal claimants who will no longer be eligible to sign by post when the jobseeker's allowance is introduced (a) in total and (b) by parliamentary constituency. [22549]

Mr. Forth: The rules allowing certain jobseekers to make their declarations by post will change with the introduction of jobseeker's allowance. The facility will be available to people whose normal journey to or from the jobcentre would take more than one hour, or would involve an absence from home of over four hours. People whose mobility is restricted by disability will also be considered for the postal facility. We estimate that the total number of postal signers will be reduced by up to 50 per cent. from the present level of about 120,000. It is not possible to break this estimate down by parliamentary constituency.

Firlands Training Ltd.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to issue guidance to training and enterprise councils that they should not sign contracts with Firlands Training Ltd. of Aylesbury pending the completion of the investigations by the Department of Trade and Industry companies investigation branch under section 447 of the Companies Act 1985 into the involvement of the company's principals in the collapse of the AST group of companies. [23037]

Mr. Paice: As private companies, the contract between training and enterprise councils and their providers is a matter for the parties concerned.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Senior Salaries

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the annual salaries received by those covered by the Review Body on Senior Salaries (a) before and (b) after the latest awards; and in each case what was the pay increase awarded on a weekly income basis. [21746]

Mr. Freeman: The 18th report of the Review Body on Senior Salaries—SSRB—was published on 8 February 1996, Cm 3094. It included recommendations on the remuneration of holders of judicial office, senior civil servants and senior officers of the armed forces.

Pay ranges and rates for all three groups before the application of the 1996 recommendations are set out in appendix D of the SSRB report.

The Government decided to stage the awards recommended by most pay review bodies this year. The tables show the salaries payable from 1 April 1996 and from 1 December 1996 when the second stage of the award becomes payable. The weekly rates represent the weekly increase over the previous level of salary.

For the senior civil service, the Government accepted the SSRB's recommendations for the new system of pay ranges from 1 April 1996. Details of the new pay band framework and calibration are included in chapter 2 of the SSRB report. Awards will be determined on an individual basis by the employing Department.

The posts included in each group and details of pay variations within each group are listed in appendices C and D of the SSRB report.

The 1 April increase for the judiciary includes the committed annual increase which the SSRB recommended in its 1994 report. The figures in brackets show the element of the increase which resulted from the SSRB's 1996 recommendation.

All service personnel are paid on a daily basis and daily pay rates are produced for every rank throughout the armed forces. The weekly rates shown above have therefore been produced by multiplying the daily rates for each rank by seven and not by dividing the annual rates by 52.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22517]

Mr. Willets: The Departments, agencies and other bodies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible paid £51,000 in 1996 in out-of-court settlements of two cases of alleged breaches involving former members of staff.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Legislation

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) those Acts of Parliament and (b) those statutory instruments which were enacted in pursuance of the United Kingdom's obligations under the European Communities Act 1972. [19945]

Mr. David Davis: I have looked into the hon. Member's question. We do not hold such information centrally and could collate it only at disproportionate cost.

Embassies and Missions (EU)

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 6 March, Official Report, columns 255–58, who, on what occasion and with what authority, sanctioned the establishment by the European Union of delegations in third countries. [22769]

Mr. David Davis: The establishment by the European Commission of delegations in third countries falls within the Commission's power to organise its own administration. There is therefore no requirement on the Commission to obtain authority to establish these delegations, although it does consult member states before opening new delegations. Of course, all Commission spending is subject to scrutiny during the annual budget negotiations with the Council and European Parliament.

Cyprus

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he (a) has had or (b) plans to have with Mr. Glafcos Clerides following his recent statement relating to the number of people described as missing following the events of 1974; how many Cypriots from (i) Greek and (ii) Turkish communities, are now listed as missing; and if he will make a statement. [23052]

Mr. David Davis: None. A UN committee on missing persons was established to investigate the fate of the missing. A total of 1,993 cases of Cypriots who remain unaccounted for have been submitted to the UN committee. We understand from the UN that 1,493 of these are Greek Cypriots and 500 are Turkish Cypriots.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had had with (a) Mr. Glafcos Clerides and (b) the Greek Government on the future resettlement of (i) Greek and (ii) Turkish Cypriots in Famagusta; and if he will make a statement. [23038]

Mr. Davis: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 26 March 1996, column 499.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress there has been in the implementation of the United Nations confidence-building measures in Cyprus; what assessment he has made of the policy of the (a) Greek Cypriot and (b) Turkish Cypriot Governments to these confidence-building measures; when Nicosia international airport will be reopened; when Cypriots will be allowed to resettle in Varosha; and if he will make a statement. [23018]

Mr. Davis: Negotiations on the United Nations package of confidence-building measures have seen no progress since June 1994. We continue to believe that these measures could make a positive contribution towards an eventual solution to the Cyprus problem.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he (a) has had and (b) plans with the Secretary-General of the United Nations on the present position of the Turkish Cypriots living in areas of southern Cyprus. [23020]

Mr. Davis: The high commission in Nicosia maintains close contact with the United Nations force in Cyprus humanitarian branch, which is responsible for overseeing the welfare of Turkish Cypriots living in southern Cyprus. We fully support its work in this field.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the British Government will support an official inquiry into the alleged killing of Greek Cypriots by Greek Cypriot troops during the Greek Cypriot coup d'état in 1974. [23039]

Mr. Davis: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 26 March 1996, column 480.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the British Government plan to remain one of the guarantor powers for Cyprus. [23019]

Mr. Davis: Yes.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with (a) Mr. Glafcos Clerides and (b) the Greek Government about the number of foreign residents now living in southern Cyprus; what is his most recent estimate of the total number; and if he will make a statement. [23041]

Mr. Davis: None. We are responsible for the consular protection of some 7,000 British residents on the island. This does not include 200,000 or so dual nationals who are the responsibility of the Republic of Cyprus. We support the call in UN Security Council resolution 789 for a Cyprus-wide census under the auspices of the United Nations.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of the Turkish Republic of Cyprus about Cyprus's membership of the European Union; what assessment he has made of the Turkish Cypriot Government's support for Cyprus's membership; and if he will make a statement. [23032]

Mr. Davis: Staff at the high commission in Nicosia regularly discuss Cyprus' accession to the EU with members of the Turkish Cypriot community. We welcomed Mr. Denktash's statement last December outlining the circumstances in which he would be prepared to support EU accession by Cyprus within the terms of an overall settlement.

Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded by his Department and its executive agencies on the basis of single negotiated contracts in each of the last three years; if he will list the companies involved and the value of the contract in each case; what percentage this represented of contracts awarded by his Department and its agencies after competitive tendering; and, in each case, why the contracts were awarded on the basis of a single negotiated tender. [22874]

Mr. Hanley: The number of single negotiated contracts awarded in each of the last three years is not centrally available and collection of the associated data requested could be achieved only at disproportionate cost.

Russia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed the Russian assault on Sernovodsk with the Russian Government; and if he will make a statement. [22928]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We and our EU partners continue to make known our deep concerns about the continuing violence in Chechnya, most recently in the Foreign Affairs Council declaration of 25 March 1996, which refers specifically to events in Sernovodsk.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidelines are currently in force in his Department and its executive agencies relating to competitive tendering and the use of single negotiated tenders; on what grounds single negotiated tenders can be used; and what procedures are in place within his Department to ensure that the use of single negotiated tenders in competitive tendering processes is justified in all cases. [22858]

Mr. Hanley: The Government's public purchasing policy consolidated guidelines require goods and services to be acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. In addition, the EC procurement directives and the world trade organisation Government procurement agreement require most contracts above specified thresholds to be graded following competition, subject to certain specified exceptions.

Guidelines in force in the Department and the Overseas Development Administration and its executive agency reflects best purchasing practice and advocate the use of competition as an essential ingredient for the achievement of value for money for the Department, the ODA and the taxpayer. At the same time, the guidelines acknowledge that in certain circumstances it may be necessary to purchase from a single provider, either by negotiation with a monopoly or otherwise to standardise equipment or take account of (1) only one source being available for technical or quality reasons; (2) repair of original manufacture; (3) repeat order, where the supplier has the tooling, designs or artwork etc; (4) the only supplier responding to a competitive invitation to tender; (5) extreme urgency arising from circumstances outside the Department's control; (6) low value; or (7) additional costs outweighing the benefit of renewed competition, takin into account the complexity of the service, the resources originally committed to setting it up and the cost effectiveness of change.

It is standard practice for the reasons which justify single tender action to be recorded and approved at a senior level in advance of awarding a contract.

Indonesia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if the Government are funding, in whole or in part, training schemes, (a) in the Untied Kingdom and (b) elsewhere, involving members of the Indonesian special forces, the Indonesian military, police or security forces; [23056]

(2) what specific questions participants in training schemes, which Her Majesty's Government have funded in whole or in part in other countries involving members of the Indonesian special forces—Kopassus—or the Indonesian military, police or security forces, were asked about their past activities with regard to human rights considerations. [23053]

Mr. David Davis: Details of training under the United Kingdom military training assistance scheme are confidential between Governments.

Cuba

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the implications for United Kingdom relations with (a) the United States of America and (b) Cuba of the Cuba Liberty and Democratic Solidarity (Libertad) Act. [23075]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have made clear to the US Administration our concern about the Helms-Burton Act. We will be urging them to use discretion in the way in which they implement the legislation, and will take whatever action we can to protect our legitimate trading interests. As my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs said in the House on 20 March, Official Report, columns 332–36, our policy towards Cuba remains the same.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Disabled Football Supporters

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to discuss with (a) the authorities at Wembley stadium and (b) professional football clubs access for disabled supporters; and if she will make a statement. [22426]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 26 March 1996]: I have no such plans. The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 creates new rights of access for disabled people. All goods, facilities and services provided to the public are covered by these rights, including those provided in sports stadia. The Act places a duty on service providers to make adjustments to their premises, where reasonable, to make them more accessible. The Government are currently consulting on the timetable for implementing the rights of access.

The Football Licensing Authority already encourages football clubs to meet the standards set out in the Government's guide to safety at sports grounds and the Football Stadia Advisory Design Council's best practice guidelines, which both include recommendations relating to spectators with disabilities. The Football Trust is also keen to encourage clubs to aim for the highest possible standard for spectators with disabilities, and always takes particular account of facilities for such spectators when looking at applications from clubs for grant assistance towards new redevelopment projects.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which former public sector research establishments in his Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in his Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21943]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Lord Chancellor's Department has none.

Legal Aid (Marchioness Incident)

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what was the value of work covered by legal aid for work by senior counsel, junior counsel or instructing solicitor in the Marchioness case before commencement of representations by the grantees on 13 March 1995; [21978]

(2) what were the full terms, and date, of directions given by him, or on his behalf, in the context of the Marchioness legal aid grant under section 4(4)(a) of the Legal Aid Act 1968; [21976]

(3) what was the daily or hourly rate for senior counsel, junior counsel and the instructing solicitor in the Marchioness legal aid grant; [21980]

(4) what was the date of the grant of £200,000 given in legal aid to those involved in the Marchioness disaster; [21975]

(5) what is the total amount paid or to be paid under the grant for the Marchioness inquest as assessed by the Legal Aid Board when satisfied that the work, as outlined in the estimate, had been carried out; [21979]

(6) if the Marchioness legal aid grant (a) was intended to and (b) did cover payment for any work by senior counsel, junior counsel or instructing solicitor acting for the grantees before the commencement of representations from the grantees on 13 March 1995. [21977]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The direction given to the Legal Aid Board in respect of the Marchioness grant was made on 10 March 1995. The terms of the direction were as follows:

"To make a grant of up to £200,000 to the firm of Christian Fisher to cover the costs of representation for the families involved in the Marchioness disaster at the forthcoming inquest. The grant is to be made from the legal aid fund under the powers given by Section 4(2)(b) of the Legal Aid Act 1988."

A number of conditions were also made under the direction. These were: that no further public funds would be made available; that the grant would enable any of the families involved who wished to be represented to have representation; that representation would cover the whole of the inquest; that there would be no claims on the grant other than those channelled through the firm of Christian Fisher; and that the grant would be released only on the production of detailed bills of costs demonstrating that the work had been carried out.

The direction was given following representations made to the Lord Chancellor on behalf of the families concerned on 21 February 1995. The grant was a global figure, based on estimates submitted by the families' solicitors, for work by the solicitors, senior and junior counsel and two experts. The grant was intended to, and did, cover urgent preparatory work in the four days immediately preceding the start of the inquest on 13 March 1995.

On receipt of bills submitted by the solicitors, the Legal Aid Board satisfied itself that work up to the value of £200,000 had been carried out, and paid that sum on 30 June 1995 to the firm of Christian Fisher.

Frederick and Rosemary West

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make it his policy that any moneys raised by the sale of any book to be written by Mr. Geoffrey Mansell and commissioned by the Official Solicitor which uses copyright material from the West estate, or any other sums which drive from West memorabilia, will be used exclusively for the benefit of victims of the Wests. [22098]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Government have no involvement with the sale of rights in the West estate. The Official Solicitor, who is independent of Government, has been appointed as administrator of the West estate by the court. Like any other administrator, he is accountable to the court and, through the court to the beneficiaries.

The distribution of the estate and any income derived from it is a matter of law. The family of a murder victim might have a claim against an offender's estate.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22503]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Lord Chancellor is responsible for four executive agencies. As this is an operational matter, I have asked the chief executives of the Land Registry and of the Public Record Office to reply direct. The chief executives of the Public Trust Office and of the Court Service, which became executive agencies during the period specified in the question, will reply direct in respect of the period since their creation. In respect of the Lord Chancellor's Department and all other organisations for which he is responsible, no payments to staff or former staff for breaches of equal opportunities have been made over the last three years.

Letter from Michael Huebner to Mr. David Shaw, dated 27 March 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply in respect of the Court Service to your Question about equal opportunities breaches and tribunals.

Since the Court Service was established, on 3 April 1995, it has made no payments in respect of alleged equal opportunities breaches which did not proceed to tribunals or courts. The Court Service has paid £3,000 in respect of cases that did proceed to tribunals or courts.

Letter from Julia C. Lomas to Mr. David Shaw, dated 27 March 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your Parliamentary Question, listed on 21 March 1996 regarding amounts paid out in the current year and the two preceding years for equal opportunities breaches proceeding to tribunals or courts, and for alleged breaches which did not so proceed.

The figures are as follows:-

1993–4: Nil

1994–5: Nil

1995–6: Nil.

Letter from John Manthorpe to Mr. David Shaw, dated 27 March 1996:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question requesting details of monies paid out to staff or former staff in respect of alleged equal opportunities breaches.

I can inform you that no monies have been paid out by HM Land Registry in such circumstances.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. David Shaw, dated 27 March 1996:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply for the Public Record Office to your question about equal opportunities breaches.

The Public Record Office has made no payments to staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts or (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts, in (1) the current year or (2) the two previous years.

Family Credit

Mr. Madden: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what guidance he has issued to adjudicators concerning family credit in appeals relating to recourse to public funds and defining couples as being self-supporting in the long term referred to in respect of cases cited by the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, the hon. Member for Leeds, North-East (Mr. Kirkhope), during the Adjournment debate on 21 February, Official Report, columns 340–46; and if he will make a statement. [23074]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: None.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Publications

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what plans he has for ensuring that non-governmental publications previously available through the Vote Office will continue to be so available. [22413]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: Non-governmental publications which are published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office or for which HMSO is the selling agent can be ordered through the Vote Office, subject to certain exclusions such as works of reference. There are a few cases in which organisations have ceased to use HMSO. There are no immediate plans to alter the green form system, but a review may be appropriate if the problem of dispersed publishing becomes widespread.

"Commonwealth Year Book"

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what proposals there are to continue to make the "Commonwealth Year Book" available to hon. Members through the Vote Office. [22414]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: The green form system in the Vote Office applies only to publications which are available through Her Majesty's Stationery Office. I understand that the next edition of the "Commonwealth Year Book" is not to be published by HMSO. That decision is not a matter for the Committee.

Internet Exhibition

Mr. Waller: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to educational benefits to pupils gained through access to the Internet to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [23322]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 1 April to Friday 5 April 1996.

Health Education Authority Exhibition

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the Health Education Authority's campaign "Active For Life", to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [23089]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 3 June to Friday 7 June 1996.

DEFENCE

Works of Art

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which works of art held by his Department have been purchased by staff to use as gifts; to whom they were given; and if he will make a statement. [20911]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My Department knows of only one such purchase. Senior civil servants in my Department purchased the reproduction "A View of the Admiralty" to present to the right hon. Member for Epsom and Ewell Sir A. Hamilton on his departure from the post of Minister of State for the Armed Forces in 1993.

Army Careers Information Offices

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 February, Official Report, column 682, what definitions his Department applies to short-term retained offices; and if he will make a statement. [22500]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 29 February, Official Report, column 682, which explains that short-term retained offices are those that will remain open until April 1997.

Atomic Weapons Establishment, Aldermaston

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of decommissioning, in accordance with International Atomic Energy Agency guidelines, those facilities due to be replaced by the new capital works programme at AWE Aldermaston. [22357]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The cost will be substantial, reflecting the complexity and duration of the task. The work must be undertaken in a careful and progressive manner and in conformity with all relevant guidelines and legislation and the requirements of the regulatory bodies. However, detailed costs of the defence nuclear programme have been regarded by successive Governments as inappropriate for public disclosure.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers and types of Tornado aircraft in service with the RAF, indicating in each case which numbers and types have (a) global positioning systems integration, (b) "smart" weapons guidance and control systems, (c) ground radar suppression systems, (d) all-weather night navigation systems and (e) electronic reconnaissance systems. [22586]

Mr. Soames: The strength of the RAF, broken down by aircraft type and number is listed in the annual "Statement on the Defence Estimates," a copy of which is in the Library of the House. It is not my Department's policy to provide detailed information on specific operational capabilities.

Ammunition

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the contract for 81 mm mortar ammunition. [22541]

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to place an order to supply the Army with 81 mm mortar ammunition; and if he will make a statement. [22977]

Mr. Arbuthnot: There are three separate tenders for 81 mm ammunition in progress. The high explosive and illuminating rounds are subject to competitive tendering and a non-competitive contract for the smoke round is presently being negotiated with Royal Ordnance. I expect the three contracts to be in place by the end of April.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was his Department's total expenditure on explosives, propellants, and related ammunition and products over the last five years; and what proportion of this was procured from (a) Royal Ordnance and (b) overseas sources. [22589]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I will write to the hon. Member.

Al-Yamamah Deal

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Al-Yamamah deal between Britain and Saudi Arabia included electric shock batons. [22708]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my predecessor to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 17 January 1995, Official Report, column 452.

Navy Accommodation

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) officer and (b) other rank accommodation for each individual (i) barracks, (ii) airfield, (iii) shore naval base and (iv) Royal Marine base in Scotland. [22713]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 25 March 1996]: Single living accommodation at sites in Scotland is shown in the following table:

Cyprus

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the recent shooting incident that took place in Limassol, Cyprus that involved a British soldier in a local bar. [22883]

Mr. Soames: The recent shooting of a service man in Limassol is currently under investigation by the Republic of Cyprus police and service police. I cannot, therefore, comment at this stage.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action is to be taken by his Department to seek to improve the general behaviour of British military personnel based in Cyprus when they are off duty with special reference to visiting resorts on the island of Cyprus. [22881]

Mr. Soames: My Department attaches great importance to ensuring that the very good relations which exist between service personnel in Cyprus and the local population are maintained. All service personnel are briefed on the importance of this on arrival and the message is regularly reinforced.

If difficulties do arise firm measures are taken. Specific areas or individual premises are placed out of bounds from time to time. For example, the area of Ayia Napa remains out of bounds in the wake of the death of Louise Jensen in September 1994, and the tourist "strip" in Limassol and Larnaca are subject to a 1 am curfew for service personnel and dependants. The need to increase or reduce the out of bounds area is kept under constant review. Infringement of the rules is a punishable offence resulting in stiff penalties for the individual, ranging from fines, through loss of rank, to being sent home.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the number of British military personnel who have been charged with being drunk and disorderly in Cyprus in each of the last three years. [22882]

Mr. Soames: This information is not held centrally and be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what guidelines are currently in force in his Department and its executive agencies relating to competitive tendering and the use of single negotiated tenders; on what grounds single negotiated tenders can be used; and what procedures are in place within his Department to ensure that the use of single negotiated tenders in competitive tendering processes is justified in all cases. [22853]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My Department has a number of formal internal guidance documents which detail the procedures to be followed on all aspects of defence contracting, including the selection of the procurement route most likely to produce best value for money. These are supplemented where necessary by occasional memoranda on developments in best practice or updated guidance on specific aspects. A process of delegated authorities constrains the selection of non-competitiveness procurement strategies to instances where the justification for these has been rigorously examined and approval obtained from senior staff, including Ministers in high-value cases. Arguments that may be considered persuasive in support of a non-competitive procurement strategy are the absence of user rights on design information, technical or commercial risk or operational urgency. While the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and the Meteorological Office are responsible for the placing and administration of their own contracts, they none the less receive copies of MOD procurement guidance and their procedures are consistent with the description given.

Export Applications

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department has advised companies since 1987 on ways to alter descriptions of goods on export applications to ensure that licences are granted, when previous applications for export or transhipment licences for the same goods have been refused. [22971]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I know of no instance where my Department has acted improperly in this manner.

Courts Martial

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army and Air Force court martial appeals reached, and were decided by, the Court of Appeal at the Royal Courts of Justice in 1995; and when reports of these appeals will be publicly available. [23017]

Mr. Soames: Seven Army and three RAF court martial appeals were heard in 1995 by the Court-Martial Appeal Court, the members of which are civilian judges of the Court of Appeal. Copies of the judgments should now be available from the Court-Martial Appeal Court office.

Scott Inquiry

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to paragraphs D1.27 and D.1.28 of the Scott report, if he will list those matters relating to the work of his Department since 1979 classified as matters about which successive Administrations have refused to answer. [17419]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 26 February 1996]: Matters about which successive administrations had refused to answer questions was last set out in a memorandum by the Principal Clerk to the Table Office in 1972—appendix 9 to the report of the Select Committee on Parliamentary Questions, July 1972 HC 393. As far as I am aware, there has been no such classification since 1979.

The present Government's policy is to be as open as possible with Parliament, withholding information only when disclosure would not be in the public interest, which is decided in accordance with parliamentary convention, the law and any relevant Government code of practice.

Military Training

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors underlay the decisions to provide United Kingdom military training assistance to (a) Indonesia, (b) Guatemala and (c) Sudan between 1 January 1991 and 31 December 1995. [22696]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 26 March 1996]: The military training assistance provided to Indonesia, Guatemala and Sudan between 1 January 1991 and 31 December 1995 was in support of defence and wider foreign policy aims.

Army Tanks

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many tanks the Army possessed in (a) 1979 and (b) 1996. [17758]

Mr. Arbuthnot [pursuant to his reply, 28 February 1996, c. 557]: I regret that my answer which gave details of tank numbers erroneously stated that at 1 January 1996 the Army possessed 470 main battle tanks of which 350 were deployed in operational units. I can now confirm that on that date the Army possessed 513 main battle tanks, of which 351 were deployed in operational units.

Beef Purchases

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much beef was purchased by his Department in each of the last five years; how much of this was British; if he will list the other countries from which his Department purchases beef together with the quantity; and what plans he has to review his policy in respect of purchasing British beef. [23000]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Since 1 October 1994, the supply of food to the armed forces has been the responsibility of the Navy, Army and Air Force Institute. My Department does not specify the source from which NAAFI should obtain beef—or any other meat—but the majority is supplied from south America and until recently some from EC intervention stocks. The use of British beef joints is therefore extremely small, but a range of beef products—for example mince, offal and beefburgers produced from British beef—is provided to the armed forces.

Prior to October 1994, beef was purchased directly by my Department but no records were kept of the quantities sourced by a particular country, although the majority was imported from south America.

In view of yesterday's announcement, there is no perceived reason to change existing arrangements.

Equipment Exports

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of state for Defence what arrangements he is making to examine the nature and extent of information currently provided on the export of defence equipment as recommended in Sir Richard Scott's report; and if he will make a statement. [23294]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My Department is leading the review recommended by Sir Richard Scott. It will examine the nature and extent of information currently provided, and will take account of the industrial, employment and diplomatic implications of any change in the longstanding parliamentary convention governing the disclosure of information. We shall be seeking the views of a wide range of interested parties and will report back to the House before the summer recess.

Hon. Members and others wishing to comment on any issue that the review might cover should write to:

Mrs. Mollie Field
Export Information Review
Room 0206
Ministry of Defence
Main Building
Whitehall
London SW1A 2HB.

Copies of the document already placed in the Library of the House which sets out the current position in relation to informing Parliament about the export of defence equipment can be provided on request.

The closing date for contributions to the review process will be 24 May 1996.

Minesweeping Exercise (Firth of Clyde)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, during the forthcoming minesweeping exercise in and around the firth of Clyde, Royal Navy vessels will carry fishery liaison officers; and if he will make a statement. [22453]

Mr. Soames: I am pleased to say that fishery liaison officers will indeed be embarked on Royal Navy vessels during the initial minesweeping serials conducted in the new exercise areas in and around the firth of Clyde, following agreement with local fishermen's representatives. Their role will be to develop mutual understanding between the mine countermeasures staff and the fishermen, and to ensure that both may go about their business safely and with the minimum of disruption.

Civil Servants (Secondment)

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the individuals, by name, civil service post and receiving company, who are on temporary secondment from his Department to industry as part of the continuing programme of interchange of staff with the private sector. [22792]

Mr. Arbuthnot: There are 26 MOD civil servants who are currently seconded from MOD to industry as part of the Ministry's interchange with industry programme. The list of receiving companies or organisations, with the civil service grade(s) of their secondee(s), is as follows:

Organisation	Grade number
Involvement and Participation Association	Grade 6 x 1
Prince's Youth Business Trust	Grade 7 x 1

It is MOD policy not to name individual civil servants who may be working outside the Ministry.

Helicopters (Crossmaglen)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from (a) sporting organisations and (b) others about helicopter operations from the base in Crossmaglen in Northern Ireland. [23065]

Mr. Soames: Representations are received from time to time about helicopter operations in Northern Ireland but no record of these is kept centrally. Helicopters are essential to the Army acting in support of the police in Northern Ireland. Every effort is made to minimise any nuisance or inconvenience to the public.

Attack Helicopter Contract

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to place a contract for the new attack helicopter for the Army; and if he will make a statement. [23664]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Following the satisfactory conclusion of negotiations, I am pleased to announce that a contract has been signed with GKN Westland Helicopters for 67 Apache attack helicopters, each to be equipped with the Longbow fire control radar and powered by Rolls-Royce RTM322 engines. Apache will replace the Army Air Corps' Lynx anti-tank helicopter.

Around 180 UK companies are involved in the order. Hunting Engineering and Shorts of Belfast will be involved in supplying the weapons.

To ensure we have the optimum mix of flexibility and fire power, 48 of the aircraft will be deployed to the frontline in three regiments of 16 aircraft—two with 24 Air Mobile Brigade at Wattisham and one with three (UK) Division at Dishforth. These regiments will also provide support to 1 (UK) Division and the Royal Marines. Nine aircraft will be based at Middle Wallop for training and trials and one at Boscombe Down for trials. The remaining nine aircraft will be held at royal naval aircraft yard, Fleetlands as a peacetime attrition reserve. A regiment from 24 Air Mobile Brigade will form the core of the lead aviation battle group of the joint rapid deployment force.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to reply to the question from the hon. Member for Cynon Valley of 26 February relating to matters classified as ones which successive Administrations have refused to answer. [23059]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Today.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many questions were tabled to his Department in each Session since 1987–88; how many were not answered on the grounds of disproportionate cost; what percentage of the total number of questions this represented; how many were not answered on the grounds that the information was not centrally available; and what percentage of the total number of questions this represented. [21148]

Mr. Boswell: The number of questions tabled to this Department in each Session since 1987–88 is as follows:

Session	Number of questions tabled
1987–88	2,536
1988–89	3,001
1989–90	2,852
1990–91	1,618
1991–92	790
1992–93	2,697
1993–94	1,925
1994–95	1,846
1995–96[1]	624

[1] As at 20 March 1996.

These figures have been produced from the POLIS database (Parliamentary On-Line Information System). These figures reflect the number of questions answered and should be treated as indicative only; because of certain factors complete accuracy on departmental activity cannot be provided.

The rest of the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost, but is a matter of public record.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department has spent in total in answering parliamentary questions in each parliamentary Session since 1989–90. [22878]

Mr. Boswell: This Department does not calculate the data requested, and it could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Fisheries Conservation

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to modify the regulations governing the western waters effort limitation scheme; and if he will make a statement. [22451]

Mr. Baldry: None. The arrangements for regulating and monitoring fishing effort in western waters are set out in Council regulations (EEC) Nos. 685/95, 2027/95 and 2870/95. These regulations provide for the adoption of further measures including catch reporting, integrated computerised control systems and technical conservation. Detailed rules for recording effort in EU logbooks are set out in Commission regulation (EC) No. 2945/95.

EU Assistance

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide details of the agricultural projects which have been approved in the south-west objective 5b area. [23568]

Mrs. Browning: The European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund provides assistance to agriculture and food industries in the south-west objective 5b area. This area takes in Cornwall, the Isles of Scilly, parts of Devon and parts of west Somerset.

Under the programme MAFF is able to provide support which in turn draws in EAGGF money from Europe. Assistance is generally available in support of farm tourism, agricultural and horticultural development and diversification, protection and enhancement of the environment and the generation of energy from alternative sources by the agriculture industry. In addition, there is a special package for the Isles of Scilly.

The first EAGGF projects under this programme were approved in March 1995. In the 12 months which have followed, a total of 25 projects have been approved and these will lead to the eventual investment of more than £13 million in the objective 5b area. The projects approved vary from small schemes, such as that to develop a market for farm cheese, to a multi-million pound project to promote farm tourism in the whole area. Geographically, they span the objective 5b area from horticultural enterprises in the Isles of Scilly to timber products on Exmoor and there is no part of the region which will not benefit. I am very pleased with the interest shown and hope that many more projects will be approved in the future.

Full details of the approved projects are as follows:

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Equipment and Furniture

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the cost and number of items of equipment and furniture that (a) have been stolen and (b) are otherwise unaccounted for from the Cabinet Office and its agencies in each of the past five years, listing by name any such items valued at £5,000 or more, and showing information technology material separately. [21703]

The Prime Minister: For this purpose, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 26 March.

Duchy Lands and Assets

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if the lands and assets of the Duchies of Lancaster and Cornwall are the property of Her Majesty's Government. [22811]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 March 1996]: No. Formal title to the lands of the Duchy of Lancaster is vested in the sovereign and of the Duchy of Cornwall in the Prince of Wales. However, neither the sovereign nor the Prince of Wales is able to dispose of the estates' capital; they are entitled only to the annual income.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22513]

The Prime Minister: For these purposes my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service on 26 March.

SCOTLAND

Care in the Community

15. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding his policy of care in the community; and if he will make a statement. [21334]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We have received many comments on many aspects of the policy.

NHS Trust Contracts (Glasgow)

16. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many contracts have been awarded by NHS trust in the Greater Glasgow health board area following the competitive tendering process. [21335]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Forty-six.

Depopulation (Hawick)

17. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make an official visit to Hawick to discuss the implications of depopulation in the area; and if he will make a statement. [21336]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I would be pleased to consider such an invitation.

Schools

18. Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average number of schools for each local authority director of education in Scotland. [21337]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Each authority has one director of education. However, on the information available, the ratio of senior officials to schools varies between 1:2 to 1:7.

Electoral Registers

19. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average size of the electoral register for parliamentary constituencies in Scotland. [21338]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The answer is 55,043.

Education Policy

20. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss future education policy; and if he will make a statement. [21339]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such a meeting.

Local Government Expenditure

21. Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on local government expenditure. [21340]

Mr. Kynoch: Local government expenditure in Scotland has increased by almost 20 per cent. in real terms since 1985–86, and is 30 per cent. higher per head of population than in England.

Deprived Areas (Education)

22. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to give priority treatment to areas of deprivation with particular reference to education. [21341]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The 1996–97 local government finance settlement makes provision for 1,000 additional teachers for areas of deprivation. In addition the Scottish Office-led urban partnership initiatives have established education strategies.

Flood Protection (Tay Valley)

24. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about a flood protection scheme for the Tay valley; and if he will make a statement. [21343]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend has received no representations about a flood protection scheme for the Tay valley. The Perth flood prevention scheme, which aims to protect the city of Perth, has been advertised and submitted to him for confirmation. A number of objections are being addressed by Tayside regional council.

The regional councils at present, and the new unitary councils from 1 April 1996, have permissive powers under the Flood Prevention (Scotland) Act 1961 to carry out flood prevention schemes for the protection of non-agricultural land. Following the 1993 Tay floods, Tayside regional council commissioned a study of the entire Tay catchment. It will pass information from this to the new Perth and Kinross council regarding possible flood protection work for rural communities in the Tay. This will enable the new council to prioritise work that it considers necessary.

Defence Orders

25. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what United Kingdom defence orders have been gained by Scottish-based companies in the last 12 months. [21344]

Mr. Kynoch: The latest available statistics show that the value of Ministry of Defence procurement orders placed with Scottish companies in 1993–94 was £550 million.

Inward Investment

27. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of Scottish jobs dependent on inward investment. [21346]

Mr. Kynoch: In 1994, there were an estimated 83,000 persons directly employed in foreign-owned manufacturing companies in Scotland. However, the estimated total number of jobs dependent on these foreign-owned manufacturing companies is estimated at almost 165,000.

Community Hospitals (Grampian)

28. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman of Grampian health board of discuss community hospitals. [21347]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend and I meet health board chairmen regularly to discuss all matters of current interest.

Heart Disease

29. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress in reducing the incidence of coronary heart disease in Scotland. [21348]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The target set in "Scotland's Health—A Challenge To Us All", the national policy statement issued in 1992, is to reduce mortality from coronary heart disease by 40 per cent. between 1990 and 2000 in persons under 65. By the end of 1994, a substantial and encouraging reduction of some 21 per cent. had been achieved.

Crime

30. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met chief constables to discuss crime. [21349]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend met chief constables on 20 January.

Drugs (Money Laundering)

31. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of legitimate businesses which are used for the laundering of money from illegal drug trafficking; and if he will make a statement. [21350]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is not possible to estimate the number of businesses which are currently being used for the laundering of money from drug trafficking. Where, in the course of their investigation, the police have reason to believe a business has been used as a front for money laundering activities, they will bring the matter to the attention of the procurator fiscal.

Severe Weather Assistance

32. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what claims he has now received from local authorities for financial assistance resulting from problems caused by the severe weather at new year; and if he will make a statement. [21351]

Mr. Kynoch: To date, 40 local authorities have responded to the Scottish Office's request for information on the extent and nature of expenditure incurred as a result of severe weather at the turn of the year. Of these, eight are nil returns and the remainder are being examined to establish whether the scale of expenditure would justify the triggering of the Bellwin scheme.

Salmon and Trout Fishing

33. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet representatives of the fishing industry to discuss offshore drift netting for salmon and sea trout. [21352]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: I will be meeting representatives of the Association of Scottish District Salmon Fishery Boards on 3 April.

Regional Selective Assistance

34. Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of objective 1 projects in the highlands and islands. [21353]

Mr. Kynoch: Since the start of the programme, 255 European regional development fund and 554 European social fund projects have been approved for funding along with a further 20 supported by the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund financial instrument of fisheries guidance. The total expenditure committed, including match funding from project sponsors, amounts to around £308 million. This is made up by £230 million, ERDF; £44 million, ESF; and £34 million, EAGGF-FIFG. A further bidding round is under way and funding decisions will be made in June of this year.

Cabinet Committees

35. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which Cabinet committees he and his colleagues attend on a regular basis; and if he will make a statement on the responsibilities of each Committee. [21354]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) on 18 July 1995, Official Report, columns 1005–12.

Higher Education Students

36. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the change in the number of students in higher education between (a) June 1970 and February 1974, (b) 1974 and 1979 and (c) 1979 and 1991. [21355]

Mr. Raymonds Robertson: The number of full-time higher education students for the years requested is as follows[1]:

	Number
Number of full-time HE students in 1970–71	57,656
Number of full-time HE students in 1974–75	66,136
Change in number of full-time HE students between 1970–71 and 1974–75	an increase of 15 per cent.
Number of full-time HE students in 1974–75	66,136
Number of full-time HE students in 1979–80	70,008
Change in number of full-time HE students between 1974–75 and 1979–80	an increase of 6 per cent.
Number of full-time HE students in 1980–81	72,152
Number of full-time HE students in 1991–92	108,079
Change in number of full-time HE students between 1980–81 and 1991–92	an increase of 50 per cent.

[1] Figures for 1991 and 1979 are not directly comparable, 1980 is the first year for which comparable figures are available.

Assisted Places Scheme

37. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has for enlargement of the assisted places scheme. [21356]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ayr (Mr. Gallie) on 29 February, Official Report, columns 622–23, setting out our proposals for increasing the number of assisted places in the next school year to 3,500.

Intergovernmental Conference

38. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contribution he has made to the Government's White Paper on the forthcoming intergovernmental conference; and if he will make a statement. [21357]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's policy on the intergovernmental conference was determined by the Cabinet. I was therefore fully involved in decisions on policy and fully consulted on the terms of the White Paper.

Housing

39. Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of Scottish Homes to discuss housing provision and need in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [21358]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: My right hon. Friend and I meet representatives of Scottish Homes from time to time to discuss a range of issues. I last met members of the board on 6 March.

Fire Service

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on Government funding for the fire service in 1996–97. [21342]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend received a number of representations from local authorities, fire service organisations and members of the public before 1996–97 revenue budgets for the fire brigades were determined.

Economic Prospects

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about Scotland's future economic outlook. [21345]

Mr. Kynoch: The economic outlook for Scotland is very encouraging. Independent forecasts are predicting healthy levels of gross domestic product growth, falling unemployment and rising employment both this year and next.

Disabled Students

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in what circumstances the college boards in Scotland will be expected to administer the travel expenses of students with disabilities after April 1996; what additional funding will be provided to cover these costs; and from what source it will come. [22288]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Students, including those with disabilities, attending incorporated colleges of further education will be eligible to apply for assistance with travel expenses from the bursary scheme operated by the college at which they are studying. A total of £45 million has been transferred to the colleges of further education for the purpose of operating the bursary scheme. Bursary awards can include an element to cover travel expenses.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of students with disabilities in Glasgow who will have their travel costs provided for by the new unitary authority after April 1996. [22296]

Mr. Robertson [holding answer 26 March 1996]: Information on the number of students with disabilities who seek assistance with their travel costs is not held centrally. From 1 April 1996 students attending incorporated colleges should approach their college about a bursary award, which can include an element in respect of travel costs. Students attending non-incorporated colleges should contact their new unitary authorities which will be responsible for their bursary awards.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the measures taken in Scotland following the recommendations of the 1995 world government meeting on land-based sources of marine pollution; and if he will make a statement. [22228]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The UK delegation took a leading part in the conference organised by the UN Environmental Programme in Washington DC between 23 October and 3 November 1995, which adopted the global programme of action for the protection of the marine environment from land-based activities. This programme of action reflects the approach being adopted throughout the United Kingdom, and by the other states in north-west Europe, to this task. Implementation in Scotland will therefore be achieved by continuing our present policies.

Fishing (Firth of Clyde)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet, in the near future, representatives of the Clyde Fishermen's Association in order to discuss commercial fishing activities in and around firth of Clyde; and if he will make a statement. [22452]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: I was due to meet representatives of the Clyde Fishermen's Association in Aberdeen on 14 March. However, as a result of the tragedy at Dunblane on 13 March I was unfortunately unable to keep that appointment. I expect the meeting to be rescheduled for a mutually convenient date in the near future.

Dunblane Incident (Criminal Injuries Compensation)

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he has made for those who may be entitled to make a criminal injuries compensation claim following the Dunblane incident. [23570]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This is a matter for the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board. The board has already responded to a number of direct inquiries and has made arrangements with Victim Support (Scotland) and others for advice to be available locally.

I understand from the board that advice is given on request on the differences between compensation under the present scheme and under the new scheme, which will replace the present scheme on 1 April for all applications received on or after that date. This advice is available from the board to any potential applicant and their representative who might seek assistance in determining whether application in respect of injuries caused before 1 April should be made under the present or under the new scheme.

More generally, I also understand that the board has made arrangements to enable applications to be received up until midnight on 31 March.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department have a statutory base, and which (a) publish their advice to Government, (b) publish an annual report and (c) lay an annual report before Parliament (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [20093]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 12 March 1996]: The following bodies have a statutory base:

Advisory Committee on Sites of Special Scientific Interest
Ancient Monuments Board for Scotland
Building Standards Advisory Committee
Children's Panel Advisory Committees
Consultative Committee on Freshwater Fisheries
Extra Parliamentary Panel
General Teaching Council for Scotland
Hill Farming Advisory Committee for Scotland
Historic Buildings Council for Scotland
Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Scotland
Police Advisory Board
Scottish Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council
Scottish Industrial Development Advisory Board
Scottish Police College Board of Governors
Scottish Records Advisory Council
Scottish Valuation Advisory Council
Secretary of State's (Electricity) Fisheries Committee.

The following publish their advice to the Government:

(i) under a statutory requirement
General Teaching Council for Scotland
Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Scotland
Scottish Records Advisory Council
Secretary of State's (Electricity) Fisheries Committee.

(ii) voluntarily
Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum
Secretary of State's Advisory Committee on Scotland's Travelling People.

The following publish an annual report:

(i) under a statutory requirement
Ancient Monuments Board for Scotland
General Teaching Council for Scotland
Historic Buildings Council for Scotland
Scottish Industrial Development Advisory Board
Scottish Valuation Advisory Council
Secretary of State's (Electricity) Fisheries Committee.

(ii) voluntarily
Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland
Post Qualification Education Board for Health Service Pharmacists in Scotland
Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum
Scottish Records Advisory Council
Scottish Standing Committee for the Calculation fo Residual Values of Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs.

The following lay an annual report before Parliament:

(i) under a statutory requirement
Ancient Monuments Board for Scotland
Historic Buildings Council for Scotland
Scottish Industrial Development Advisory Board
Scottish Records Advisory Council
Secretary of State's (Electricity) Fisheries Committee
Scottish Valuation Advisory Council.

(ii) voluntarily
Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland
Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the advisory non-departmental public bodies sponsored by his Department (a) hold public meetings, (b) conduct public consultation exercises, (c) conduct consultation exercises with outside commercial interests, (d) publish a register of members' interests, (e) publish agendas for meetings and (f) publish the minutes of meetings (i) under a statutory requirement and (ii) voluntarily. [20110]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 12 March 1996]: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

(a) children's panel advisory committees hold public meetings on a voluntary basis.

(b) The following conduct public consultation exercises:

(i) under a statutory requirement

Local Government Boundary Commission for Scotland
Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Scotland.

(ii) voluntarily

Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum.

(c) The Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum voluntarily consults outside commercial interests.

(d) Nil.

(e) and (f) The General Teaching Council for Scotland and children's panel advisory committees voluntarily publish agendas and minutes of meetings.

WALES

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made to reduce the incidence of coronary heart disease in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [21123]

Mr. Richards: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Swindon (Mr. Coombs), on 18 March, Official Report, column 1.

Wheelchairs

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he plans (a) to introduce the scheme to provide powered indoor wheelchairs for severely disabled people and (b) to introduce a voucher scheme for the purchase of wheelchairs for the disabled. [20913]

Mr. Richards: In the light of my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Health's recent announcement about the provision of powered wheelchairs and a wheelchair voucher scheme, I am currently examining the implications of introducing similar arrangements in Wales.

Hospital Casualty Units

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for the future development of hospital casualty units in Wales; what assessment he has made of the Audit Commission report; and if he will make a statement. [21386]

Mr. Richards: The future development of hospital accident units will be judged against the criteria of clinical safety, ease of access and value for money.

The Audit Commission's report "By Accident or Design—Improving A&E Services in England and Wales" is currently being considered. It will undoubtedly aid the Department's review of accident and emergency services throughout Wales.

The recently launched patients charter for Wales anticipated a number of the Audit Commission's recommendations and others are being considered for future editions of the charter.

Cancer

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people have been diagnosed as having cancer in (a) South Glamorgan and (b) Mid Glamorgan and Gwent in the last 10 years; what was the percentage change in each year; and if he will make a statement. [21873]

Mr. Richards: The number of malignant neoplasms registered in each year since 1981 and the percentage change in each year is given in the following table. Figures for 1991 and later years are not yet complete.

	South Glamorgan		Mid Glamorgan		Gwent
	Number of registrations	Percentage change	Number of registrations	Percentage change	Number of registrations	Percentage change

Health Authority Managers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total pay bill for health authorities' chief executives and general managers in Wales for the year ended 31 March 1990. [21725]

Mr. Richards: There were no chief executive posts in health authorities in Wales in 1990. The salary bill for NHS general managers in Wales in 1989–90 was £508,000.

Source: The summarised accounts of the health authorities in Wales and of the family health services authorities in Wales for the year ended 31 March 1990.

General Practitioners

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what basis he decides if there are sufficient people being trained to work as general medical practitioners in Wales and whether adequate resources are being invested by the Welsh Office in the training of medical personnel in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [22201]

Mr. Hague: It is the Government's policy to secure an adequate supply of appropriately trained doctors in each sector and specialty. This is achieved through advisory and planning mechanisms at a UK and Wales level.

The medical workforce standing advisory committee considers the longer-term need for doctors and for making recommendations on the intake of medical schools. In 1995, the committee recommended an increase of 11 per cent. in UK medical school intakes by 2000 to a total of 4,970. The Government have accepted that recommendation.

The Welsh Office is involved in UK work force planning through its representation on the Advisory Group on medical education and staffing. The advisory group is currently examining the issue of recruitment and retention of GPs. My officials also have regular discussions with professional educationalists in Wales to ensure that the provision of training for intending GPs is appropriate.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what dates (a) he (b) fellow Ministers at the Welsh Office met representatives of the Medical Practices Committee to discuss the adequacy of the number of general practitioners throughout Wales. [22200]

Mr. Hague: My officials met representatives of the Medical Practices Committee on 31 October 1995, and will meet them again on 28 March 1996.

Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much funding Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin received from his Department in (a) 1990, (b) 1992, (c) 1994 and (d) 1995; and if he will make a statement. [22401]

Mr. Richards: Funding by the Welsh Office to Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin is shown as follows: the figures are expressed in terms of financial years.

Mudiad Ysgolion Meithrin: Funding by the Welsh Office

	Funding under the child and family services grant scheme £	Section 26 of the Development of Rural Wales Act 1976 £	Section 21 of the Education Act 1980 £	Total £
1990–91	127,751	358,250	15,000	501,001

1992–93	152,872	457,000	—	609,872
1993–94	152,872	473,544	12,900	639,316
1994–95	152,872	537,000	5,306	695,178
1995–96	152,772	537,000	—	689,872

Intensive Care Units

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many beds there are in each intensive care unit in Wales; and if he will make a statement; [22399]

(2) how many hospitals in Wales have intensive care units; and if he will make a statement; [22402]

(3) what is the annual cost per intensive care bed in each hospital in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [22400]

Mr. Richards: There are 17 hospitals in Wales with intensive care beds. These are as follows:

Hospital	Number of intensive care beds in 1995[1]
Princess of Wales, Bridgend	5
Bronglais General	2
East Glamorgan General	6
Ysbyty Glan Clwyd	4
Llandough	5
Prince Philip, Llanelli	3
Morriston	8
Neath General	1
Nevill Hall	2
Prince Charles, Merthyr	4
Royal Gwent	5
University Hospital of Wales Healthcare NHS Trust:
—University Hospital	7
—Cardiff Royal Infirmary	5
West Wales General	2
Withybush General	3
Ysbyty Wrexham Maelor	4
Ysbyty Gwynedd	8
Total	74

[1] General intensive care beds only. No information is held centrally on the cost of intensive care beds in each hospital.

All health authorities in Wales have been asked to review the number of intensive care and high dependency beds needed in their areas and to take action to address any shortfalls identified.

Arts Council Funding

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much funding the Arts Council for Wales received from his Department in 1994–95; and if he will make a statement. [22460]

Mr. Richards: The Arts Council of Wales received a total grant of £13,696,000 in 1994–95.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of students in further and higher education in Wales; and what is the current ratio of school leavers to the number entering higher education. [22368]

Mr. Richards: The number of student enrolment at further and higher education institutions in Wales for 1994–95 was 188,681 (provisional). In 1993–94, 9,100 pupils aged 17 and over left school in Wales, of these 64 per cent.—5,860—entered higher education.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with further education colleges on the amalgamation of existing colleges in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [22370]

Mr. Richards: None. It is for the governing bodies of further education colleges to consider mergers and, if appropriate, put a proposal to the Further Education Funding Council for Wales.

Data Gathering

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he intends to improve the statistical and data-gathering functions of the Welsh Office, with special reference to those areas for which his Department has specific responsibility. [22994]

Mr. Hague: The statistical and data-gathering activities of the Welsh Office support research and decision making within the Department and beyond. These activities will continue to be developed, with an emphasis on meeting the specific needs of users of statistics while keeping the burden of form filling to a minimum. A new publication series, the "Digest of Welsh Local Area Statistics", providing statistics for the new local authority areas, has just been introduced.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list in constant 1996 prices (i) the amount of expenditure and planned expenditure and (ii) the percentage of expenditure and planned expenditure spent by the Welsh Development Agency on (a) Wales as a whole, (b) the north division, (c) the south division and (d) the west division in 1996–97 and each of the preceding three years indicating the percentage change for each category over the whole period; [22698]

(2) what was (a) the amount and (b) the percentage of the Welsh Development Agency's international and marketing budget spent in 1995–96 on promoting inward investment for (i) the north division, (ii) the south division, (iii) the west division and (iv) Wales as a whole. [22699]

Mr. Hague: I will arrange for the chief executive of the agency to write to the hon. Member and for a copy of his letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Oil Pollution (Sea Empress Incident)

Sir Wyn Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to the oral statement made by the Secretary of State for Transport on 22 February, Official Report, columns 493–96, what arrangements he has made to evaluate the environmental impact of the Sea Empress oil spill. [23508]

Mr. Hague: In consultation with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, I have appointed Professor Ron Edwards to chair an independent steering group of 11 experts in the marine environment, to co-ordinate the environmental evaluation of the impact of the Sea Empress oil spill. This will include consideration of the response, clean-up procedures and the techniques employed following the oil spill. The group will also ensure that a comprehensive set of relevant environmental data is obtained; it will assess the overall impact of the incident on environmental resources of the area affected—including fisheries, agriculture, amenity and wildlife; as well as passing any information relevant to human health to public health authorities for assessment.

Professor Edwards, who chaired the national parks review panel from 1988 to 1991, is currently a member of the Environment Agency. The first meeting of the group will be held on 2 April at the Welsh Office in Cardiff. I have asked Professor Edwards to provide me with a report within 18 months, which will be made public. Interim reports, which will also be made public, will also be produced.

Apart from Professor Edwards, the 11 members of the steering group I have appointed are—Mr. David Bedborough, marine pollution control unit; Dr. Malcolm Smith, Countryside Council for Wales; Dr. John Portmann, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food; Dr. Charlie Pattinson, National Rivers Authority, Welsh Region; Mr. Nic Wheeler, Pembrokeshire Coast national park; Mr. David Seal, Pembrokeshire county council; Mr. Roy Bunce, Department of the Environment, European wildlife division; Dr. Allan Elliot, university of North Wales, Bangor, department of marine sciences; Mr. Arthur Hacking, ADAS, agricultural science advisers to the Welsh Office; Dr. Ian White, managing director, International Tanker Owners Pollution Federation; Dr. Havard Prosser, Welsh Office scientific adviser.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open Government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [21834]

Mr. Richards [holding answer 21 March 1996]: All national health service bodies, as defined by the Cabinet Office, in Wales are subject to investigation by the Health Service Commissioner for Wales (ombudsman), and scrutiny by both the Audit Commissioner and the National Audit Office.

The principles of open government are incorporated in the code of practice on openness in the national health service with which all national health service bodies must comply. The principles of the citizens charter apply to national health service bodies and have been incorporated in the charter for patients in Wales. The Welsh Office Health Department monitors the performance of all national health service bodies in Wales.

HEALTH

Health Authorities (Capital Spending)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the capital spending by health authority in each of the last five years. [21670]

Mr. Horam: This information will be placed in the Library.

Finance

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which (i) regional and (ii) district health authority made the payments amounting to £579,000 to support staff relocation which the NHS executive deemed to be beyond its powers. [21996]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 21 March 1996]: The figure relates to payments made by the former Yorkshire regional health authority and South Birmingham district health authority.

Relocation

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the payments made by regional and district health authorities to staff to support relocation by (a) each year since 1990–91, (b) authority and (c) grade to staff. [21998]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 21 March 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 8 March 1995, column 242.

NHS Contracts

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued, and when, to NHS personnel on contract prepayments. [22741]

Mr. Horam: Relevant guidance was set out in the "National Health Service Trusts Finance Manual", part 3, chapter 9, issued in February 1992. This was followed up with a letter to finance directors in March 1994, FDL (94)24. Copies of the documents are available in the Library.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued, and when, to NHS personnel on the letting of contracts, (a) without tender and (b) non-competitively; and in what circumstances such procedures are permitted. [22740]

Mr. Horam: National health service contracting authorities are all aware of their obligations under the statutory rules relating to public procurement. Where a contract comes within scope of the relevant regulations, there are only limited circumstances where a negotiated procedure not involving competition is allowable.

In its guidance on the drawing up of standing financial instructions, the Department has made it clear that contracts of a more than minimal level should be based on competitive tender and any waiving of this requirement should be subject to board level approval based on overall value for money. The reasons for such decisions should be recorded for audit scrutiny.

Consultancy Fees

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been paid in (a) consultancy and (b) outsourcing fees and contract payments by each regional health authority in each year since 1992. [22747]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Treatment Guidelines

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) who is responsible for informing a patient when cancer treatment has been carried out on them for conditions that were subsequently diagnosed as benign; [22593]

(2) who is responsible for informing patients that treatments have been carried out on them without prior diagnostic confirmation of their condition. [22584]

Mr. Horam: This is a matter for local agreement within the trust.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) who is responsible for issuing guidelines in respect of the circumstances in which laparoscopic vaginal hysterectomy for endometrial cancer may be attempted; and to what extent such guidelines are available to (a) patients, (b) members of the public and (c) Parliament; [22596]

(2) who is responsible for issuing guidelines relating to procedures involving radical cancer surgery to the vulva; and to what extent these guidelines are accessible to (a) patients, (b) the public and (c) Parliament. [22552]

Mr. Horam: Development of clinical guidelines for patient treatment is done by the relevant professional body. Guidelines can be made available to patients, members of the public—as potential future patients—and Parliament on request.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the clinical audit of laparoscopic vaginal hysterectomies by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists; and how many such hysterectomies have been carried out (a) in total and (b) in the circumstances of endometrial uterine cancer. [22651]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health is funding a joint study by the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists medical audit unit and the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine. The vaginal, abdominal or laparoscopic uterine excision hysterectomy study will compare the long-term outcome of hysteroscopic surgery as opposed to conventional hysterectomy. The total number of vaginal hysterectomies in 1993–94 was 14,141. It is not possible separately to identify laparoscopic vaginal hysterectomies within that total. Neither is it possible to identify the number undertaken for endometriauterine cancer.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what requirements are placed on doctors to confirm diagnosis of conditions and diseases by objective tests before asking patients for consent to undergo treatment; [22554]

(2) what guidelines his Department issues to doctors requiring them to confirm diagnosis of cancer by objective tests before asking patients for consent to radical surgery. [22583]

Mr. Horam: Development of clinical guidelines for the management of patients is done by the relevant professional body. Confirming the diagnosis by appropriate investigation would be encompassed in such clinical guidelines and is part of the general duty of care.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what circumstances a patient's consent may be deemed to be invalidly given. [22585]

Mr. Horam: In normal circumstances, patients need to be able to make a balanced judgment before giving valid consent to treatment. They should therefore receive sufficient information to enable them to understand the proposed treatment, the possible alternatives and any substantial risks.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will name the 36 NHS trusts which recorded a retained deficit in 1994–95 giving, in each case, the deficit in cash terms and as a percentage of turnover and indicating the principal reason for the deficit. [22670]

Mr. Horam: The information is shown in the tables.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will name the 13 NHS trusts which exceeded their external financing limits in 1994–95. [22672]

Mr. Horam: The information is contained in "NHS Trusts: 1994/95 Financial Performance", copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will name the 93 NHS trusts which failed to meet their target rate of return on average relevant net assets in 1994–95 giving, in each case, the margin on both cash and percentage terms by which it failed to do so. [22671]

Mr. Horam: National health service trusts are required to make a 6 per cent. return on their net relevant assets, not a target figure in cash terms. Tables showing the actual return achieved in percentage terms by each trust for 1994–95 is contained in "NHS Trusts: 1994/95 Financial Performance", copies of which are available in the Library.

Sheffield University School of Health and Related Studies

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) courses have been attended at the Sheffield university school of health and related studies and (b) other resources of the school have been used by (i) NHS management trainees and (ii) existing NHS staff. [22735]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many contracts have been awarded to Sheffield university school of health and related studies since 1994 by (a) his Department, (b) the NHS executive, (c) the Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority, (d) the former Yorkshire regional health authority and (e) Trent regional health authority; for what purposes these contracts were awarded; if they were awarded by competitive tender; and what was the value of each of these contracts. [22734]

Mr. Horam: The information is not available centrally.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the (a) costs of and (b) savings from the out-sourcing of (i) the nursing division and (ii) the priority and community services group of the former Yorkshire regional health authority to the university of Leeds. [22743]

Mr. Malone: This is a matter for Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority for details.

Peter Walker Associates

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many contracts, and of what value, have been awarded in each of the last four years by (a) the former Yorkshire regional health authority, (b) the Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority, (c) the Trent regional health authority, (d) district health authorities within the two regions and (e) NHS trusts within the two regions to Peter Walker Associates. [22751]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Professional Misconduct

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued on the appropriate time scale for initiating investigations of allegations of professional misconduct by health authorities and trusts. [22553]

Mr. Malone: Guidance was issued in circular HC(90)9 to national health service employers in March 1990 on disciplinary procedures for hospital and community medical and dental staff.

This guidance recommended indicative time limits for dealing with cases of professional misconduct. This states that the time taken from the decision that there is a prima facie case to referral of the final report to the employer should not exceed 32 weeks.

Yorkshire Services Organisation

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total cost of services provided to the former Yorkshire regional health authority by the Yorkshire Services Organisation in each year since 1992; and what services, and at what cost the Yorkshire Services Organisation currently provides to (i) the Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority and (ii) the Trent regional health authority. [22750]

Mr. Horam: This is a matter for the Northern and the Yorkshire and Trent regional health authorities respectively. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairmen of those authorities for details.

Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) research projects, (b) reviews and (c) audits he has asked the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists to undertake; and for how many he has provided financial support. [22592]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health provides core funding for the college's audit unit. The Department has also funded two audits:

National endometrial ablation survey

Pregnancy care for health women.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions in the last 12 months he has sought the advice of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists; and on what topics. [22595]

Mr. Horam: The royal college has frequent contact with Health Ministers and their officials on a wide range of health and health service matters.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what matters the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists is currently preparing clinical guidelines at his request. [22667]

Mr. Horam: The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists, other royal colleges and interested groups are in the process of producing clinical guidelines for the management and treatment of osteoporosis.

Northern and Yorkshire Regional Headquarters

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who conducted the full option appraisal into the relocation of the Northern and Yorkshire NHS regional headquarters to the Mountjoy science park in Durham. [22673]

Mr. Malone: The appraisal was carried out jointly by members of Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority and a team provided by the national health service executive of the Department of Health.

Medical Research

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research commissioned by his Department is currently being carried out at (a) the Royal Hallamshire hospital, (b) the Doncaster royal infirmary, (c) the Weston Park hospital, (d) the Pontefract general hospital and (e) the Mexborough royal infirmary, Sheffield; and if he will show in his answer the total amount of funds made available by his Department for each project. [23069]

Mr. Malone: Research commissioned within the Department's policy research programme is set out in "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and

"Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

Cancer (Sellafield)

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the report from the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment on the incidence of cancer and leukaemia in the vicinity of the Sellafield site, west Cumbria. [23569]

Mr. Horam: The Government are grateful to the committee for its thorough and comprehensive report, copies of which have been placed in the Library. Ministerial colleagues and I note the Committee's concern about the continuing excess of leukaemia and lymphoma in young people in Seascale. We accept the recommendations made in the report, including the committee's recommendation that the incidence of leukaemia and other cancers in the area be kept under surveillance and reviewed periodically by the appropriate authorities. Government also accept the committee's advice that there will be no benefit from continuing to investigate Seascale in isolation in the absence of new evidence of particular causative characteristics which could be relevant.

We welcome COMARE's advice on research priorities and will continue to fund the Department's long-standing programme of research into radiation protection, seeking advice as necessary from expert sources. The Department will also maintain contact with other funding bodies to ensure priority is given to relevant, high quality research.

The Government's commitment to maintaining and updating effective radiation protection policies is demonstrated by the Department's current spend of nearly £2 million a year on radiological protection research, together with support amounting to some £6.5 million year for the National Radiological Protection Board.

Following is COMARE's main conclusion:

"We conclude that there has been a continuing excess of leukaemia and other cancers in 0–24 year olds in Seascale Ward in the post—Black period 1984–1992, primarily due to an excess of acute lymphoblastic leukaemia and NHL. Taken together with the results for the earlier period 1955–62 (for which comparable statistical analysis is not possible) and 1963–1983 the data show that there has been a continued excess of leukaemia and NHL in Seascale for four decades. Such evidence as we have does not indicate any excess between 1900 and 1945. We have investigated possible causes of the excess in later decades and conclude that:

(i) On current knowledge, environmental radiation exposure from authorised or unplanned releases could not account for the excess. Much work has been done to reduce the uncertainties present in the previous assessment although some uncertainties do still remain.

(ii) On current knowledge occupational exposure to radiation is very unlikely to account for the excess. Although there are uncertainties regarding internal radiation exposures it is not clear how these could affect the population of Seascale and not the other residents of small towns and villages nearby where workers from the Sellafield site also live.

(iii) Other possible hypotheses regarding chemicals and infectious aetiology have been considered. We conclude that environmental exposure to chemicals is unlikely to offer an explanation although admittedly the data are sparse. We do, however, believe that a mechanism involving infection may probably be a factor affecting the risk of leukaemia and NHL in young people in Seascale.

We conclude that the excess of leukaemia and NHL in young people in Seascale for the period 1963 to 1992 is highly unlikely to be due to chance alone. Various factors considered above could affect the incidence of leukaemia and NHL but no one factor alone could account for the increase. We cannot rule out interactions between different possible factors but, as yet, have no way of quantifying their effects nor of saying why the interaction would be unique to Seascale.

We have now produced four reports to Government on the incidence of childhood cancer and leukaemia around particular nuclear installations. The first and present reports have been concerned with the Sellafield site. Our work to investigate the cause has entailed one of the most intensive investigations of a local public health concern, due to a suspected environmental problem, ever undertaken in the UK. In addition to our efforts, the input from Government in sponsoring research, from the NRPB and many other independent research bodies and individuals, including industry, has been very substantial. Given this effort there exists a natural expectation of a clear and unambiguous answer to the key issues being addressed. Certainly, we are in no doubt of the raised incidence of leukaemia and NHL which has occurred in the young people of Seascale, and its persistence over several decades is probably unique in this country.

We have examined leading available current hypotheses and pathways by which the observed excess could have come about and have been unable to find any convincing explanation. We have, of course, been constrained by the fact that mechanisms involved in human leukaemogenesis are still not clearly understood. It is our view that current research efforts being undertaken in the UK and worldwide should eventually supply answers to these questions. However, until this research provides the required information we advise against further work specifically addressing the Seascale cluster until new insights into possible carcinogenic mechanisms suggest possible causes to test".

COMARE has made five recommendations, as follows:

"Recommendation 1 (Chapters 2, 4, 6, 8)

We note that there are a number of epidemiological studies underway which will examine the various hypotheses which have been discussed in this report. The United Kingdom Childhood Cancer Study is testing both radiation and non-radiation hypotheses including infectious aetiology and possible predisposing features to carcinogenesis. We recommend that these should be supported to completion.

Recommendation 2 (Chapter 2)

We share the concern about the continuing excess of childhood and adolescent leukaemia and lymphoma and possible excess of other cancers in Seascale and we recommend that the incidence of leukaemia and other cancers in the area be kept under surveillance and reviewed periodically by the appropriate authorities and that any new cases of leukaemia or other cancer be fully characterised.

Recommendation 3 (Chapters 2 and 7)

We recommend that the mortality/incidence of both childhood and adult leukaemia and other cancers in Seascale for the years 1946–62 be examined as thoroughly as possible to connect the mortality study of 1900–45 with the incidence studies of 1963–92.

Recommendation 4

With regard to radiation specifically, our investigations have made us aware of several areas where an urgent need exists for improved knowledge. We consider that their investigation is both important for the scientific basis of radiation protection generally and for the evaluation of potential future problems in the field of radiation and public health. We therefore recommend support, wherever possible, for innovative research in the areas [set our in COMARE's report].

Recommendation 5 (Chapters 8 and 9)

We are aware that our inability to identify causative mechanisms to explain all the Seascale leukaemia and NHL excess reflects the present inadequate state of knowledge regarding the causes of childhood leukaemia. It is possible that this excess, and any others if they occur in future, will continue to elude explanation until underlying mechanisms are better understood. We expect such understanding to come from current and future initiatives in leukaemia and cancer research, whether related to radiation or not. We recommend that high quality innovative research, especially where it permits hypothesis testing, should be supported wherever possible, that this should be considered a necessary part of the remit of radiation protection, and that there should be continued liaison between funding bodies to ensure that essential research receives adequate priority for available funds."

Breast Cancer

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make additional funds available for high-dose chemotherapy and autografting for women with breast cancer within the two nationally agreed clinical studies. [22492]

Mr. Horam: Any additional proposal would require careful consideration in the design criteria for existing studies before further funding could be considered.

Treatment Protocols

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make it his policy not to allow health authorities not to provide treatments without reference to ministerial protocols; [22496]

(2) if he will bring forward protocols to avoid recurrence of health authorities deciding not to provide treatment to sick children, with special reference to the case of child B. [22497]

Mr. Horam: Health authorities are responsible for assessing the health needs of their local populations and for securing services to meet those needs through available resources. The Government have made it clear that there should be no clinically effective treatment which health authorities decide as a mater of principle should not be provided. There will always be exceptional cases and each should be considered on its merits.

Sick Children

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the compliance of the Government's policy towards the treatment of critically ill children with the provisions of the United Nations convention on the rights of the child. [22493]

Mr. Bowis: In our report to the United Nations committee on the rights of the child, HMSO 1994, we noted that advances in medical science offer new opportunities in the acute care of children. We accept the evidence that critically ill children are best treated in dedicated paediatric intensive care units, and on 6 March my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced that he had asked for a report by the end of April on the implementation of plans for the development of paediatric intensive care.

Secondments

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the individuals, by name, civil service post and receiving company, who are on temporary secondment from his Department to industry as part of the continuing programme of interchange of staff with the private sector. [22790]

Mr. Horam: There are none.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

Frigate Procurement Study

Mr. George: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission if he will establish the full cost of the National Audit Office study into the type 23 frigate and the common new generation frigate indicating what proportion of that cost is represented by the part of the study which was reported to Parliament in the NAO report "Procurement Lessons for the Common New Generation Frigate", HC 692, Session 1994–95. [21655]

Sir Peter Hordern: The National Audit Office's work on the type 23 frigate programme is not complete. Further information will be reported to the Public Accounts Committee later this year.

National Audit Office Defence Studies

Mr. George: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission if he will estimate the cost of all NAO full studies into defence matters since 1987 which have not been reported to Parliament. [21654]

Sir Peter Hordern: The Comptroller and Auditor General reports to Parliament all National Audit Office defence studies when they are complete. In accordance with the long-standing and traditional practice of external auditors, he may also provide audit advice direct to audited bodies as subsidiary outputs to promote value for money and good stewardship of public resources.

SCOTLAND

Cytology Service (Inverclyde Royal Hospital)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many women are pursuing legal claims against the Argyll and Clyde health board in respect of the mis-reading of cervical smear slides at the Inverclyde royal hospital; and if he will make a statement; [21663]

(2) how many compensation claims against the Argyll and Clyde health board's cytology service at the Inverclyde royal hospital, Greenock (a) have been settled and (b) are still outstanding; and if he will make a statement. [22724]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A total of 16 legal claims are being pursued by women against Argyll and Clyde health board as a result of the mis-reading of cervical smear slides at the Inverclyde royal hospital. Eight claims have been settled and negotiations are under way to achieve a settlement in the other eight cases, two of which have been, or will be, given interim settlements.

The Government are committed to ensuring that a service of the highest quality is available to women as evidenced by the issue of three key documents in Scotland during 1995; "Guidelines on Fail-safe actions", "Guidance to Health Boards on Purchasing for Cervical Screening" and the "Report of the Working Party on Internal Quality Control for Cervical Cytopathology Laboratories". The then Minister of State also announced the establishment of a central co-ordinating unit for the breast and cervical screening programmes in Scotland, and a national co-ordinator was appointed in December 1995. Quality assurance guidelines for the cervical screening programme were issued this week, pulling together many of the initiatives which have been undertaken at a UK level.

This is being copied for information to the hon. Member for Renfrew, West and Inverclyde (Mr. Graham).

Research Institutes

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which former public sector research establishments in his Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in his Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21946]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The Scottish Office has not privatised any public sector research establishments since 1979.

As part of their response in September 1995 to the report of the multi-departmental efficiency scrutiny of public sector research establishments, the Government announced their intention to conduct a series of prior options reviews of public sector research establishments. My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced on 26 January 1996 the timetable for the reviews, which are due to be completed by the end of this year. The establishments covered include the five Scottish agricultural and biological research institutes—the Hannah research institute, the Macaulay land use research institute, the Moredun research institute, the Rowett research institute and the Scottish crop research institute—the Scottish Agricultural Science Agency and the Fisheries Research Services. Under the prior options procedure, all options, including privatisation, rationalisation or continuing with the current arrangements, have to be examined rigorously.

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about prior options reviews of the Hannah research institute and the Moredun research institute. [24066]

Mr. Robertson: The Government's response to the report of the multi-departmental efficiency scrutiny of public sector research establishments announced a series of prior option reviews. As part of this series, the Scottish Office Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department will conduct prior options reviews of the Hannah research institute and the Moredun research institute.

The reviews will address the actual and potential relationship of the establishment to any others in similar or related fields, and will consider the potential for privatisation or rationalisation.

I would welcome comments from interested parties. They should be sent by 30 April to:

EU Funding

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each European social fund and European regional development fund allocation by (i) name, (ii) expenditure and (iii) area made for objective 1 projects in the highlands and islands on 2 February. [22210]

Mr. Kynoch: The list of approved projects has been provided with an indication of which local enterprise company area each project falls within. As the information requested is somewhat lengthy, I have arranged for the information to be placed in the House Library.

Fair Play Consortium

Mrs. Liddell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans exist for a fair play consortium in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [22538]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: A fair play consortium for Scotland was established early this year. The initiative is led by the Equal Opportunities Commission (Scotland) and supported by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise.

Highlands and Islands Enterprise

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the average cost to public funds of each job created or protected in the tourist industry by grants awarded by Highlands and Islands Enterprise; [22658]

(2) what is the average cost to public funds of each job created or protected in the skiing industry by grants awarded by Highlands and Islands Enterprise. [22659]

Mr. Kynoch: As the information requested relates to the operational activities of Highlands and Islands Enterprise, I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Parliamentary Constituencies

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the electorates of each of the new parliamentary constituencies in Scotland as at 16 February. [22652]

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidelines are currently in force in his Department and its executive agencies relating to competitive tendering and the use of single negotiated tenders; on what grounds single negotiated tenders can be used; and what procedures are in place within his Department to ensure that the use of single negotiated tenders in competitive tendering processes is justified in all cases. [22857]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to his question on 19 March, Official Report, column 166. Single negotiated tenders are acceptable only in exceptional circumstances such as where there is effectively no choice of contractor—for example, for reasons of compatibility—or where such action is judged to offer economic advantages; or where there is extreme urgency to provide or restore a service.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded by his Department and its executive agencies on the basis of single negotiated contracts in each of the last three years; if he will list the companies involved and the value of the contract in each case; what percentage this represented of contracts awarded by his Department and its agencies after competitive tendering; and, in each case, why the contracts were awarded on the basis of a single negotiated tender. [22873]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not recorded centrally within the Department, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of answering parliamentary questions in each Session since 1989–90. [22905]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This Department does not calculate the data requested, and they could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Cash Limits

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what changes he intends to make to the cash limits for 1995–96 within his responsibility. [24065]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The non-voted cash limit Scottish Office/LA1, which covers local authority non-housing capital expenditure, is to be increased by £10,500,000 from £599,303,000 to £609,803,000. There will be an increase in net capital allocations to meet a fall in anticipated European regional development fund receipts and to meet the effect of severe weather. This increase is fully offset by a reduction of £5,000,000 in the non-voted cash limit SO/ERDF from £120,025,000 to £115,025,000 and a reduction in roads and transport class XIV, vote 2 amounting to £5,500,000 so that it will not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) clinical nurse managers and (b) practice development nurse posts are to replace the existing 74 ward sister and charge nurse posts employed by Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust. [21731]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 20 March 1996]: Ward sister and charge nurse posts in Renfrewshire Healthcare NHS trust will, on implementation of the trust's revised nursing management and organisational structure, be replaced by 46 clinical nurse manager posts and six practice nurse development posts.

These changes will enable the number of nursing posts involved in direct patient care to increase from 210 to 230.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the national health service bodies sponsored by his Department which are subject to (a) investigation by the Parliamentary Commissioner, (b) scrutiny by the Audit Commission, (c) scrutiny by the National Audit Office, (d) statutory provisions for open government, (e) performance indicators and (f) provisions under the citizens charter. [21831]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 21 March 1996]: All the 47 NHS trusts, 15 health boards and five special health boards in Scotland are subject to investigation by the health service commissioner and scrutiny by the National Audit Office. They are also all subject to scrutiny by the Accounts Commission, the equivalent body in Scotland to the Audit Commission England and Wales. Those bodies are subject to any statutory provisions for open government and provisions under the citizens charter which may be relevant to them and to any performance indicators as may be deemed appropriate.

TREASURY

Economic Statistics

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest annual (a) inflation, (b) unemployment, (c) growth rate and (d) balance of payments figures for each of the members of the European Community. [22062]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The latest comparable data for these inquiries are set out in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development publication "Main Economic Indicators", which is available in the House of Commons Library.

Pound Coin

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) by what means the differing traditions in Northern Ireland are represented on the 1996 Northern Ireland £1 coin; [22011]

(2) who was the designer of the 1996 £1 coin for Northern Ireland. [21983]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The design shows a gold collar of the first century BC, found at Broighter, County Londonderry in 1896, an ornate cross of the style used in the old Celtin Church of Britain, and the flower of the yellow pimpernel which flourishes around Lough Neagh. The designer is Mr. Norman Sillman.

Manufacturing Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the United Kingdom percentage share of exports of manufactures by the main manufacturing countries in terms of volume for each year since 1985. [22965]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The data requested are set out in the table.

UK percentage share of OECD exports of manufactures[1]

Year	Percentage	Year	Percentage	Year	Percentage
1975	9.4	1982	7.5	1989	7.2

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the United Kingdom percentage share of exports of manufactures by the main manufacturing countries giving the figures in United States dollars for each quarter since 1992. [22960]

Mrs. Knight: The data requested are set out in the table.

UK percentage share of OECD exports of manufactures[1]

Year/Quarter	Percentage	Year/Quarter	Percentage
1992 Q1	7.0	1993 Q4	7.1
1992 Q2	7.2	1994 Q1	7.1

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors underlay the scale of the rise in exports of manufactures in the fourth quarter of 1995 relative to the fourth quarter of 1994. [22958]

Mrs. Knight: The growth of exports of manufactures depends on a number of factors, such as the growth of world trade, the competitiveness of British exports and the degree of spare capacity.

Inflation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were (a) the Bank of England and (b) the Treasury forecasts two years ago of the rate of inflation in February 1996. [22962]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Neither the Bank of England nor the Treasury publishes monthly forecasts of inflation. The Bank of England publishes its quarterly forecasts for inflation in its inflation reports. The Treasury publishes its forecasts in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report" and in the "Summer Economic Forecast". Copies of all these documents are available in the House of Commons Library.

House Insurance

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under which section of which Act owners of domestic properties were given the right to alter the insurer of their home from the one specified by their building society as mortgagee. [19514]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 7 March 1996]: The practice of building societies allowing borrowers to alter the insurers of their homes flows form the code of practice on the linking of services which the Building Societies Association brought into effect on 1 January 1988. It does not depend on any statutory underpinning.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the population of working age in (a) 1979 and (b) 1995 was accounted for by (i) full-time employees of more than six months' duration, (ii) full-time self-employed persons, (iii) full-time employees of less than six months' duration, (iv) full-time temporary employees, (v) those in part-time employment, (vi) the unemployed and (vii) those who are economically inactive. [22579]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 25 March 1996]: Comparable information is available from the labour force survey for 1984 and 1995:

	Spring 1984	Spring 1995
All persons of working age in Great Britain	33,172,000	34,445,000 of whom: (per cent)—Total	100	100

Stamp Duty

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total annual revenue yield from stamp duty on property purchases, for the latest year for which the information is available. [22829]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 March 1996]: The yield from stamp on all land and property—other than shares—was £783 million in 1994–95, of which an estimated £520 million was due to residential property transactions.

Tax Revenues

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the additional tax revenues which would accrue to the Exchequer for each of the next five years if the annual rate of growth of gross domestic product in the United Kingdom were to be 0.25 per cent. per annum higher than assumed in the forecasts contained in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1996–97"; and if he will make a statement. [22761]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 26 March 1996]: Tax revenues as a ratio of GDP vary automatically with cycles in economic activity. The alternative projection below uses the relationship set out in HM Treasury occasional paper No. 4 "Public Finances and the Cycle":

General government receipts projections

Percentage of money GDP	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–00	2000–01

PRIME MINISTER

Ministerial Visit (North Tayside)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to pay an official visit to the North Tayside constituency. [21636]

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 28 March. [21966]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 28 March. [21967]

The Prime Minister: This morning, I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

National Health Service

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what was the spending per head of population on health provision in (a) Northern Ireland, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) England in each of the last five years; and what is the projected spending in the current financial year per head of population in each country; [22948]

(2) what percentage of patients in (a) Northern Ireland, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) England are currently covered by general practitioner fundholders. [22949]

The Prime Minister: The information is as follows:

Gross total national health service spending per capita

	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96 (estimated outturn)
Northern Ireland[1]	581	639	678	705	729	768
Scotland	600	678	740	762	799	849
Wales	536	612	684	705	732	770
England	493	556	607	626	657	694

[1] The figures for Northern Ireland are estimates, due to the fact that Northern Ireland's health services and personal social services are provided on an integrated basis.

Percentage of population covered by GP Fundholding Practices (at April 1995)

Country	Percentage population covered
Northern Ireland	29
Scotland	23
Wales	40
England	41

Intelligence and Security Committee

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Prime Minister if he has yet received the annual report of the Intelligence and Security Committee in accordance with the Intelligence Services Act 1994; and if he will make a statement on the membership of the Committee. [23957]

The Prime Minister: I have received the first annual report of the Intelligence and Security Committee and am presenting it to Parliament today. Copies are also being placed in the Libraries of both Houses. I am grateful to the Committee for the careful and thorough way in which it has carried out its work. Certain portions of its report contained material which fell within the provisions of section 10 of the Intelligence Services Act 1994, and which has accordingly, after consultation with the Committee, been deleted from the published report.

The House will wish to be aware that, following consultations with the Leader of the Opposition and in accordance with section 10 of the Intelligence Services Act, I have appointed the right hon. Lord Blaker as a member of the Committee to succeed the right hon. Lord Howe of Aberavon who has indicated his wish to step down from the Committee. I am very grateful to Lord Howe for the part he has played in the Committee's work.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fire Brigades (Cheshire)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many incidents the fire brigades in Cheshire attended in (a) 1980, (b) 1990 and (c) 1995; and if he will make a statement; [22407]

(2) how many incidents the fire brigades in Crewe and Nantwich attended in (a) 1980, (b) 1990 and (c) 1995; and if he will make a statement. [22406]

Mr. Sackville: The available information is given in the following table. The information for Crewe and Nantwich is not available centrally.

Incidents attended by local authority fire brigades in Cheshire in (a) 1980, (b) 1990 and (c) 1994

Year	Cheshire
1980[1]	9,273
1990	15,588
1994[2]	16,449

[1] Includes estimates for periods of industrial action when data were not recorded.

[2] Provisional data for the latest year available; includes special services attended between April 1994 and March 1995.

Sentencing

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to publish his White Paper on sentencing. [22666]

Mr. Maclean: We plan to publish the White Paper very shortly.

Speed Cameras

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 12 March, Official Report, columns 536–37, what plans he has to review the use of Gatsometer speed cameras on trunk roads; and if he will make a statement on the results of the police procedures for assessing the effectiveness of this equipment. [22669]

Mr. Maclean: The deployment of speed cameras is an operational matter for the chief officer of police for the area concerned and the highway authority. The effectiveness of the cameras is being assessed in a cost-benefit study which has been commissioned by my Department.

Mr. Ibrahima Sey

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what restraint measures were used in the case of Mr. Ibrahima Sey; and if he will make a statement. [22495]

Mr. Maclean: This case has been referred to the Police Complaints Authority. It would not be right for me to comment at this stage.

Electro-shock Batons

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which companies have been granted licences under section 5 of the Firearms Act 1968 to handle, distribute, store or manufacture electro-shock batons in the last five years. [22969]

Mr. Maclean: Section 5(1)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968 prohibits the possession, purchase, acquisition, manufacture, sale and transfer of electric shock weapons without the authority of the Secretary of State. No company has been granted or has held authority under this section specifically in respect of electric shock weapons in the last four years. No current authorities are in place in respect of electric shock weapons. Information about the granting of authority for that purpose in earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces in Britain have acquired electro-shock batons, for any purpose, including as samples, in the last five years; and if section 5 firearms licences have been granted in relation to these items. [22968]

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office does not collect information on this subject. I understand that a survey by the Association of Chief Police Officers of electric shock devices held by police forces in England and Wales in February 1995 found that 22 had obtained electric shock shields and, in some cases, cattle prods for use against ferocious dogs. Police forces do not require licensing or authorisation under the Firearms Act 1968 in relation to these articles.

Artyom M. Tarasov

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will rescind the alien registration certificate granted to Artyom M. Tarasov, holder of Dominican Republic passport No. 0311705 issued on 19 February 1991, and Soviet diplomatic passport No. 0035492. [23051]

Mr. Kirkhope: I am aware of no reason to depart in this case from the requirement to register with the police, as provided for in paragraph 325 of the immigration rules.

Cock Fighting

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been convicted of organising cock fighting tournaments in each year since 1987. [22956]

Mr. Maclean: The information requested cannot be identified separately from other summary offences.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many publicly funded CCTV cameras have been reported stolen; and if he will make a statement. [23138]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

Fire Services

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total finances made available, by source, for each fire service in England and Wales, as indicated from returns from local authority budget setting for each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [23139]

Mr. Sackville: Returns from local authorities showing expenditure on fire services do not provide the requested information about the source of revenue spending. Local government revenue settlement resources are, in general, not hypothecated to specific services such as fire.

Abiodun Igbinidu

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what decision he has made in respect of the application for asylum made by Abiodun Igbinidu from Nigeria; and if he will make a statement. [23142]

Mr. Kirkhope: Abiodun Igbinidu's application to stay in the United Kingdom was refused on 1 August 1995 and his appeal was dismissed on 15 November. Leave to appeal to the tribunal was subsequently refused on 29 November. Further representations and evidence on Mr. Igbinidu's behalf have been submitted. His application is being given further consideration and a decision will be made as soon as possible.

Farm Watch

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on farm watch crime prevention schemes. [23145]

Mr. Maclean: The Government recognise that the most effective response to rural crime is a partnership between the police and the local community. We encourage crime prevention schemes which enable members of the public—with the support of the local police—to do something positive in the fight against crime.

We believe that over 500 farm watch schemes across England and Wales can make a significant impact on crime in the countryside.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated number of people involved in farm watch crime prevention schemes. [23146]

Mr. Maclean: There are over 500 farm watch schemes across England and Wales. These vary in size; information on the number of people involved is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Police Research Group

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list each of the specific topics for which an application was received by his Department under each round to date of the police research group programme and indicate (a) which was successful and (b) the amount of money agreed in respect of each successful application. [23012]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 27 March 1996]: Phase 1 of the Home Office police research group's police operations against crime programme was launched in 1993. One hundred and forty-one applications for research funds were received under this round, and 19 were successful. Phase 3 was launched in 1995, producing 113 applications, of which 12 were successful. In both phases, some applications covered the same topic. The following tables list each of the applications received under each of these phases of the programme. Applications for research topics were not invited under phase 2 of the programme, which commissioned work to develop specific topics begun under phase 1. All costs shown exclude value added tax and travelling and subsistence expenses.

DEFENCE

Greenwich Hospital

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive advice from the special panel he constituted to consider the future of Greenwich hospital. [23540]

Mr. Portillo: In answer to the hon. Member for Cirencester and Tewkesbury (Mr. Clifton-Brown) on 19 December, Official Report, column 1107, I announced that I had invited a group of distinguished experts to advise me on the expressions of interest in, and on the future use and management of, the Royal Naval college, Greenwich, which I hold for the benefit of the Crown charity, Greenwich hospital.

The advisory group has submitted its interim report. I am most grateful to its members for the way in which they have addressed the issues so far. I am placing in the Libraries of both Houses copies of the report, amended only to protect matters of commercial confidentiality.

Much detailed work remains to be done to secure the future of the site, but, with the support of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for National Heritage and for the Environment—the latter as Minister with responsibility for London—I am pleased to be able to announce that I have accepted the central recommendations of the advisory group that, in the event of non-defence occupancy of the Royal Naval college:

the head lease on the site should go to an independent trust charged with preserving its architectural and historic integrity, with the proper maintenance of the buildings and with ensuring public access. Such a trust would need to have regard also to the wider site for which the Government intend to secure world heritage status from UNESCO. I would also expect it to pay particular regard to the College's historical associations with the Royal Navy. I have invited the advisory group to give further consideration to the issues which will need to be resolved to enable such a trust to be established. On the information provided so far, the university of Greenwich appears to be the most appropriate contender to be the main occupant of the site, with the national maritime museum enjoying the use of certain parts. We shall be inviting those organisations to refine their proposals for occupation of the Royal Naval college.

I have also accepted the recommendation that the Trafalgar quarters, currently occupied by the staff colleges, should be converted by Greenwich hospital to provide sheltered accommodation for retired seafarers and their wives or widows. It seems particularly appropriate that a part of the site should be applied to one of the central purposes in the Crown charity's founding charter of 1694.

To carry forward the recommendations in the report, new powers are required and I shall seek them in the Armed Forces Bill. The Minister of State for the Armed Forces has advised the Select Committee considering the Bill of my intention to table an amendment, whereby I can be empowered to balance the wider interests of the heritage of the site with my responsibilities towards Greenwich hospital.

I am grateful to those organisations and individuals who have contributed to the debate so far on the future of the Royal Naval college. I am conscious that my announcement will be a disappointment to some who indicated an expression of interest, but whose proposal will not be considered further.

The Government are determined that the future use of the Royal Naval college should be one worthy of the magnificent site, and in the best interests of the Greenwich hospital and the nation.

I will keep the House informed of developments.

Nimrod Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the star window upgrade to the Nimrod R.1 is expected to be completed. [22353]

Mr. Soames: All the star window equipment for the Nimrod R.1 has been delivered. It is not my Department's policy, however, to provide detailed information on specific operational capabilities.

Unmanned Aerial Vehicles

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many unmanned aerial vehicles are in service with United Kingdom armed forces; and which service arms have operational control over them. [22588]

Mr. Soames: There are currently no unmanned aerial vehicles in operational service with the armed services. However, some 440 unmanned aerial vehicles are used at various Ministry of Defence ranges as targets or for target towing. They are operated by the Royal Navy, the Army or the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency, or by contractors on behalf of the armed services.

Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded by his Department and its executive agencies on the basis of single negotiated contracts in each of the last three years; if he will list the companies involved and the value of the contract in each case; what percentage this represented of contracts awarded by his Department and its agencies after competitive tendering; and, in each case, why the contracts were awarded on the basis of a single negotiated tender. [22868]

Mr. Arbuthnot: For the statistical information requested, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him of 19 March, Official Report, columns 124–25. The information sought in respect of individual non-competitive contracts could be produced only at disproportionate cost. I have asked the chief executives of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency and of the Meteorological Office to write to the hon. Member in respect of their procurement activity in the period for which he seeks information.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 28 March 1996:

You asked the Secretary of State for Defence for the number and value of single negotiated tenders awarded by his Department and its agencies in the last three years; for a list of the companies involved, what percentage of contracts awarded this represented and on what basis single negotiated contracts were awarded. I am replying on behalf of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

I am able to give you the total number of single negotiated contracts and the percentage of total contracts awarded that these represent. I cannot give you the other details you request as this information is commercially confidential.

Year	Single negotiated contracts	Percentage of total contracts
1992–93	873	69
1993–94	1,294	68
1994–95	8,894	74

I hope this is helpful.

Letter from J. C. R. Hunt to Mr. Brian Donohoe, dated 28 March 1996:

As Chief Executive of the Meteorological Office I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about single negotiated contracts.

Unfortunately the information could only be produced at disproportionate costs, although naturally as an Agency of the Ministry of Defence we follow the Department's policy on competitive tendering. I am sorry that I cannot be more helpful.

Asbestos-related Compensation Payments

Sir Peter Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the letter of 11 March from the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, what was (a) the highest individual payment, (b) the lowest (c) the average of the asbestos-related compensation payments made to civilian employees of his Department from 1987 to the end of 1995. [22941]

Mr. Soames: In accordance with normal legal practice, the level of payments varies greatly accordingly to individual factors such as the person's loss of income, and the number and age of his dependants. The highest individual compensation payment made on behalf of my Department to a civilian employee or ex-employee in respect of an asbestos-related claim during the period in question was £298,080. The lowest was about £1,500. The average settlement—the total amount of compensation paid during the period divided by the number of claims paid—was £18,165; this figure includes claimants' legal costs.

Land Mines

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date his Department last deployed anti-personnel land mines for operational use. [23260]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 22 November 1995, Official Report, column 174.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many anti-personnel land mines British forces have deactivated to date as part of their United Nation implementation force duties in Bosnia. [23261]

Mr. Soames: Under the terms of the Dayton agreement, the clearance of mines is the responsibility of the parties. IFOR's role is limited to monitoring their work, except where there is a serious threat to life or clearance is essential to IFOR's own operations. In accordance with this, British forces have deactivated some 160 anti-personnel mines.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the impact of anti-personnel land mines on the duties carried out by British forces in the United Nations implementation force in Bosnia; and what conclusions his Department has drawn from the prevalence of anti-personnel mines in Bosnia. [23263]

Mr. Soames: Land mines continue to pose a hazard to IFOR forces in Bosnia, but steps have been taken to reduce the risks. All UK service personnel who deploy to Bosnia undergo mine awareness training and our contribution to IFOR includes personnel who are specially trained in explosive ordnance disposal. The damage caused by the indiscriminate use of anti-personnel mines in Bosnia reinforces our determination to press for tighter international controls on the use and export of these weapons.

EC (Civil Service Employment)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications of the European Communities (Employment in the Civil Service) Order 1991 for service in the regular or reserve armed forces of the Crown. [22919]

Mr. Soames: The European Communities (Employment in the Civil Service) Order 1991 has no direct effect on service in the regular or reserve armed forces of the Crown.

Pricing and Quality Services Organisation

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about defence agency status for the pricing and quality services organisation. [23812]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have decided that the pricing and quality services organisation should be considered as a candidate for defence agency status under the status steps initiative. The agency review process provides an opportunity to align more closely the provision of essential services to customer needs. Once complete, it will establish a framework that allows a much sharper focus on the need for those services, together with pressure to improve performance through the development of clear and rigorous targets.

Currently, there are four discrete business units within PQS:

(a) Support to Contract Pricing;

(b) Quality Assurance;

(c) Defence Cost Forecasting; and

(d) The Equipment Accounting Centre.

The directorate has approximately 935 staff located in 41 offices throughout the UK. The headquarters are currently located in central London and scheduled to transfer to Abbey Wood, Bristol, later this year.

A "prior options" study is being undertaken to establish whether agency status or other options would be appropriate. I would welcome comments from interested parties. Such comments should be sent to:

Army Individual Training Organisation

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about defence agency status for the Army individual training organisation. [23958]

Mr. Soames: The Army individual training organisation will become a defence agency of the Ministry of Defence on 1 April 1996. The aim of the AITO is to provide the appropriate numbers of well-trained and motivated individuals to meet the operational requirements of the Army. The headquarters of the AITO will be at Upavon, Wiltshire alongside the headquarters of the adjutant general who will be the owner of the agency on behalf of the Secretary of State. The agency will control 32 separate training centres throughout the United Kingdom and have a staff of 6,315 military and 4,546 civilian personnel.

The AITO chief executive, a major general, who will also be the Army's director general of individual training, will be required to build upon the current organisation's reputation for providing the Army with highly trained personnel while, at the same time, achieving greater efficiency effectiveness and value for money.

The chief executive has been set the following key targets for the first year of operation:

1. To meet 95 per cent. of agreed customer training requirements in terms of the quality of trained manpower delivered.
2. To meet 95 per cent. of agreed customer training requirements in terms of the quantity of trained manpower delivered.
3. To meet 95 per cent. of agreed customer training requirements in terms of timeliness of delivery.
4. To ensure success rates for phase 1 officer training are greater than or equal to 85 per cent.
5. To ensure success rates for phase 1 soldier training are greater than or equal to 85 per cent.
6. To ensure success rates for apprentices training are greater than or equal to 85 per cent.
7. To ensure success rates for phase 2 officer training are greater than or equal to 85 per cent.
8. To ensure success rates for phase 2 soldier training are greater than or equal to 85 per cent.
9. To ensure success rates for phase 3 officer training are greater than or equal to 85 per cent.
10. To ensure success rates for phase 3 soldier training are greater than or equal to 85 per cent.
11. To deliver the approved AITO programme within plus or minus 5 per cent. of agreed cash budget.
12. To achieve efficiency improvements of £16.07 million in the first year of operation.

I will arrange for copies of the agency's framework document to be placed in the Library of the House.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied by them. [21854]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 21 March 1996]: The Government are not required to consult with any of the non-departmental public bodies within my Department prior to legislative proposals.

The Review Board for Government Contracts reports annually on the profit formula for non-competitive Government contracts and this advice is published. The Government make their response to this available to the House in a parliamentary written answer.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Voluntary Youth Service

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to allow the voluntary youth service sector more access to public funding. [23279]

Mr. Paice: The Department has increased its grants to national voluntary youth organisations by 6 per cent. to £9.1 million for the next three years. This has allowed us to fund a larger number of programmes—nearly 70—which promote the personal and social education of young people.

Schools Funding Council (Bromley)

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what money has been given for capital expenditure by the Schools Funding Council; and what facilities it has been spent on at (i) Ravenswood; (ii) Bullers Wood, (iii) St. Olave's, (iv) Newstead Wood and (v) Crofton junior schools in the London borough of Bromley. [22130]

Mrs. Gillan: This is a matter for the Funding Agency for Schools. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to my hon. Friend with the information he has requested.

Selective and Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the parliamentary constituencies which have selective local education authority and grant-maintained schools within their boundaries. [22916]

Mrs. Gillan: The 163 local education authority and grant-maintained schools which classify themselves as selective in the 1995 performance tables are located in the following parliamentary constituencies:

Employment Service

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the Employment Service annual performance agreement for 1996–97 will be published. [23955]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Today, I have placed copies of the 1996–97 Employment Service annual performance agreement in the Library. The new targets will require the Employment Service to build on this year's extremely good performance and, in the light of the introduction of the jobseeker's allowance in October this year, will be especially challenging. I have set a demanding target of placing a record 1.97 million unemployed people in jobs in the 12 months from April. Related targets for placing long-term claimants and people with disabilities are higher than ever before. I have set the Employment Service no specific target for combating fraud this year because, from April, responsibility for that area of work moves to the Benefits Agency, which has its own target, published in its business plan.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will place in the Library a list of the schools to be admitted to the assisted places scheme. [23956]

Mrs. Gillan: We intend to admit 63 new schools to the scheme, offering 1,111 assisted places for entry in September 1996. I am placing a list in the Library. These additional places form part of the expansion of the scheme which my right hon. Friend announced in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hastings and Rye (Mrs. Lait) on 29 February, Official Report, columns 667–68.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

EC (Civil Service Employment)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the implications of the European Communities (Employment in the Civil Service) Order 1991 for service in departmental agencies; and if he will list the posts and agencies affected. [22917]

Mr. Freeman: The implications of the European Communities (Employment in the Civil Service) Order 1991 for service in departmental agencies in the home civil service are that, since 21 May 1991, they have been able to employ EC (now EEA—since the European Economic Area Act 1993) nationals, and certain non-EEA family members, in any of the posts which do not constitute employment in the "public service" within the meaning of article 48(4) of the EC treaty.

All departmental agencies in the home civil service are affected by the order. The agencies—98 (plus Customs and Excise and Inland Revenue which operate on next steps lines), employing some 355,000 staff—were listed in "Next Steps Review 1995", copies of which were placed in the Library of the House on 26 February 1996. Since publication, one agency—the Defence Accounts Agency—1,770 staff—has ceased to exist and the following four have been launched.

	Number of staff
Defence Bills Agency	650
Defence Dental Agency	205
Medical Supplies Agency	260
Pay and Personnel Agency	965

Most posts in departmental agencies are non-public service posts; a list could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the implications of the European Communities (Employment in Civil Service) Order 1991 for a person born and resident in Northern Ireland but holding a passport issued by the Republic of Ireland in respect of employment in the public and civil service; and if he will list all the posts, Departments and agencies affected. [22924]

Mr. Freeman: Persons born and resident in Northern Ireland, but holding a passport issued by the Republic of Ireland, provided they still hold British nationality, are eligible for employment in almost any post in the home civil service in the same way as any other British national. Those who surrender British nationality in favour of Irish citizenship will, from 1 June 1996, under the arrangements I announced on 1 March 1996, Official Repot, column 771, come within the ambit of the European Communities (Employment in the Civil Service) Order 1991; they will be eligible, together with nationals of other EC (now EEA—since the European Economic Area Act 1993) member states and certain members of their families, for appointment to approximately 390,000 posts in the home civil service—75 per cent. of all posts—which do not constitute employment in the "public service" in EC treaty terms. These posts are spread across all home civil service Departments and their agencies and could be listed only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Equipment and Furniture

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the cost and number of items of equipment and furniture that (a) have been stolen and (b) are otherwise unaccounted for from the Office of Public Service and its agencies in each of the past five years, listing by name any such items valued at £5,000 or more, and showing information technology material separately. [21704]

Mr. Willetts: Details of the cost and, where known, the number of items of equipment and furniture recorded as having been stolen or otherwise unaccounted for from the Cabinet Office, including the Office of Public Service and its agencies are as follows:

Within this period, the only item valued at £5,000 or more stolen or otherwise unaccounted for was a Compaq Systempro file server valued at £10,000 which was stolen from the information technology system branch in the Horse Guards road building during 1992–93.

TRANSPORT

Braer Disaster (Compensation)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what legal action the Government are taking against (a) the insurers of the Braer and (b) the international oil compensation fund in respect of the Braer disaster. [21482]

Mr. Norris: Under the international convention which establish the international oil pollution compensation fund, which are implemented in United Kingdom legislation in the Merchant Shipping Act 1995, rights to compensation are extinguished unless legal action is commenced within three years of the date on which the pollution damage occurred. The Government have initiated a legal action against the owners and third party liability insurers of the Braer and the international oil pollution compensation fund to protect the Government's claim for compensation for eligible costs incurred by the Department of Transport and the Scottish Office following the Braer incident.

Aircraft Safety Standards

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 7 March 1996, Official Report, column 309, if he will make a statement on the measures taken by his Department to assess whether aircraft are operated in accordance with international safety standards. [21362]

Mr. Norris: My answer of 7 March detailed the particular steps taken by the Department to check that aircraft for which permits are required to operate to the UK have the necessary safety certification. In addition, my noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping announced on 10 January a package of new measures to increase the oversight of safety standards of foreign aircraft operating to the UK.

In brief these measures are as follows:

The Department, in consultation with the Civil Aviation Authority, is arranging for more inspection of foreign aircraft where the observance of international safety standards is in doubt.

The UK is providing experts to the International Civil Aviation Organisation to assist in its recently commenced safety oversight programme.

As a result of a recommendation by the air accidents investigation branch, new procedures will clarify which airline is responsible for safety in operations where aircraft are leased with crew (wet-lease).

Induced Traffic

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which schemes in the national roads programme have been reviewed to estimate the effects of induced traffic; and for each of these schemes by how much this review has changed the 30-year traffic level predictions and the net present value of the scheme. [22759]

Mr. Watts: The Highways Agency is carrying out Standing Advisory Committee on Trunk Road Assessment for all schemes in the national programme. So far, a total of 64 schemes have been provisionally assessed by the agency. These are listed in the schedule at annex A.

The volume of additional traffic induced by schemes is generally expected to be less than 10 per cent. and in many cases below 5 per cent.

The economic assessment process for induced traffic is developing and current appraisal techniques are being improved for the future. For now, where induced traffic is a significant factor, the agency is undertaking sensitivity tests which impose a fairly severe test of scheme economics. For example, in some cases tests have been undertaken with significantly higher volumes of induced traffic than are expected in practice. So far none of the schemes assessed has failed the tests; even where unrealistically high levels of induced traffic have been assumed all have remained good value for money.

Speed Limits, Central London

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current speed limits for (a) Park lane, (b) the Embankment, (c) the Mall and (d) Birdcage walk; and if he will make a statement. [23109]

Mr. Norris: The speed limit on these roads is 30 mph.

Vehicle Safety

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many (a) coaches and (b) heavy goods vehicles have been found to be unsafe in each of the last five years; and how many prosecutions have resulted; [23302]

(2) if he will list by police force area, the number of wide prohibition notices issued for each year since 1992. [23301]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 28 March 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your questions on the number of coaches and heavy goods vehicles found to be unsafe in each of the last 5 years, and the number of "wide" prohibitions notices by police force area.

The number of prohibitions issued in each of the last 5 years to vehicles inspected for their roadworthiness is shown in the attached table. There is no information for the past 5 years on any resulting prosecutions as we have not kept a separate register of roadworthiness prosecutions until this financial year.

I would be grateful if you could clarify your second question; I am not sure what is meant by "wide" prohibitions. I should also explain that we do not record data by police force area.

National roadworthiness prohibition figures 1990–91 to 1994–95

	HGV	PSV
1990–91	19,998	2,991
1991–92	21,284	3,445
1992–93	22,067	3,026
1993–94	22,260	3,295
1994–95	23,304	3,921

HGV figures include prohibitions for both motor vehicles and trailers.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he or his fellow Ministers at the Department of Transport have had meetings with representatives of the motor manufacturing industry to discuss research being undertaken into the relative safety of different types of vehicle involved in side impact collisions; [23377]

(2) what research has been commissioned by his Department from the Transport Research Laboratory on the relative safety of different types of vehicle in side impact collisions; which agency stipulated the terms of the research; and how much this research has cost his Department; [23375]

(3) if he will make it his policy to release immediately public research undertaken by the Transport Research Laboratory into the relative safety of different types of vehicles involved in side impact collisions; [23376]

(4) for what reasons his Department has not released information relating to the relative safety of different makes of vehicle in side impact collisions; and what discussions officials of his Department have had with representatives of vehicle manufacturers relating to this research. [23378]

Mr. Norris: Research on the feasibility of a new car assessment programme, in which the safety of new models would be evaluated, is being done at TRL and was commissioned by the vehicle standards and engineering division of the Department. It includes side protection and is to see if the results give a reliable indicator of relative performance.

It is not possible readily to separate the costs of individual tests but the overall cost of the programme is £1.58 million over three years—1995 to 1998.

Neither I nor my colleagues have had meetings with representatives of the motor industry specifically to discuss this research. There have been discussions with vehicle manufacturers at official level, in particular a meeting in July 1995 at TRL to discuss the test procedure with major car manufacturers. Motor manufacturers have also been invited to witness tests on their own model.

Whether the published report on the research will include the test results of named car models will depend on the assessment emerging from the research of the reliability of the information as an indicator of performance. It could be misleading to publish information judged to be unreliable.

Railway Grants

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the grants made by his Department under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974 since 1992. [22565]

Mr. Watts: Since 1992, three grants have been awarded under section 8 of the Railways Act 1974. Subsequent awards have been made under section 139 of the Railways Act 1993. The full list of awards can be found in "Rail Freight Facilities Grants, England, Scotland and Wales, December 1995", available in the Library.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the freight facilities grants made by his Department. [22564]

Mr. Watts: A total of 155 freight facilities grants have been awarded by the Department since 1975. Grant assisted rail projects are listed in full in "Rail Freight Facilities Grants, England, Scotland and Wales, December 1995", a copy of which has been deposited in the Library.

Search and Rescue Helicopter (Portland)

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will continue to provide a search and rescue helicopter at Portland after 31 March. [24009]

Mr. Norris: This temporary arrangement for the provision of a Coastguard search and rescue—SAR—helicopter at Portland will be extended for a further eight months, until the end of November. Longer-term decisions on the disposition of SAR helicopters will depend in part on the consultation on the interdepartmental review. We hope to publish the review's findings shortly.

Transport Council

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the result of the Transport Council held in Brussels on 11 March. [23813]

Sir George Young: The Transport Council met in Brussels on 11 March. My noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping represented the United Kingdom.

The Council reached a common position on a directive to harmonise roadworthiness tests for motor vehicles and their trailers.

The Council also reached a common position on three separate directives concerning market liberalisation, state aid rules and a vessel scrapping scheme in the inland waterways sector. The United Kingdom voted against the scrapping scheme because of our opposition in principle to Community funding for such schemes. The two other proposals were agreed without a vote.

The Council discussed the Commission proposal for a mandate to negotiate an air transport agreement between the European Community and the United States. The United Kingdom made clear its view that the Commission had not demonstrated that this would add value to the present bilateral arrangements. However a majority of member states were in favour of the principle of limited Community-level negotiations and the proposal was referred back to the Committee of Permanent Representatives—COREPER—for further work.

The Council also discussed the European Parliament's second reading opinion on the proposed Council/European Parliament decision on a transEuropean transport network. It was agreed that the presidency should work to reach agreement with the Parliament on a compromise text as soon as possible.

The Commission gave a progress report to the Council on the state of play in the negotiations between the European Community and Switzerland in respect of land and air transport agreements.

Following a general discussion, the presidency concluded that a regulation concerning the collection of aviation statistics should be reconsidered at the next

Transport Council to allow time for further consideration of a number of outstanding issues, including the application of the regulation to Gibraltar.

Other issues raised at the Council included Commission Green Papers on the citizens network and external costs in transport and a Commission White Paper on air traffic management. There was also an intervention by the German delegation on air traffic safety and a French intervention on ferry safety.

Trawlers

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trawlers were registered in (a) 1995 and (b) 1979. [21611]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Marine Safety Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. David Evans, dated 28 March 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of trawlers registered in (a) 1995 and (b) 1979.

The register of fishing vessels is not categorised by type. The total number of fishing vessels on the register at 31 December 1995, however was 8670.

Before April 1989, registration was the responsibility of HM Customs and Excise (C&E). The C&E records were transferred to the Registry of Shipping and Seamen. I regret that extracting the information relating to fishing vessels from the earlier records for a particular year could only be achieved at disproportionate cost.

Vehicle Inspectorate Testing Stations

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many Vehicle Inspectorate testing stations are currently in operation in the United Kingdom; and how many have (a) one, (b) two, (c) three, (d) four, (e) five and (f) six lanes. [23575]

Mr. Norris: I have asked the chief executive of the Vehicle Inspectorate to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Oliver to Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody, dated 28 March 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question on the number of Vehicle Inspectorate testing stations in operation and how many lanes they have.

Details of the number of stations are given below:

Full-time stations

5 lane: 6

4 lane: 4

3 lane: 17

2 lane: 32

1 lane: 16

There are 15 part-time stations all with one lane.

EDS Ltd.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 29 February to the hon. Member for Wallesey (Ms Eagle), Official Report, column 657–58, what are the penalties involved should he seek early termination of the contract with EDS; what contracts, at what costs, with what duration and penalty his Department's agencies hold with EDS; and if he will make a statement. [23716]

Mr. Norris: The value of contracts and the provisions for termination are classified commercial in confidence.

There are four contracts between the Department's Agencies and EDS:

1. DVLA—duration five years
2. DSA—duration five years
3. VIEA—duration four years six months
4. VIEA—duration two years

Inquests

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many applications there have been in the last 10 years for judicial review of an inquest ruling; and how many have been successful. [22213]

Mr. Sackville: I have been asked to reply

Details of applications for the judicial review of inquest verdicts are not held centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Waste Incinerators (Fires)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has with his European counterparts with respect to fires at waste incinerators. [22277]

Mr. Clappison: I am in regular discussion with my European counterparts on environment issues. I have not found it necessary to discuss the question of fires at waste incinerators.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what research his Department has conducted into the environmental impact, both short and long-term, of fires at waste incinerators; and if he will make a statement on the findings and conclusions; [22285]

(2) what research his Department has conducted into the health implications of fires at waste incinerators; and if he will make a statement on the conclusions of such research. [22273]

Mr. Clappison: My Department has not conducted any research into this subject.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has with the Secretary of State for Health with respect to the health implications of fires at waste incinerators. [22281]

Mr. Clappison: I have had no recent discussions with the Secretary of State for Health on the health implications of fires at waste incinerators.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department has given to hospitals with respect to the treatment of illness resulting from fires at waste incinerators. [22275]

Mr. Clappison: My Department has not given any advice to hospitals on the treatment of illness resulting from fires at waste incinerators.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had from individuals and organisations concerned with the safety of waste incinerators. [22283]

Mr. Clappison: The Health and Safety Executive's field operations division has no knowledge of any representations concerned with safety of waste incinerators. Such inquiries raised with HSE area offices are not recorded centrally. Most representations received by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution relate to emissions from the incinerators.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he has given to local authorities with respect to the safety of waste incinerators and with respect to the implications of fires at waste incinerators. [22278]

Mr. Clappison: I have issued no guidance to local authorities on these matters.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with respect to the health implications of fires at waste incinerators. [22274]

Mr. Clappison: The Health and Safety Executive would expect fire authorities to issue appropriate guidance to the public and employees to avoid exposure to a smoke plume in the event of a fire at a waste storage location, and for the public health authorities to consider the implications for public health.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who is responsible for investigating the safety of waste incinerators; with particular reference to fires. [22282]

Mr. Clappison: The health and safety of employees in the event of fire at storage locations at waste incinerators would be considered by Health and Safety Executive inspectors, but this would not normally be extended to matters of public health arising from exposure to any smoke. Storage of waste at municipal waste incinerators is covered by the authorisation granted to the operator by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, which would take account of any findings relating to its authorisation. Appropriate action would then be taken.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have been treated in each of the last five years for sickness resulting from fires at waste incinerators. [22272]

Mr. Clappison: My Department does not keep these figures.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken following the recent fire at the Whitley refuse incinerator in Coventry; and if he will make a statement. [22280]

Mr. Clappison: Coventry city local authority is investigating the allegations of adverse health effect following the fire at the Whitley incinerator together with the director of pubic health for the area. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will provide any information to assist in determining the likely effects and will consider these findings in relation to any further action.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the long-term implications for health of fires at waste incinerators. [22276]

Mr. Clappison: Health and safety of employees in the event of fire at storage locations at waste incinerators would be considered by Health and Safety Executive inspectors. However, this does not normally extend to public health, which is a matter for the local authority environmental health department.

Forth Rail Bridge

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the Health and Safety Executive has spent on its study over the last year on the structural condition of the Forth rail bridge. [22844]

Sir Paul Beresford: Over the last year, the Health and Safety Executive has spent approximately £221,000 on its assessment of the structural integrity of the Forth bridge.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total cost of answering parliamentary questions in each Session since 1989–90. [22903]

Sir Paul Beresford: This Department does not calculate the data requested, and they could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what guidelines are currently in force in his Department and its executive agencies relating to competitive tendering and the use of single negotiated tenders; on what grounds single negotiated tenders can be used; and what procedures are in place within his Department to ensure that the use of single negotiated tenders in competitive tendering processes is justified in all cases; [22854]

(2) how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded by his Department and its executive agencies on the basis of single negotiated contracts in each of the last three years; if he will list the companies involved and the value of the contract in each case; what percentage this represented of contacts awarded by his Department and its agencies after competitive tendering; and, in each case, why the contracts were awarded on the basis of a single negotiated tender. [22869]

Sir Paul Beresford: Information on the award of individual contracts is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Department submits the purchase of all goods, materials, services and works to competition wherever possible. Single tender action is used where there is a single source of supply, a need for compatibility, or for one off purchases of very low value. These procedures are set out in the Department's purchasing guide.

Planning Inquiries

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 631, if he will give, in each case of called-in application, the length of time which has elapsed following the local inquiries being completed and the decision from the inspector and the determination by his Department. [22913]

Sir Paul Beresford: Due to an administrative error within the Department, for which I apologise, the number of called-in planning applications awaiting decision by my right hon. Friend was incorrectly stated in my answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 631.

The number of applications awaiting decision following receipt of the inspector's report was in fact 22, not 42. For these applications, the information requested is shown by Government office regions in the following table. None of these applications has yet been decided.

EC (Civil Service Employment)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications of the European Communities (Employment in the Civil Service) Order 1991 for service in local government. [22920]

Sir Paul Beresford: This order has relevance for the civil service, not local government.

Mortgage Interest Rates

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when average mortgage interest rates were last at present levels. [23387]

Mr. Gummer: Figures from the Halifax Building Society show that mortgage rates are the lowest since April 1968.

Universal Houses (Asbestos)

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake a survey of the health of tenants of those Universal houses built between 1925 and 1935 which contain asbestos. [23293]

Mr. Clappison: No. Asbestos materials in dwellings present a minimal risk to health. If there are particular local concerns, owners should refer to the comprehensive guidance issued by my Department on the management and treatment of such materials.

Mrs. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by local authority area in England the number of Universal houses built between 1925 and 1935 (a) currently standing, (b) currently occupied and (c) assessed by his Department as containing asbestos. [23292]

Mr. Clappison: This information is not centrally available.

Recycling

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the recycling rates for (a) glass, (b) plastics, (c) steel cans, (d) aluminium cans, (e) paper and card, (f) batteries, (g) tyres, (h) vehicles and (i) electrical and electronic equipment for each OECD country at the latest available date. [23342]

Mr. Clappison: The OECD publishes information on the environment every two years. Limited information on the recycling of different materials, which is given in the table is published in the "OECD Environmental Data Compendium, 1995". Information may not be on a consistent basis from one country to another. Information on the United Kingdom is provided by trade associations and published in the "Digest of Environmental Statistics, 17, 1995".

Housing (Right to Buy)

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenants in the United Kingdom have bought their homes under the right to buy since 1979. [23386]

Mr. Gummer: In the period between the introduction of the legislation in October 1980 and the end of September 1995, the latest date for which information is available, local authorities in England reported total right to buy sales of 1,235 million homes. In the same period, housing associations and new towns reported right to buy sales of 28,000 and 10,000 respectively.

For information on sales elsewhere in the United Kingdom, I refer the hon. Member to the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland.

Composting

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the composting rates in each OECD country, at the latest available date. [23373]

Mr. Clappison: The OECD publishes information on the environment every two years. Data on the composting of municipal waste, which are given in the table are taken from the OECD Environmental Data Compendium, 1995". Information may not be on a consistent basis from one country to another. Information relating to composting in the United Kingdom is not collected centrally.

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the bidding guidance for round 3 of the single regeneration budget challenge fund will be published. [23585]

Mr. Curry: The bidding guidance for round 3 of the single regeneration budget fund will be published tomorrow, 29 March. Copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

Reigate and Banstead Borough Council

Sir George Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State or the Environment if he has yet considered the response by Reigate and Banstead borough council to the notice served on the authority on 6 November 1995 under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988; and if he will make a statement. [23588]

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend has considered carefully the response which Reigate and Banstead borough council has made to the notice served on the authority on 6 November 1995. He is still of the view that the authorities' actions during the tender process for the two contracts, worth £363,000, had the effect of distorting and restricting competition.

He has today given the authority a direction, under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988, requiring it to retender the work, included in the grounds maintenance contracts 1 and 2, which was the subject of the notice, so that new arrangements are in place by 1 January 1997, and to seek the Secretary of State's consent should it wish to reassign the work to the direct service organisation.

The Government are fully committed to fair and open competition for local authority services and we are determined to ensure that obstacles which stand in the way of such competition are removed.

Offshore Health and Safety

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress in implementing Lord Cullen's recommendations on the review and reform of offshore health and safety legislation following his inquiry into the Piper Alpha disaster. [23586]

Sir Paul Beresford: Since the Government accepted in full the recommendations in Lord Cullen's 1990 report on the Piper Alpha disaster, a total of four sets of new health and safety regulations for the offshore sector have been made. The latest, the Offshore Installations and Wells (Design and Construction, etc) Regulations 1996 were laid before Parliament today. They mark a significant milestone in the review and reform programme undertaken by the Government as a result of Lord Cullen's report.

The new legislation effects fundamental changes in the management of safety offshore, as recommend by Lord Cullen. A safety case regime for offshore installations has been established. This requires all installation operators and owners to assess the risks arising from offshore installations, and demonstrate how those risks will be controlled. It is now unlawful to operate an installation without acceptance of its safety case by the offshore safety regulator, the Health and Safety Executive. Provision has also been made for the prevention of fire and the explosion, for emergency response—areas of high risk identified by Lord Cullen as requiring specific legislation—and for management and administration issues. Moreover, the new regulations complete offshore implementation of a European directive concerned with health and safety in the extractive industries. Much old legislation has been revoked both by these new regulations and other reform initiatives in the programme.

The Government have therefore met their obligation to review and reform offshore health and safety legislation in the manner set out by Lord Cullen in his report. I commend the Health and Safety Commission for its efforts in taking forward this programme and all parts of the industry for their positive approach to it. Together, they have secured a legislative regime providing a firm foundation or the continued improvement of health and safety standards in the offshore sector.

Public Paths Regulations

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the results of the recent review of the Local Authorities (Recovery of Costs for Public Path Orders) Regulations 1993. [23959]

Mr. Clappison: We have accepted the central conclusion of the review into the operation of the Local Authorities (Recovery of Costs for Path Orders) Regulations, which is that the maximum charge for administrative cost does not, in most cases, cover the costs incurred by local authorities.

We therefore intend to amend the regulations to remove the current, £400, ceiling. Instead, local authorities will be required to draw up scales of charges, indicating the likely costs for unopposed orders and the maximum cost which they would charge.

This change will be implemented by amending regulations, which we hope to have in place by the summer.

Environment Agency

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the Environment Agency charging schemes for 1996–97 for regulation under integrated pollution control and the Radioactive Substances Act 1993. [23960]

Mr. Clappison: The Environment Act 1995 requires the Environment Agency to make charging schemes so as to recover the costs of carrying out its regulatory functions.

The Government have consulted those who are likely to be affected by the schemes. In the light of that consultation, and with the consent of the Treasury, of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales and—with regard to the Radioactive Substances Act—of my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Environment Agency has now made charging schemes for 1996–97 for regulation under integrated pollution control and the Radioactive Substances Act.

The schemes will take effect from 1 April 1996. I have placed copies of them in the Library of the House.

The schemes are similar to those which were previously administered by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, and there are no changes to the levels of charges as they were set out in the equivalent schemes for 1995–96. This represents a reduction in real terms of around 3 per cent. and has been achieved by continuing improvements in efficiency.

Since responsibility for these schemes is shortly to pass from the inspectorate to the Environment Agency, now is an appropriate time to acknowledge the hard work which the inspectorate has done over the past three years to reduce the level of direct charges in real terms while maintaining a credible regulatory regime. I am also pleased to see the Environment Agency making these schemes, which demonstrates its intention to build upon the improvements in regulatory effectiveness and efficiency which were achieved by the inspectorate, and to limit any increases in charges to those which are essential in order to reduce pollution and to improve the environment.

Copies of the schemes will shortly be sent to relevant operators and to other interested bodies.

Anglian Water (Nitrates)

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of Anglian Water's efforts to bring drinking water in Suffolk within the EU standard for nitrate levels; if he will reconsider the imposition of nitrate-vulnerable zones; and if he will make a statement. [22084]

Mr. Clappison: My right hon. Friend is satisfied that Anglian Water Services Ltd. has taken appropriate steps to ensure that drinking water supplies in Suffolk comply with the standard for nitrate in the EC drinking water directive. I announced on 22 March the Government's decision to designate 68 nitrate vulnerable zones in England and Wales. We have carefully targeted the designations in those parts of surface water catchments or aquifers where there is a danger of nitrate levels continuing to rise. Designation of the zones followed extensive consultation and advice from an independent review panel.

Skin Piercers

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to bring in a registration scheme for skin piercers and to enable byelaws, including the imposition of a minimum age limit, to be made under the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982; and if he will make a statement. [22819]

Mr. Bowis: I have been asked to reply.

The Local Government (Miscellaneous Provision) Act 1982 gives local authorities in England and Wales the power to make byelaws requiring acupuncturists, tattooists, ear piercers and electrolysists to be registered. All the legislation relating to the registration of skin piercing by local authorities is currently being reviewed and a consultation paper will be issued shortly.

The Tattooing of Minors Act 1969 makes it an offence to tattoo someone below the age of 16. The Government have no plans to introduce an age limit for other forms of skin piercing.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress he has made in establishing the funding formula for local authorities in respect of the costs that they face in connection with provision for asylum seekers. [19614]

Mr. Roger Evans: Meetings have taken place between local authority associations, the Department of the Environment and the Department of Health. It was decided that grants should be paid covering 80 per cent. of unavoidable additional expenditure, above a certain threshold, incurred by social services departments under the Children Act 1989, and 80 per cent. of the housing benefit subsidy forgone, above a certain threshold, by housing authorities who incur costs in respect of certain asylum seekers and other persons from abroad housed under the homelessness legislation. The precise details of the funding formula will depend on further discussions with local authority associations. Officials in the Department for the Environment and the Department of Health will be meeting the local authorities association to discuss the issue of the threshold.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women individuals since 1988 have left their company pension scheme and opted to (a) a personal pension and (b) membership of the state earnings-related pension scheme. [22203]

Mr. Heald: Information is not available in the format requested. In the case of those moving from an occupational pension scheme to a personal pension, figures are available only where the appropriate personal pension was started in the same tax year as the termination of occupational pension scheme membership. The available information is given in the table:

The number of people leaving contracted-out occupational pension schemes, by year of scheme membership termination and subsequent scheme.

Thousands

Subsequent scheme	1987–88	1988–89	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93
Men
Appropriate Personal Pension	101	31	74	43	27	13
SERPS	309	332	329	264	246	n/a
Women
Appropriate Personal Pension	51	14	40	24	15	10
SERPS	219	236	236	176	168	n/a

Notes:
1. Figures relate to the United Kingdom.
2. Figures show changes in active membership. They do not show whether past rights have been transferred or not.
3. SERPS figures include people who moved to a contribution position where non-contracted-out contributions have been paid either exclusively or in conjunction with class 2 or class 3 contributions or credits.
4. Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand.
5. Includes people who have changed employment and pension scheme, and those who have remained in the same employment and changed pension scheme.
6. Moves from appropriate personal pensions and SERPS to occupational pension schemes are not reflected in the above figures.
7. Movements to SERPS are defined as those where the person moves into SERPS after termination of occupational scheme membership and remains only in SERPS in the following tax year. Therefore, to establish whether a 1992–93 termination resulted in a move to SERPS, it is necessary to know the person's status in 1993–94 and this information is not yet available.

Child Support Agency (Departures Scheme)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons the Child Support Agency's departures scheme makes no allowance for the cost of maintaining step-children taken on after April 1993; and if he will make a statement on who is expected to pay the cost of maintaining such stepchildren where the absent natural parent of those stepchildren is (a) dead, (b) unemployed and (c) living overseas. [23329]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: Parents taking responsibility for stepchildren after April 1993 have done so in the full knowledge that the standard child support maintenance assessment makes no provision for any costs involved in caring for those children. The fact that child support maintenance cannot exceed 30 per cent. of net income leaves absent parents sufficient resources to make such choices.

Where payment of child support at the rate determined under the standard maintenance assessment would reduce an absent parent's income to such a level that he would be unable to provide adequate support for his new family, the protected income provisions come into play. The protected income assessment makes full allowance for the basic living expenses of all children in the absent parent's household, including any step-children.

WALES

Prescription Charges

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the real terms increase in the price of NHS prescriptions since 1979 expressed as a cash figure and as a percentage. [21125]

Mr. Richards: The prescription charge per item has increased by 774 per cent. in real terms since 1979. Prescription charges in Wales in 1995–96 are expected to raise £18.3 million—money which would otherwise have to be found from within NHS resources.

Police Budgets

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the annual budget for each of the Welsh police constabularies for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [22373]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information is given in the following table.

Police authority expenditure on a total standard spending basis:

£ millions

Police authority	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96	[1]1996–97
Dyfed-Powys	40.0	42.7	46.2	45.9	48.6
Gwent[2]	39.6	42.1	43.7	49.8	62.4
North Wales	57.3	59.6	62.4	66.0	69.3
South Wales	131.3	134.1	133.9	150.7	151.1

Notes:

[1] Figures reflect the transfer of responsibility for policing the district area of Rhymney Valley from south Wales to Gwent.

[2] Figures for 1992–93 to 1994–95 are taken from Gwent county council returns and do not include repayment of debt or the receipt of other local income.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22511]

Mr. Hague: No money has been paid out by my Department or its executive agency, CADW, in respect of breaches in equal opportunities.

Information on non-departmental public bodies is not held centrally.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the sum total of revenue arising from non-domestic rates in Wales in each of the past five years, together with his latest estimate for the present financial year. [22198]

Mr. Hague: The information is as follows:

Total amounts received in respect of non-domestic rates

1990–91: £490,925,000

1991–92: £513,890,000

1992–93: £527,785,000

1993–94: £502,389,000

1994–95: £478,634,000

1995–96: £516,000,000[1].

[1] Estimate.

Child Abuse

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will (a) obtain and (b) evaluate a copy of John Jilling's report into child sex and physical abuse at north Wales children's homes commissioned by Clwyd county council; [23379]

(2) what proposals he has to institute a judicial inquiry into the history of child sexual and physical abuse in north Wales children's homes, and if he will make a statement. [23147]

Mr. Hague: I have no plans at present to take any further action beyond the steps outlined in my statement of 11 December, columns 554-56. I understand that Clwyd county council has decided to refer Mr. Jilling's report to the Department. I shall consider what action, if any, to take on it once we have received it.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the numbers and grades of civil servants in the dedicated PFI department established in his Department. [23389]

Mr. Hague: Details of the officials in my Department's private finance unit are as follows: grade 5(1); grade 7(2); higher executive officer (1); administrative assistant (1). In addition, the unit has been strengthened recently by a secondee from the private finance panel executive.

Theatr Clwyd, Mold

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will now make available his Department's one-of contribution to Theatr Clwyd, Mold for 1996–97. [23374]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Flintshire county council has until the end of March to provide details of an adequate funding package for Theatr Clwyd for 1996–97 and beyond; my right hon. Friend and I will decide whether to release the funding offered to discharge Theatr Clwyd's capital debt in the light of Flintshire's response.

Cardiff Bay Development

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his strategic guidance note of 13 March to the Cardiff Bay development corporation, what was the total estimated gross capital cost of the Gwent bird reserve on the assumption of a £5.7 million pubic sector contribution and private finance initiative scheme for the private capital investment. [23132]

Mr. Hague: The Cardiff Bay development corporation is committed to providing £5.7 million to the Gwent bird reserve scheme. If the private finance initiative option is pursued, this will be used to maximise the value for money from the public sector contribution.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his strategic guidance note of 13 March to the Cardiff Bay development corporation, if he will list the later developments referred to as providing the justification alongside the corporation's 1995 corporate plan which led him to set the level of grant in aid for 1996–97 at £51.641 million. [23136]

Mr. Hague: Developments since August include the issue of a private finance initiative prospectus for the Bute avenue development; faster than expected progress on the £200 million NEG-Schott inward investment at Ocean park; and the prospect of a major private sector investment at Ely fields.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his strategic guidance note of 13 March to the Cardiff Bay development corporation, by what amount he expects the corporation to (a) reduce its consultancy expenditure and (b) increase its direct running cost expenditure. [23137]

Mr. Hague: Cardiff Bay development corporation's planned budget in 1996–97 for consultancies has been reduced by £1 million and the budget for running costs increased by £0.49 million. This will reduce total planned expenditure on consultancies and running costs by £0.51 million.

Tourism

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his strategic guidance note 1996–97 to the chairman of the Wales tourist board, if he will list the principal differences between the recommendations of the English tourist board hotel accommodation grading and classification scheme review and the Wales tourist board scheme; if he will arrange for copies of the English tourist board review and the Wales tourist board research into grading and classification schemes to be placed in the Library; if he will publish the findings of the Wales tourist board report to him in September 1996; and if he will make a statement. [23133]

Mr. Hague: The English tourist board has yet to present its proposals for revising its classification and grading schemes to Department of National Heritage Ministers. It will be doing so shortly, with the industry then consulted on any proposed changes.

The placing of the English tourist board review papers in the Library is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage; however, I will arrange for copies of the Wales tourist board's research to be placed in the Library. When I receive the WTB's report I will consider its publication.

Cathays Park

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those departments which have moved into those areas of Cathays park previously occupied by staff of the Export Credits Guarantee Department and of NCM; and if he will list the numbers in each sub-department indicating the buildings that they previously occupied. [23134]

Mr. Hague: The fourth floor of Cathays park was vacated by NCM and the Export Credits Guarantee Department on 14 July 1995. As part of a programme of reorganisation of staff in Cathays park the following divisions have been located on the fourth floor.

Corporate Plans

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the expected dates of (a) completion and (b) submission to him of the corporate plans of the (i) Welsh Development Agency, (ii) Development Board for Rural Wales, (iii) Wales tourist board, (iv) Land Authority for Wales and (v) Cardiff Bay development corporation. [23135]

Mr. Hague: The economic development non-departmental public bodies have been asked to complete and submit their corporate plans by the following dates:

	Date
Development Board for Rural Wales	31 March
Wales Tourist Board	31 March
Land Authority for Wales	31 March
Cardiff Bay Development Corporation	30 June
Welsh Development Agency	31 August

Corporate plans are the bodies own internal management documents which are submitted to the Department for information.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to paragraph 1.06 of his departmental report, what assessment he has made of the (a) levels of identifiable and geographically attributable expenditure in Wales in 1994–95 in (i) social security, (ii) law and order and (iii) the protective services and (b) changes in those levels since 1993–94; what proposals he has to publish an update of his January publication, "Government Expenditure and Taxation—Wales 1993–94"; and if he will make a statement. [23385]

Mr. Hague: Further details on identifiable and geographically attributable Government expenditure in Wales are published by the Treasury in "Public Expenditure, Statistical Analyses 1996–97", Cm 3201. I have no plans to publish an update of "Government Expenditure and Taxation—Wales, 1993–94".

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to table 1.02 of his departmental report, what assessment he has made of the reason for the fall in the forecast outturn of his expenditure in 1995–96 on economic development relative to 1994–95. [23388]

Mr. Hague: The economic development chapter of the report provides details.

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to table 4.08 of his departmental report, what assessment he has made of the principal reasons for the fall in the numbers of school leavers obtaining NVQs levels 1 to 4 in his forecast outturn for 1995–96 relative to (a) the plans for 1995–96 and (b) the 1994–95 actual outturn. [23384]

Mr. Hague: Table 4.08 reports achievements in youth training. In 1995–96, the first full year of modern apprenticeships, significant numbers of young people have converted from YT to MA to aim for higher levels of NVQ attainment. In future years there should be relatively few such conversions. It is not possible at this stage to assess with accuracy how far this one-off factor has affected the 1995–96 NVQ/leaver ratio.

Investors in People

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of organisations with (a) over 200 employee and (b) under 200 employees have achieved investors in people status. [23304]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office is currently reviewing its database on investors in people performance in conjunction with the training and enterprise councils. The latest figures show that 43 organisations—almost 15 per cent. of those eligible—employing 200 or more people have achieved the investors in people standard. A total of 161 organisations employing less than 200 people have been recognised; a percentage figure is not available.

Menai Strait

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what conclusion he has reached on the proposal by the Countryside Council for Wales to designate the Menai strait as a marine nature reserve. [24004]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: My right hon. Friend has announced that he intends to make a draft order under section 36 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 indicating his intention to designate the Menai strait as a marine nature reserve. Notices concerning the draft order, in accordance with the requirements of schedule 12 of the 1981 Act, will appear in local and national newspapers in the near future.

Local Government Boundary Commission

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the membership of the Local Government Boundary Commission for Wales. [24005]

Mr. Hague: I have appointed Mr. Lloyd Fitzhugh as deputy chairman of the commission from 1 April in succession to Mr. Richard Hall Williams. Mr. Fitzhugh has been a member of the commission since 1994.

I have also appointed Mrs. Susan Smith as a member of the commission.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much her Department has spent in total in answering parliamentary questions in each parliamentary Session since it was established. [22880]

Mr. Sproat: This Department does not calculate the data requested, and they could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

National Lottery

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many applications for national lottery funding have been made to (a) the Sports Council, (b) the Arts Council, (c) the national heritage memorial fund, (d) the Millennium Commission and (e) the National Lottery Charities Board for each of the national lottery regions. [22604]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 25 March 1996]: This information is not held centrally. The Department of National Heritage is currently developing a lottery database that will make these figures available shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Leg Irons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will institute an inquiry into the allegations contained in the "Dispatches" programme on the export of leg irons; and if he will make a statement. [20352]

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Technology to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 31 January 1995, Official Report, column 614. There has been no evidence of a breach of export controls and I do not propose to institute an inquiry unless clear evidence comes to light of the breach of export controls.

Torture Equipment Exports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what reports he has received alleging involvement of (a) British Aerospace and (b) Royal Ordnance in the sale of torture equipment abroad; and if he will make a statement. [20353]

Mr. Oppenheim: I am aware of allegations made in the Channel 4 television programme "Dispatches" originally screened on 11 January 1995. British Aerospace's Royal Ordnance made public denials of the allegations. We will, of course, act on clear evidence of breaches of export controls.

Military Ordnance (Nigeria)

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what measures Her Majesty's Government have taken since November 1995 to prevent the undertaking by British companies of contracts for the supply to the Government of Nigeria of equipment which is likely to be used in support of the use of military ordnance; [22094]

(2) what measures Her Majesty's Government have taken since November 1995 to prevent the undertaking by British companies of contracts for the supply of military ordnance to the Government of Nigeria; [22095]

(3) what measures Her Majesty's Government have taken since November 1995 to prevent the fulfilment by British companies of contracts for the supply of military ordnance to the Government of Nigeria. [22093]

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 21 February 1996, Official Report, column 249.

Export Licences

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licences have been granted to British companies involved in the construction of arms (a) between 1980 and 1984, (b) between 1985 and 1989 and (c) since 1990. [21052]

Mr. Oppenheim: Records of export licences issued for the earliest period requested were routinely destroyed. The remainder of the question could be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list each type of end user certification sought when export licences are being considered, stating in each case (a) the countries and (b) the type of export to which the type of certification applies. [19242]

Mr. Oppenheim: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on 11 January 1996, Official Report, column 293. The specified end user undertakings required in support of applications for individual export licences depend on the goods involved. A standard general undertaking covers most goods but in certain circumstances a specific undertaking is necessary. Specified formats are required to cover:

Chemical Specific Customer End User

Chemical Trader/Distributor

Biological Specific Customer End User

Biological Trader/Distributor.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22508]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The DTI, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations sponsored by the DTI—excluding those sponsored by the Office of Science and Technology and the DTI's executive agencies—for which I am accountable have not made any payments in respect of equal opportunities breaches over the past three years.

The chief executives of DTI executive agencies will respond direct to the hon. Member.

It would involve disproportionate cost to provide a response in respect of the NDPBs sponsored by OST.

Letter from P. R. S. Hartnack to Mr. David Shaw, dated 28 March 1996:

I am responding for the Patent Office to your question to the President of the Board of Trade about amounts of money paid out in respect of equal opportunities breaches. No money has been paid out by the Patent Office for alleged, or actual, breaches of equal opportunities legislation since the Office was established as an executive agency in 1990.

Letter from D. Durham to Mr. David Shaw, dated 28 March 1996:

You recently asked the President of the Board of Trade about amounts of money that have been paid out by Executive Agencies to staff because of alleged equal opportunities breaches whether or not they have been taken to tribunals or courts. I am replying as Chief Executive of Companies House.

This Agency is very aware of its responsibilities under the equal opportunities regime and to date we have not had to make any such payments.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. David Shaw, dated 28 March 1996:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question concerning the payments made to existing and/or former members of staff in respect of alleged equal opportunities breaches which did not proceed to tribunals or courts and equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts.

The Insolvency Service assumed responsibility for matters relating to equal opportunities on 1 January 1995. Since that date no payments have been made to any person previously or currently employed by The Service in respect of equal opportunities breaches, alleged or otherwise.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. David Shaw, dated 28 March 1996:

To ask the President of the Board of Trade what amounts of money have been paid out to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts.

The Radiocommunications Agency has not paid any money to any staff in respect of equal opportunities breaches.

Letter from R. D. Worswick to Mr. David Shaw, dated 26 March 1996:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply to your question about discrimination payments with respect to the Laboratory of the Government Chemist (LGC).

LGC has not paid out, either in the current financial year or the two previous years, any money in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or court.

Letter from Seton Bennett to Mr. David Shaw, dated 28 March 1996:

The President of the Board of Trade has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your question about payments to staff or former staff in respect of equal opportunities breaches. I am pleased to be able to say that this Agency has not made any such payment, nor have we had any cases of alleged equal opportunities breaches in either of the categories in your question.

Insolvency Practitioners

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to increase the effectiveness of the monitoring of licensed insolvency practitioners. [22533]

Mr. Oppenheim: Officials are, and will continue to be, in close contact with the recognised professional bodies as part of the on-going development of monitoring of practitioners. In particular, there is in place a programme of visits by officials to the bodies to look at monitoring procedures and appropriate recommendations are made where there appears to be scope for improvement.

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licensed insolvency practitioners have had their licenses suspended or withdrawn in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [22534]

Mr. Oppenheim: The number of insolvency practitioners who have had their authorisations revoked or their application for renewal of their authorisation refused is as follows:

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licensed insolvency practitioners who have been subject to monitoring have been found not to have complied fully with the Insolvency Act 1986 and other related statutes; and how many such practitioners have had disciplinary action taken against them. [22535]

Mr. Oppenheim: This information is not maintained in this form.

The monitoring of insolvency practitioners is undertaken in order to assist the authorising body in determining whether a practitioner is and continues to be fit and proper and to promote compliance not only with statutory obligations but with best practice.

Where a failure in compliance is identified, this is reported and undertakings are sought where appropriate from the practitioner. The authorising body will consider whether further action is appropriate in more serious cases.

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licensed insolvency practitioners there are; and how many have had monitoring visits from the supervisory bodies in the last three years for which figures are available. [22536]

Mr. Oppenheim: As at 31 December 1995, there were 1,939 individuals authorised to act as insolvency practitioners.

The figures show the number of monitoring visits to practitioners carried out by the recognised professional bodies and by officials on behalf of the Secretary of State. Some practitioners will have been visited on more than one occasions during the period in question.

Year ended 31 December 1995: 527.

Insolvency Service

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the areas of discussion between his Department and trade unions in the Insolvency Service during the period of consideration of contractorisation of the Insolvency Service. [22756]

Mr. Oppenheim: During the period from October 1994, when the Government announced their intention to pursue the study of the preferred contracting out option identified by consultants, to the announcement on 28 February 1996 of the outcome of the contracting-out study, the Insolvency Service had a number of meetings with the trade unions. The main areas of discussion were:

Matters arising from the feasibility study report prepared by Stoy Hayward;

Potential conflicts of interest and implications for insolvency practitioners;

The possible application of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 in interviews with insolvents and other investigation implications;

The timetable for the exercise;

Staffing matters, including the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981, equal opportunities, competencies, changes to terms and conditions of service and the practice of rotating specialist staff between vetting and investigations duties;

Matters arising from the preparation of an enabling order, including consultation with officials receivers;

The question of rights of audience for any successful contractor;

Matters arising from the draft specification of requirements and subsequent invitation to tender;

Management-employee buyouts;

The possibility of pilot schemes;

Matters connected with a residual service in the event of any contracting out;

The benchmarking methodology used by the service;

The identity of the final six bidders;

Insider dealing;

Provisional post-contracting out consultation arrangements.

In addition, there was discussion of issues not related to the contracting out exercise including pay and grading, reporting standards, health and safety issues, the use of the service's dedicated IT systems, the user survey conducted by the service and the service's management information system for Ministers (resource) bids.

EU Funding

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the projects approved and projects awaiting approval and their value in each region under rounds 1 and 2 of objective 2 programmes of the European regional development fund. [22826]

Mr. Oppenheim: A list of all ERDF projects approved and awaiting approval could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, and publication of the latter category would be in breach of commercial confidentiality.

The ERDF projects which have been approved in the west midlands are:

Dr. Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the administrative arrangements for objective 2 programmes of the European regional development fund. [22827]

Mr. Oppenheim: Structural funds objective 2 programmes are administered by the Government offices in England and by the Scottish and Welsh offices and the Government of Gibraltar.

The programmes are monitored by monitoring committees in accordance with the Council regulations governing the funds and the requirements of single programming documents which set out the amounts, purposes and conditions of the grants.

Military Exports (Indonesia)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions export licences have been granted for the export of military, security or police equipment to Indonesia since 1987. [23025]

Mr. Oppenheim: It has been the policy of successive Administrations not to disclose details of applications for export licences unless the requirements of confidentiality are outweighed by the public interest.

A statistical analysis of all export licences issued in 1995 has been placed in the Library of the House. A similar analysis for earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licences have been granted for the export or transhipment of anti-ambush grenades to Indonesia since 1988. [23029]

Mr. Oppenheim: Since the beginning of 1991—the point from which full records are readily available—there have been no licences issued for anti-ambush grenades to Indonesia.

Information on earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many export licences have been granted for the export or transhipment of anti-personnel fragmentation grenades to Indonesia since 1988. [23030]

Mr. Oppenheim: Since the beginning of 1991—the point from which full records are readily available—there have been no licences issued for anti-personnel fragmentation grenades to Indonesia.

Information on earlier years could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police and Security Equipment (Arabian Peninsula)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what (a) funding and (b) authorisation his Department gave to the report "Police and Public Security Requirements for Equipment and Services in the Countries of the Arabian Peninsula", published in June 1994. [23031]

Mr. Oppenheim: The report was partially funded through the export marketing research scheme under the terms and conditions applicable at the time for trade associations using the scheme for the first time—75 per cent. The report covered six countries in the Arabian peninsula and was restricted to marketing research only.

The Department's role is to facilitate and encourage the use of export marketing research. It does not confer any "authorisation" to the result of that research.

Goods with potential military or public order applications normally require an export licence. The Government's policy is not to permit the export of such goods which may be used for the purposes of internal repression.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much his Department has spent in total in answering parliamentary questions in each parliamentary Session since 1989–90. [22877]

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department does not calculate the data requested, and they could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Competition Law

Mr. Faber: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress he has made with issuing a consultation document on the reform of competition law. [24008]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have now issued the consultation document: "Tackling Cartels and the Abuse of Market Power: Implementing the Government's Policy for Competition Law reform." Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Director General of Telecommunications

Mr. Faber: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has yet received a report by the Director General of Telecommunications for the year 1995, as required under section 55 of the Telecommunications Act 1995. [24006]

Mr. Ian Taylor: Yes. The 12th report by the Director General of Telecommunications is being published today. It covers the period 1 January to 31 December 1995. Copies of the report have been laid before each House of Parliament.

Firework-related Injuries

Mr. Faber: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many fireworks-related injuries were referred to hospitals in the period around 5 November 1995; and if he will make a statement. [24007]

Mr. John M. Taylor: An analysis of the figures for 1995 and for the previous four years will be placed today in the Library of the House.

Accident and emergency units in hospitals in Great Britain treated 1,530 people for injuries caused by fireworks, a decrease of 3 per cent. over the total reported for 1994. I am heartened that, despite the increases in sales of fireworks in recent times, we have seen a small reduction in the figures this year, and no fatalities. I believe this is in part due to the successful publicity campaign run by my Department and the fireworks industry, and planning for the 1996 fireworks safety campaign is already under way.

Nevertheless, I am concerned that firework injuries remain near 1994 levels. Particularly worrying is that a third of the injuries appear to be due to illegal misuse.

In addition, I am conscious of a number of wider concerns, illustrated by the representations my Department receives on the power and variety of fireworks now available to the general public and, in particular, growing concerns about whether the public should have access to types of fireworks which can cause particular distress to people and animals alike and have the potential to cause serious injury.

In the light of these considerations, and mindful of the review of explosives legislation which the Health and Safety Executive is carrying out and which may have implications for fireworks, I believe the time is now right for a review of the effectiveness of both voluntary and legislative measures dealing with the availability of fireworks. Accordingly, I have asked my officials, working with those in other interested Departments, to put in hand such a review.

I intend that we should seek views about the current controls on fireworks, and on possible ways in which such controls might be improved, from a wide range of interested groups and individuals. These consultations will take place during the summer.

Company Support (South-West)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the total amount of financial support given by his Department to companies in the south-west in each of the last eight years; and how many companies received such financial support in each of those years. [20794]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 14 March 1996]: Financial support in the south-west under each of the Department's principal regional, enterprise and technology schemes is shown in the table. Companies may have received support under more than one scheme or have received more than one payment under the same scheme; the absolute number of companies receiving support in any one year could be established only at disproportionate cost.

1994–95	361	0.931
1995–96	n/a	n.a

1. n/a = not available.
2. For RSA, REG, RDG and the enterprise initiative consultancy scheme the figures shown are of the number of payments made in any year. The same company may have received more than one payment in any year.
3. For LGS, the figures shown are of the number of loans guaranteed. A company may have had more than one loan guaranteed.
4. For EICS, the figures shown are of number of completed projects. Projects may have involved more than one payment. The total amount figures include the cost of initial business reviews which were free to companies. EICS payments were to the contractor consultants employed by DTI and not direct to companies who met the balance of the cost.

Firearms

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) handguns, (b) semi-automatic weapons and (c) automatic weapons were imported into the United Kingdom for non-military activity for each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement. [21713]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 19 March 1996]: The information is not available because the system of classification under which United Kingdom trade is recorded does not separately identify handguns, semi-automatic and automatic weapons.

The total figures are given:

UK Imports of Non-MilitaryArms

Year	Number	Year £000
1985	192,605	12,578
1986	192,001	16,093
1987	182,203	16,438
1988	179,696	13,584
1989	178,153	14,986
1990	167,799	14,504
1991	167,796	13,081

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value of the loan guaranteed by his Department to Queensbury International Ltd., Plymouth under the loan guarantee scheme in 1994. [22568]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 25 March 1996]: This information is commercially confidential between the Department and the lender.

Merseyside Dock Dispute

Mr. Parry: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the latest development at the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service in respect of the Merseyside dock dispute; and if he will make a statement. [22124]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 26 March 1996]: I understand that the independent Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service is in touch with the parties and is available to become involved if both sides so wish.

Departmental Secondment

Mr. Caborn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if, pursuant to his answer of 14 February, Official Report, columns 637–40, he will describe the role of those on temporary secondment to his Department through (a) the export promoter initiative and (b) the programme of interchange of staff with the private sector; and if he will state the duration of the secondments. [22789]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 27 March 1996]: The role of individuals seconded into the Department as part of the export promoter initiative is to identify export opportunities and to advise UK companies on the best ways in which to pursue them. The role of individuals seconded into the Department as part of the on-going programme of interchange of staff with the private sector varies according to the division in which they work. Details can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The duration of export promoters' secondment is usually about two years. Other secondments vary in length, and are usually between one and three years.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cyprus

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in respect of the retention of (a) sovereign bases and (b) troops at sovereign bases in Cyprus. [23040]

Mr. Soames: I have been asked to reply.

Under the 1960 treaty concerning the establishment of the Republic of Cyprus—Cmnd. 1252—the United Kingdom retained two sovereign base areas at Akrotiri and Dhekelia for use solely as military bases. The bases and the associated garrisons provide facilities for strategic communications, including the major airfield at RAF Akrotiri, as well as hot weather training. We do not envisage any significant changes in the requirement for the sovereign base areas.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Consultations

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to the oral statement by the Prime Minister on 28 February, Official Report, columns 900–12, if he will list the names of the Northern Ireland parties which are qualified to be involved in the intensive consultations beginning on Thursday 4 March; and if he will list the names of those parties with a mandate which have not been invited to participate in the consultations. [18931]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The following parties were involved in the intensive consultations announced in the Prime Minister's statement of 28 February 1996:

the Alliance party of Northern Ireland, Democratic Left, Progressive Unionist party, Northern Ireland Conservative Association, Social Democratic and Labour party, Ulster Democratic Unionist Party, Ulster Democratic party, Ulster Unionist party, Workers' party and Mr. Robert McCartney QC MP.

Because of the ending of the IRA ceasefire, Sinn Fein excluded itself from the consultation process and no other parties were invited to participate.

Quangos

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations there are in Northern Ireland; and how many there were (a) five and (b) 10 years ago. [22441]

Sir John Wheeler: The current number of quasi-autonomous non-governmental organisations in Northern Ireland is 98. In 1990 and 1985 respectively, the number was 116 and 117.

Sir Len Peach

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland by what means Sir Len Peach is informed that persons proposed for public appointments are the nominees of the Government of the Irish Republic; and how many such persons have been appointed to which posts since Sir Len Peach took up his office. [22138]

Sir John Wheeler: The role of Sir Len Peach as Commissioner for Public Appointments for Northern Ireland is to monitor, regulate and approve departmental appointments procedures, to publish guidance for Departments on the new procedures they will be expected to follow in making public appointments from July of this year, and to produce a code of practice and an annual report. The commissioner will not be involved in the process of making any public appointments and will not, therefore, receive identifying information on persons proposed by the Irish Government. Departments' procedures will be subject to audit. In addition, the commissioner will be able to investigate and deal with complaints.

Four persons proposed by the Irish Government have taken up public appointments since 18 December 1995, the date on which Sir Len Peach took up office. It is not my practice to publish details of individuals so appointed.

Public Bodies

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money non-departmental public bodies in Northern Ireland distributed (a) in the last financial year, (b) five and (c) 10 years ago. [22437]

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested is as follows:

1994–95: £208,054,987

1989–90: £132,339,172

1984–85: £241,383,006.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints concerning non-departmental public bodies have been received by the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration in Northern Ireland in the last year for which figures are available; how many complaints were upheld; and what were the equivalent figures for (a) five and (b) ten years ago. [22439]

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration investigates complaints of alleged injustice as a consequence of maladministration by Northern Ireland Departments, including their agencies, while the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints investigates similar complaints against local and public bodies.

In 1995, the Commissioner for Complaints received 291 complaints against non-departmental public bodies and, of these, 24 were upheld. The equivalent figures for five years ago and 10 years ago are as follows: 256 complaints received in 1990 of which seven were upheld; 338 complaints received in 1985 of which 10 were upheld.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people sit on the boards of non-departmental public bodies in Northern Ireland; how many people are on more than one non-departmental public body; and if he will list the names of those sitting on more than one non-departmental public body indicating the organisations concerned. [22438]

Sir John Wheeler: The information requested by the right hon. Gentleman has been placed in the Library of the House.

McBride Principle

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list those American-owned businesses in Northern Ireland which operate the McBride principle. [22158]

Mr. Ancram: This information is not held by the Government. It is a matter for the companies concerned.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of the measures taken in Northern Ireland following the recommendations of the 1995 world Government meeting on land-based sources of marine pollution; and if he will make a statement. [22232]

Mr. Moss: The UK delegation took a leading part in the conference organised by the UN Environment Programme in Washington DC on 23 October to 3 November 1995, which adopted the global programme of action for the protection of the marine environment from land-based activities. This programme of action reflects the approach being adopted throughout the United Kingdom, and by the other states in north-west Europe, to this task. Implementation in Northern Ireland will, therefore, be achieved by continuing our present policies.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22505]

Sir John Wheeler: Within the Northern Ireland Office, Northern Ireland Department and their agencies, information in respect of alleged equal opportunities breaches which did not proceed to tribunals or courts is as follows:

Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments

	(a) Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments	(b)Next steps agencies
1995—96
Staff	1	—
Amount (£)	3,400	—
1994–95
Staff	2	2
Amount (£)	11,500	11,000

Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments

	(a) Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments	(b)Next steps agencies
1993–94
Staff	4	—
Amount (£)	31,500	—

There have been no alleged equal opportunities breaches that have proceeded to a tribunal or court which have resulted in payment of a compensatory award.

Information regarding non-departmental public bodies and other organisations is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Students

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the total assessed parental contribution to higher education student's maintenance awards. [22222]

Mr. Ancram: The total assessed parental contribution for 1994–95, the last complete year for which information is available, was £13.3 million.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current provision for children in Northern Ireland with special educational needs. [22557]

Mr. Ancram: A wide range of provision is available for children in Northern Ireland with statements of special educational needs.

Education and library boards may place such children at special schools, at special education units attached to mainstream schools or in mainstream schools themselves. Special education may also be provided other than at grant-aided schools in Northern Ireland; such provision may, where appropriate, take the form of tuition in a hospital or at home, at an independent school in Northern Ireland or at an educational institution outside Northern Ireland.

Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many teachers in Northern Ireland have taken premature retirement due to (a) ill-health and (b) other reasons in each of the past 10 years. [22561]

Mr. Ancram: The number of teachers who have taken premature retirement due to ill health and for other reasons in each of the last 10 years is set out in the table:

Financial year	Ill health retirements	Other retirements
1986–87	58	226
1987–88	82	224
1988–89	70	314
1989–90	105	306
1990–91	103	409
1991–92	85	383
1992–93	115	280
1993–94	136	248
1994–95	159	258
1995–96	191	229

Nursery Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nursery places are currently available in Northern Ireland. [22591]

Mr. Ancram: A total of 6,600 full-time equivalent places are available at grant-aided nursery schools and nursery units attached to grant-aided primary schools.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in establishing the social and statistics division of the Department of Finance and Personnel as a next steps agency. [23319]

Sir John Wheeler: The social and statistics division of the Department of Finance and Personnel, including the census office and general register office, will be established as an executive agency on 1 April 1996. It will be known as the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency.

I have set a number of key performance targets for the agency to achieve in its first year. These are as follows:

- 85 per cent. of key Government users of the agency surveyed rating its overall service as satisfactory or better;
- 80 per cent. of registered non-Government users of the agency surveyed rating its overall service as satisfactory or better;
- to produce at least 40 statistical publications;
- to process 95 per cent. of general register office postal and personal applications within eight and three working days respectively;
- to reduce by 2 per cent. the unit cost of producing certificates by the general register office;
- to achieve a minimum 3 per cent. efficiency saving.

Copies of the framework document, which sets out the terms within which the agency will operate, will be placed in the Library, along with its first corporate and business plan.

Accident and Emergency Services

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients each hospital trust is contracted to treat in accident and emergency in the Eastern health and social services board area; how many each treated in accident and emergency in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the percentage difference from contract in each case. [22921]

Mr. Moss: Contracts for accident and emergency services do not specify the number of patients to be treated, as such services are demand led. However, some contracts may include indicative figures based on the number of patients treated in the previous year. These may in some cases be used as a basis for renegotiating contract values during the year.

The number of actual attendances at accident and emergency departments at each of the hospital trusts in the Eastern board area in 1994–95 were as follows:

	Number
Belfast City Hospital HSS trust	51,036
Ulster, North Down and Ards Hospitals HSS trust	80,281
Royal Group of Hospitals HSS trust	105,462
Down Lisburn HSS trust	53,470
Mater Infirmorum Hospital HSS trust	42,491

Births

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many births occurred in each of the last five years in each health and social services board area; and what this was as a percentage of the total population in each area. [22922]

Sir John Wheeler: The general register office for Northern Ireland collects information on the population and the number of births occurring in each of the district council areas in Northern Ireland. The figures have been aggregated for each of the four health and social services board areas.

As the most recent information available is for 1994, the data requested are as follows:

Live births occurring in each area

Health and social services board area	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Eastern	10,133	10,273	9,888	9,511	9,179
Northern	6,196	6,038	6,052	5,918	5,881
Southern	5,301	5,248	5,007	4,844	4,868
Western	4,869	4,706	4,625	4,636	4,361
Northern Ireland	26,499	26,265	25,572	24,909	24,289

Live births occurring in each area as a percentage of the total population in each area

Health and Social Services Board Area	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Eastern	1.56	1.57	1.5	1.43	1.38
Northern	1.57	1.52	1.5	1.46	1.44
Southern	1.86	1.82	1.72	1.65	1.64
Western	1.87	1.79	1.74	1.73	1.62
Northern Ireland	1.67	1.64	1.58	1.53	1.48

Family Planning

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the spending on the provision of family planning services in each health and social services area in the last year for which figures are available. [22923]

Mr. Moss: Health and personal social services providers spent £1,537,770 on the provision of family planning services in the 1994–95 financial year.

The breakdown over health and social services areas is given in the table.

Family planning services expenditure 1994–95

Area	Expenditure £
Northern board	189,759
Southern board	249,447
Eastern board	891,667
Western board	206,897
Total	1,537,770

EC (Civil Service Employment)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the implications of the European Communities (Employment in Civil Service) Order 1991 for a person born and resident in Northern Ireland but holding a passport issued by the Republic of Ireland in respect of employment in the Northern Ireland civil service; and if he will list all the posts and departmental agencies to which the order applies. [22925]

Sir John Wheeler: Persons born and resident in Northern Ireland, but holding a passport issued by the Republic of Ireland, provided they still hold British nationality, are eligible for employment in any post in the Northern Ireland civil service in the same way as any other British national. Those who surrender British nationality in favour of Irish citizenship come within the ambit of the European Communities (Employment in the Civil Service) Order 1991 and are eligible, with nationals of other EC—now EEA since the European Economic Area Act 1993—member states and certain members of their families, for appointment to approximately 24,500 posts in the Northern Ireland civil service, or 75 per cent. which do not constitute "employment in the public service" in EC treaty terms. The posts in question are spread across all Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office and their agencies and could be listed only at disproportionate cost.

A8

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Department of the Environment Northern Ireland roads service plans for upgrading the A8 from Gingles corner, Larne, to Corrs corner. [21025]

Mr. Moss [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Proposals for the upgrading of the A8 Larne to Belfast road are included in the Department's six to 15-year major road works programme where their priority will be determined as part of a detailed review to be completed later this year.

HEALTH

Pharmacists

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish his Department's calculations of the working capital requirements for pharmacists; and what have been the changes to the calculated requirements since 1989. [19209]

Mr. Malone: Updating the results of the previous cost enquiries gives a working capital for the median pharmacy of £22,533 in 1989–90 and £35,741 in 1994–95. The cost of servicing working capital is dependent on variations in interest rates.

NHS Managers and Clinicians

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by health authority the numbers and amounts of irregular special payments made to NHS managers and clinicians in each of the last three years. [19663]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the Comptroller and Auditor General's reports on the NHS summarised accounts for England for 1994–95, 1993–94 and 1992–93, his report on the inquiry commissioned by the NHS chief executive into matters concerning the former Yorkshire regional health authority and the Department of Health appropriation accounts for 1994–95, 1993–94 and 1992–93, copies of which are available in the Library.

Adoption

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the directive on adoption issued by his Department to directors of social services on 1 February; and if he will make a statement. [22236]

Mr. Bowis: The Department has received three letters, two of which were from voluntary adoption agencies, following the issue of the guidance on adoption matters on 1 February. A response to these will be sent shortly.

NHS Staff

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what remedies are available to (a) himself, (b) the NHS chief executive and (c) chief officers of local health service bodies, to recover money wrongly paid to NHS employees when they (i) change employer within the NHS or (ii) leave the employ of the NHS. [22738]

Mr. Malone: Each national health service trust or health authority is an independent statutory body for the purposes of employment law. Chief officers of health service bodies have the normal remedies in law available to them to recover moneys wrongly paid to their employees, whether they are now employed by another NHS body or have left the employ of the NHS. Neither my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health nor the chief executive employ NHS staff.

Estates Officers

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many NHS estates officers have been made redundant in the last five years; and what has been the cost of the redundancy packages involved for these officers; [22887]

(2) how many estates officers are currently employed in the NHS; and what was the equivalent figure five years ago. [22886]

Mr. Malone: Information on the numbers of estates officers made redundant and the costs involved is not available centrally. The Department of Health's annual hospital and community health services non-medical work force census collects information on the number of estates officers—known in the census as works staff—employed by the HCHS. Census results for September 1994, the latest year for which figures are available, and earlier years are published in the Department of Health's NHS HCHS non-medical work force census statistical bulletin 1984–1994, which is available in the Library.

NHS Maintenance

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the latest figures for the backlog of maintenance work in the NHS. [22888]

Mr. Horam: The latest figures collected relating to backlog maintenance are for the year ending 31 March 1995. These total £2.32 billion for all buildings in the national health service estate.

Information

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if patient consent is required before identifiable health information held by his Department is shared with other Government Departments. [22911]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health does not routinely hold information about individual patients. The sharing of any such information is covered by the Department's guidance, "The Protection and Use of Patient Information", published on 7 March, copies of which are available in the Library.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new cases of tuberculosis were identified in each of the last three years; what steps his Department is taking to reduce the incidence; and what evidence his Department has evaluated in respect of the emergence of drug-resistant forms. [22893]

Mr. Horam: The numbers of notifications of cases of tuberculosis—excluding chemoprophylaxis—in England in each of the last three years are shown in the table.

Year	Number of notifications
1993	5,721
1994	5,409
1995 (provisional)	5,426

Source:
OPCS.

The table lists notifications made during a single year, it does not show when infection occurred.

The United Kingdom has an excellent record of tuberculosis control. This has been achieved and maintained through treatment of identified cases and screening of their close contacts, screening and treatment for immigrants, the BCG immunisation programme and active surveillance of TB.

In response to the small rise in tuberculosis notifications in the early 1990s, the United Kingdom health departments set up an interdepartmental working group on tuberculosis with a remit to consider policies for TB control in the UK and to recommend best practice. The first reports from the working group, which are entitled "Recommendations for the Prevention and Control of Tuberculosis in Districts" and "Tuberculosis and Homeless People", will be published shortly and copies will be placed in the Library.

The public health laboratory service has heightened surveillance of drug-resistant tuberculosis which remains at low levels in the UK. An expert working group has been set up under the interdepartmental working group on tuberculosis to make specific recommendations for the prevention and control of drug-resistant tuberculosis based on all the available evidence.

Asthma

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make asthma a notifiable disease. [22953]

Mr. Horam: No. Asthma is not infectious or otherwise communicable. It would not be appropriate to make it a notifiable disease.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proposals he has to reflect more fully the costs of (a) homelessness and (b) working with patients with a poor knowledge of English in the funding of NHS trusts; [23344]

(2) what plans he has to introduce needs weighting to the community element of the NHS weighted capitations formula. [23381]

Mr. Horam: The formula takes account of the officially homeless in temporary accommodation and from 1996–97, health authority allocations reflect a new adjustment to take account of homeless "rough sleepers."

A study is being undertaken to look at unavoidable variations in provider costs, including those associated with treating patients from ethnic minorities, with the intention of reflecting such variations in health authority allocations. Work is also in hand to develop a needs weighting for community health services and it may be possible to have an interim needs weighting available to inform 1997–98 allocations.

North Tees General Hospital

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies there are for (a) nurses, (b) junior doctors, (c) middle-range doctors and (d) consultants at North Tees general hospital, Stockton on Tees; if his Department is meeting patient charter requirements for waiting times in accident and emergency; and if he will make a statement about the future of accident and emergency services at the hospital. [23303]

Mr. Horam: Vacancies for nurses, junior doctors, middle-range doctors and consultants at North Tees general hospital are a matter for North Tees Health national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mrs. Judyth Graham-Bowman, chairman of the trust, for details.

Details of the proportion of patients assessed within five minutes of arrival in accident and emergency departments are contained in the NHS performance guide 1994–95, copies of which are available in the Library.

Accident and emergency services on Teeside are a matter for Tees health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the authority, Mr. Tom O'Connor, for details.

Adoption Bill

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements he has to publish the Adoption Bill for England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [24067]

Mr. Bowis: I am pleased to announce that the Adoption Bill has been published today in the form of a consultation document and is being distributed widely. Copies will be placed in the Library. Comments on the content of the Bill will be welcome and three months will be allowed for this.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 11 December, Official Report, column 522, if Dr. Janet Derbyshire, Professor Michael Rawlins or Professor Michael Langman were present at the meeting of the Committee on Safety of Medicines held on 13 October 1995. [22525]

Mr. Malone: Proceedings of the committee are confidential.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 14 December, Official Report, column 811, how many orders under schedule 1 to the Medicines Act 1968 have been made with respect to sub-committees of advisory committees set up under the terms of section 4 of the Medicines Act 1968; and if ministerial approval has been given for the establishment of any sub-committee of the Committee on Safety of Medicines as provided for by (a) regulation 6 of the Medicines Commission and Committee Regulations 1970 and (b) paragraph 1(c) of schedule 1 to the Medicines Act 1968. [22526]

Mr. Malone: Schedule 1 to the Medicines Act 1968 does not contain any power to make orders but I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 14 December 1995 at column 811, which stated that one set of regulations has been made under that schedule.

Ministers have approved the establishment of each of the three sub-committees of the Committee on Safety of Medicines as required by regulation 6(1) of those regulations.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what have been the levels of expenditure in 1996 prices of Government-sponsored medical research into the incidence of (a) scrapie in sheep, (b) BSE in cattle and (c) Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in humans for each five-yearly period since 1970; and if he will provide a breakdown of that research with regard to (i) epidemiological and (ii) neuro-pathological studies. [23369]

Mr. Horam: The Government have carried out extensive veterinary and basis biological research on the epidemiology of scrapie and bovine spongiform encephalopathy. Much of this work has been done at the Central Veterinary Laboratory and the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council's—formerly the Agricultural Food Research Council's—Institute of Animal Health. Details of the funding of this work broken down in the way requested for the years specified would be available only at disproportionate cost. However, from 1991 to the present, the Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food has spent about £20 million on research in these areas.

The Department of Health had provided £809,000[1] for epidemiological studies and £658,000[1] for neuropathological studies in relation to Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease—CJD—in the period covering the financial years 1990–91 to 1995–96. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 20 March, the Department is making an additional £4.5 million available for further research.

The Medical Research Council contributes approximately £600,000 per year to the core costs of the joint Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council—BBSRC/MRC—neuropathogenesis unit which carries out research related to the epidemiology and neuropathology of CJD. In addition, the MRC awarded the national CJD unit £229,000 in January 1993 for a two-year study to investigate the prion protein in human spongiform encephalopathies. The MRC also awarded the NPU £274,000 in March 1994 for a three-year study to investigate the strain characterisation of the CJD agent by transmission to mice. The MRC funded a project in the 1980s on the epidemiology of CJD, risk factors and person to person transmission. Further information from the MRC could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

[1] Expenditure expressed in 1996 prices.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease have been detected in each European country in each of the last 10 years; and how many people are estimated to have died in each country in each of the last 10 years as a result of this disease. [23196]

Mr. Horam: Since 1993, the European Community has funded a project to co-ordinate the surveillance of Creutzfeldt-Jacob disease in those European countries with existing or proposed national CJD surveillance programmes, that is, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom. This project is co-ordinated by the national CJD surveillance unit in Edinburgh. The data collected for 1993 and 1994 were published in the national CJD surveillance unit's fourth annual report in August 1995, copies of which have been placed in the Library. The incidence of CJD in the UK is similar to that in the other European countries taking part in the project. The figures for 1995 are not yet available.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health further to his oral statement of 20 March, Official Report, column 378, that the facts upon which the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee based its deliberations would be made public, if he will set out which journals and on what dates each paper will be published. [23206]

Mr. Horam: Arrangements are in hand to publish the evidence about a previously unrecognised form of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in a scientific journal as soon as is practicable.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish their response to advice supplied by them. [21858]

Mr. Horam [holding answer 21 March 1996]: The Government are required to:

Consult the following advisory non-departmental public bodies prior to legislative proposals:

Committee on the Safety of Medicines;

Medicines Commission;

Publish its response to advice supplied by advisory non-departmental public bodies:

none.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

11. Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the external factors which will require common agricultural policy reform. [21614]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The current general agreement on tariffs and trade constraints, particularly on subsidised exports, will require reform of CAP regimes in due course to prevent re-emergence of unsaleable food surpluses. World Trade Organisation negotiations designed to take forward the process of reducing subsidies and protection, due to start in 1999, and enlargement of the EU will intensify the pressures for reform.

13. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to ensure that common agricultural policy reform is addressed by the Commission. [21616]

18. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those elements of the common agricultural policy which he has assessed as requiring to be reformed. [21622]

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer that my right hon. and learned Friend gave today to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Sutcliffe).

Sea Bass

12. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to preserve the breeding stocks of sea bass. [21615]

Mr. Baldry: Recent estimates indicate a substantial increase in the size of the bass stock since conservation measures were introduced in 1990, with possibly as much as a doubling of the resource in the eastern English channel, which includes the waters around the Isle of Wight.

Welsh Lamb

14. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations were made to the European Commission by his Department to have Welsh lamb designated as a regional product. [21618]

Mrs. Browning: None, but we have received a couple of applications in the last few weeks for Welsh meat and my officials are actively discussing these with the applicants.

I should add that when I visit food fairs and exhibitions abroad, I lose no opportunity to promote and point out the unique qualities of Welsh lamb, which I do to a receptive audience.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

15. Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent representations he has received concerning the level of hill livestock compensatory allowance. [21619]

Mr. Boswell: I receive many representations concerning the levels of hill livestock compensatory allowances.

Battery Cage Systems

17. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to instigate a review of the welfare of chickens in battery cage systems within the Council of Ministers. [21621]

Mrs. Browning: I have pressed the European Commission to update the scientific assessment prepared in 1992 and to bring forward proposals to the Council. The Commission has responded by setting the Scientific Veterinary Committee to work.

Fisheries Policy

19. Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on fisheries policy. [21623]

Mr. Baldry: The Government's policy is to promote more efficient and sustainable exploitation of fisheries resources to benefit both the UK industry and the marine environment.

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

20. Sir Michael Shersby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to expand the countryside stewardship scheme. [21624]

Mr. Boswell: When the scheme transfers to the Ministry on 1 April, it will be considerably expanded to become the main incentive scheme for the wider countryside outside environmentally sensitive areas. We have substantially increased funding for the scheme, enabling new agreements costing £5 million annually to be approved in each of the next two financial years. We will expand the existing priority landscapes and features to cover all old meadows and pastures on neutral and acid soils in England, stone walls and banks throughout England, and arable field margins. We consulted widely on our detailed proposals by issuing a consultation paper on 8 December.

Animal Welfare

21. Mr. Deva: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to add a protocol on animal welfare to the treaty of Rome; and what has been the response of animal welfare groups in the United Kingdom. [21625]

Mrs. Browning: The White Paper "A Partnership of Nations" published on 12 March confirmed our intention to propose that a protocol be added to the treaty of Rome placing an obligation on the Council of Ministers to give full regard to considerations of animal welfare in the exercise of its powers on agriculture, transport, research and the single market.

Southall Horse Market

22. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the current tethering, watering, feeding and demonstration arrangements at the Southall horse market; and if he will make a statement. [21626]

Mrs. Browning: Ministry officials regularly visit the market to assess compliance with the Welfare of Horses at Markets (and Other Places of Sale) Order 1990. No problems were reported on the most recent visit to the market.

Common Fisheries Policy

23. Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, when he last met representatives of the fishing industry, they discussed matters relating to the common fisheries policy and fish stock conservation; and if he will make a statement. [21627]

Mr. Baldry: I last met representatives of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations and of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation on 14 March. We discussed a range of matters relating to the common fisheries policy and fish stock conservation.

Agricultural Wages Board

24. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the impact on the agriculture industry of pay settlements agreed by the agricultural wages board; and if he will make a statement. [21628]

Mr. Boswell: Following each pay settlement, the Ministry makes an assessment of the overall cost to the agricultural industry. We also commission more detailed, and external, studies from time to time. The most recent study was carried out by the London school of economics in 1993. This considered the overall impact of minimum wages on employment in the agricultural industry, as part of our wider review of the operation of the agricultural wages board. A copy of this study was placed in the Library of the House in July 1994.

Horticulture Industry

25. Mr. Luff: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has conducted into the impact of enlargement of the European Union on the British horticulture industry. [21629]

Mr. Boswell: The enlargement of the European Union will present challenges and opportunities to the British horticulture industry. Its impact will, as for other sectors, depend on a number of factors including economic developments in the industry, the policies pursued both here and in the prospective new member states in the pre-accession period and the arrangements for horticultural products agreed during the enlargement negotiations. The European Council in Madrid has requested the Commission further to evaluate the effects of enlargement on Community agricultural policies and these reports will be reviewed at its next meetings.

Live Animal Transport

26. Dr. Spink: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he plans to take to improve the welfare of farm animals during transportation. [21630]

Mrs. Browning: We are currently engaged, in consultation with all organisations with an interest, in developing our plans for implementing the improved welfare requirements laid down by EU directive 95/29 on the protection of animals during transport.

Hedgerows and Headlands

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has given to farmers regarding the preservation of hedgerows and headlands. [21620]

Mr. Boswell: The preservation of hedges and headlands is given priority under relevant agri-environment schemes and during free on-farm conservation visits.

Food Processing

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the food processing sector in (a) the Untied Kingdom and (b) other EU member states. [21605]

Mrs. Browning: The food and drink manufacturing industry contributes nearly 3 per cent. to gross domestic product. The value added by the industry—at about £14 billion—is the second largest among EU member states.

Research Establishments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which former public sector research establishments in his Department have been privatised since 1979; and which public sector research establishments in his Department are currently undergoing reviews with a view to placing them in the private sector. [21951]

Mr. Boswell: There have been no such establishments privatised during the period in question. As regards on-going reviews, I refer the hon. Member to the timetable of prior options reviews outlined by my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade in his reply on 26 January, Official Report, columns 421–23. Each review will address the relationship of establishments to others working in similar or related fields and consider, among other things, the potential for privatisation or rationalisation.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (Abattoir Workers)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what safeguards have been introduced to protect abattoir workers from the risk of infection by the BSE virus; when these safeguards were introduced; and how they are monitored and enforced. [21661]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have been asked to reply.

Guidance for abattoir workers recommending the precautions to be taken to avoid the remote risk of transmission of BSE from bovine carcases was first issued in March 1990. The guidance was prepared by the Health and Safety Executive in co-operation and with the endorsement of the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and was published by the British Meat Manufacturing Association.

No cases of occupational transmission to humans have been identified. However, following the statement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health to the House on 20 March, Official Report, columns 375–86, the HSE has asked the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens to review the guidance which has been issued to all occupational groups, including abattoir workers.

Inspection of abattoirs with regard to all aspects of human health and safety is the responsibility of HSE inspectors. The Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 and regulations made under it apply.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Primary Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of children at (a) primary level and (b) post-primary level are in integrated education in Northern Ireland. [22559]

Mr. Ancram: The percentage of children in integrated education is (a) 1.6 per cent. at primary level and (b) 1.8 per cent. at post-primary level.

Education (Cross-community Contact)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums of money were spent in each of the education and library board areas of Northern Ireland on education for mutual understanding and cross-community contact in each of the last five years. [22563]

Mr. Ancram: Expenditure is not available by board area. However, overall expenditure on cross-community contact in the last five years was as follows:

Financial year	Expenditure £
1991–92	391,571
1992–93	856,507
1993–94	1,265,268
1994–95	1,579,327
1995–96 (Estimated)	1,721,000

Support for education for mutual understanding as a cross-curricular theme is provided by the curriculum advisory and support services operated by the education and library boards, separate costs are not available.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in each of the education and library board areas in Northern Ireland which have participated in the cross-community contact scheme in each of the last three years. [22562]

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is as follows:

Education and Library Board	1992–93		1993–94		1994–95
	Primary	Secondary	Primary	Secondary	Primary	Secondary
Belfast	44	24	69	30	82	31
Western	47	31	76	30	82	28
North-Eastern	42	45	63	39	75	30
South-Eastern	57	41	107	26	104	29
Southern	52	36	91	34	99	38

Education Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the expenditure on education in Northern Ireland as a percentage of the total expenditure in Northern Ireland for each of the last five years. [22560]

Mr. Ancram: The information is set out in the table:

Year	Department of Education, Northern Ireland expenditure[1]	As of NI[2] expenditure (percentage)
1990–91	1,004	18.2
1991–92	1,124	18.7
1992–93	1,203	18.3
1993–94	1,248	17.6
1994–95	1,295	17.5

[1]Youth training programme expenditure has been excluded as responsibility for this activity transferred to Department of Economic Development from 1992–93.

[2]Includes Northern Ireland Office expenditure.

Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many orders under the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day they have been made since January 1995. [23312]

Sir John Wheeler: Since January 1995, six orders—statutory rules or orders—under the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day that they have been made.

Social Fund

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the Northern Ireland social fund discretionary budget will be for 1996–97. [24345]

Mr. Moss: I am pleased to announce that the social fund gross discretionary budget for 1996–97 will be £36.71 million. Some £9.76 million will be allocated to grants; £26.85 million to loans; and £0.1 million will be held as a contingency reserve. The new allocations represent an increase nearing £5 million over the gross budget set at April 1995.

Details of the individual district budget allocations, together with a note explaining the basis on which they have been made, will be placed in the Library today.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many orders under the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day they have been made since January 1995. [23317]

Mr. Sproat: None.

National Lottery

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make statement about the breach of its 1994–95 running costs limit by the Office of the National Lottery. [24289]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The gross running cost limit for the Office of the National Lottery within class XI, vote 8 will be decreased by £130,000 from £2,440,000 to £2,310,000. The decrease arises from the imposition of a penalty following the breach of the gross running costs limit in the previous year, 1994–95. Oflot did not exceed its overall cash limit. Running costs were exceeded because of the difficulty in accurately estimating the costs associated with the launch of the national lottery. The Office of the National Lottery has reported that it has reviewed its systems and procedures to prevent a recurrence of the breach.

TRANSPORT

Road Building

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new starts on road building have been made (a) by the Highways Agency and (b) under the design, build, finance and operate programme in each of the financial years for which figures are available. [22758]

Mr. Watts: For the two financial years 1994–95 and 1995–96 that the Highways Agency has been in existence, 13 conventionally funded schemes started in 1994–95 and one in 1995–96. No design, build, finance and operate projects were let in 1994–95 but four DBFO projects have so far been let in 1995–96.

Railtrack Incident Logs (Staffordshire)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of the Railtack incident logs for incidents occurring in Staffordshire in the last six months. [23087]

Mr. Watts: Railtrack incident logs are internal documents and are not for publication. All statutorily reportable accidents and incidents are reported to the Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate.

Train-mounted Cranes (Staffordshire)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many train-mounted cranes are currently available in Staffordshire; and what is the estimated response time of the cranes for an incident occurring at Stoke-on-Trent station. [23088]

Mr. John Watts: Railtrack does not currently have any train-mounted cranes based in Staffordshire. However, the nearest crane is based at Crewe and the estimated response time for an incident occurring at Stoke-on-Trent Station is one to two hours.

Railway Staff (Safety)

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what checks the Health and Safety Executive makes on the working practices of safety-critical rail staff. [23118]

Mr. Watts: Inspecting officers of Her Majesty's railway inspectorate frequently visit railway sites such as signalboxes, maintenance depots, track work and signalling installations. At such times, and when travelling in driving cabs, they consider, among many other matters, the competence of, and working arrangements for, persons carrying out safety-critical work. In addition, they look at managers' arrangements for monitoring compliance with the Railways (Safety Critical Work) Regulations 1994, and provide advice and guidance.

Ms Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures are taken by Railtrack to ensure that staff carrying out designated safety-critical work, employed by Railtrack or its contractors, are fit to do so. [23119]

Mr. Watts: The Railways (Safety Critical Work) Regulations 1994 place responsibility on employers for ensuring that their employees are competent and fit to undertake safety-critical work.

Railtrack has railway group standards in place which set out competence and medical fitness standards, and which apply to its own staff, staff of train and station operators and staff of infrastructure contractors, who carry out safety-critical work on the Railtrack network. Group standards require employers to monitor fitness for work on a regular basis. Periodic re-examination of medical fitness and reassessment of competence is also mandatory.

Railtrack's safety and standards directorate carries out audits of compliance with group standards by the Railtrack zones, and operators and contractors.

Roads (Speed Limits)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the speed limits in respect of each type of road; and if he will make a statement. [23110]

Mr. Norris: Speed limits for all types of road are set out in the Highway Code (page 53). Realistic speed limits and sensible driving can and do make a significant contribution to road safety.

Traffic Light Switching Device

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the new scheme to fit fire engines in Nottinghamshire with a device to switch traffic lights to green will be expanded (a) nationally and (b) to passenger carrying vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [23333]

Mr. Norris: The introduction of such facilities is the responsibility of the local highway authority and bus companies concerned. Similar schemes are already providing buses with benefits in London and other cities.

Bull Bars

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of Jersey's decision to ban bull bars from cars and vans by the end of the year. [23342]

Mr. Norris: I recognise the interest in road safety which has prompted Jersey to take action against aggressive bull bars.

Passenger Carrying Vehicle Drivers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances (a) EU and (b) United Kingdom drivers' hours regulations apply to PCV drivers. [23340]

Mr. Norris: EU drivers' hours rules apply to drivers of vehicles with 18 or more seats on regular national services over 50 km and on non-regular services. They also apply to international journeys in vehicles with 10 or more seats. UK drivers' hours rules apply to drivers of public service vehicles and to motor vehicles—other than public service vehicles—constructed or adapted to carry more than 12 passengers, on journeys which are outside the scope of the EU regulations.

Islands British Rail Line

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in franchising the Islands British Rail line. [24285]

Mr. Watts: The franchising director has today announced the draft passenger service requirement for the Island line franchise. The draft PSR sets out the proposed level of passenger rail services the franchise operator must provide and for which subsidy will be made. The operator will have the opportunity to run additional services to those set out in the PSR to respond to passenger requirements and develop his business.

Comments are invited by 24 May.

Cash Limits

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to change his Department's cash limits. [24346]

Sir George Young: The cash limit for class VI, vote 5 (roads and local transport) is reduced by £1,300,000 from £512,615,000 to £511,315,000. The reduction will offset cash limited expenditure on class VI, vote 6 in relation to the clean-up operations necessary following the recent grounding of the oil tanker, Sea Empress.

Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many orders under the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day they have been made since January 1995. [23310]

Mr. Norris: None.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Upper Waiting Hall Exhibition

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the 40th anniversary of the Catholic Housing Aid Society to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall. [24133]

Mr. Michael J. Martin: I understand that, under procedures agreed by the Administration Committee, arrangements have been made for the exhibition to be held in the Upper Waiting Hall from Monday 6 May to Friday 10 May 1996.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many full general national vocational qualifications have been awarded in each year since their introduction at each level; and how many awardees have been taught in (i) further education and sixth form colleges, (ii) secondary schools and (iii) other. [23081]

Mr. Paice: The first five GNVQs began their pilot phase at intermediate and advanced levels in 1992. The GNVQ awarding bodies estimate that the number of full GNVQs awarded since 1993 is as follows (rounded to the nearest 100):

	1993	1994	1995
Advanced	—	2,000	15,400
Intermediate	1,800	18,600	41,700
Foundation	—	700	3,600

Information on the type of GNVQ centre attended by individual awardees is not collected centrally at present. The Department is developing a GNVQ database which will enable this information to be supplied in future.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is her Department's estimate of public expenditure on pre-16 general national vocational qualifications provision. [23083]

Mr. Paice: The Department has made no such estimate.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) when her Department or its predecessor began its assessment of the need for an education lead body for the development of S/NVQs for (a) the youth service and (b) youth work; [23167]

(2) what are the implications of the creation of S/NVQs for (a) the youth service or (b) youth work for public funding for the voluntary youth service sector; [23170]

(3) what representations she has received alleging disadvantages faced by the voluntary youth sector as a result of the absence of S/NVQs for the youth service or for youth work; [23169]

(4) what targets have been set by her or by those responsible in her Department for the date by which S/NVQs for (a) the youth service and (b) youth work should be in place. [23168]

Mr. Paice: In 1994, the former Employment Department funded the National Youth Agency to commission a feasibility study by Professor Eraut of Sussex university to explore the scope for developing NVQ standards for youth and community work. He recommended that a comprehensive occupational and functional analysis of the field should be completed, together with a cost-benefit analysis. Following extensive consultation with the youth service field, including the voluntary sector, there is now general agreement that such an analysis should take place. No targets have been set for the introduction of NVQs for youth work or of a lead body for this occupational sector.

The Department would fund any occupational and functional mapping exercise, a cost-benefit analysis, the development of standards and qualifications and the implementation of those qualifications. Funding is also normally available to assist with the training costs of assessment.

The Government are committed to completing the NVQ framework and I am pleased to say that the voluntary sector has been generally supportive of the need to develop NVQs in the youth service.

General Certificate of Secondary Education Results

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the average point scores for (a) GCSE English language, (b) GCSE mathematics, (c) both subjects and (d) all GCSEs together of each 20th group (i) of all 15-year-olds, (ii) boys and (iii) girls when ranked according to (d) indicating the average number of entries per pupil in each group and in (a) to (d), the number of pupils in each group and in total and the average score for (a) to (d) for all such pupils (1) in England, (2) in the local education authority maintained sector, (3) in the grant-maintained sector, (4) in the whole maintained sector and (5) in the independent sector for each year from 1991 to 1995. [23346]

Mr. Paice: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of the answer in the Library.

School Closures and Mergers

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools in England have (a) closed and (b) merged for each year since 1985, giving the totals for (i) primary, (ii) secondary and (iii) special schools. [23390]

Mr. Robin Squire: Information on the number of maintained schools closing each year is available only from 1987 onwards. For years before 1993, full information is not available to show whether closures occurred as the result of a merger or other closure. The total number of closures recorded in each year since 1987 is as follows:

Year	Primary	Secondary	Special
1987	192	n/a	31
1988	198	176	47
1989	152	96	18
1990	265	127	31
1991	229	67	41
1992	318	108	27
1993	258	23	20
1994	253	26	24
1995 (provisional)	128	26	23

This table excludes 111 primary, 15 secondary and 21 special schools which closed during this period for which the precise closure date is not readily available.

The following table breaks down closures since 1993 between those recorded as mergers and other closures.

Year	Primary		Secondary		Special
	Mergers	Other	Mergers	Other	Mergers	Other
1993	196	62	7	16	1	19
1994	205	48	12	14	6	18
1995 (provisional)	87	41	9	17	6	17

Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many orders under the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day they have been made since January 1995. [23307]

Mr. Robin Squire: Since January 1995, no orders made by my right hon. Friend subject to the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day on which they were made.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Sir Mark Lennox-Boyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress Bradford and District training and enterprise council and Lancashire Area West training and enterprise council are making in meeting the criteria for the award of a three-year licence. [24219]

Mr. Paice: I am pleased to announce the award of a three-year licence to Bradford and District TEC and LAWTEC who have now completed the process of meeting the rigorous standards we set.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Equitas

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he has taken a decision under the Insurance Companies Act 1982 on the authorisation of Equitas; and if he will make a statement. [24286]

Mr. Nelson: I have considered carefully the proposals made by Lloyd's for the authorisation of Equitas Reinsurance Ltd. and Equitas Ltd. ("Equitas"). Lloyd's proposes to reinsure the market's 1992 and prior non-life liabilities into Equitas, and to provide matching assets together with an additional solvency margin of free assets. Equitas would be a pure reinsurer, and Lloyd's application does not seek authorisation for it to undertake any subsequent business.

Lloyd's proposals are based on a thorough review of the 1992 and prior liabilities and in particular of exposure to US asbestos and pollution claims. This review has been assisted by work undertaken by a number of leading firms of consulting actuaries and chartered accountants.

I have decided to authorise Equitas on the basis of Lloyd's proposals, subject to certain conditions which Lloyd's does not expect to fulfil before August this year. Of these, the most important are, first, that the contracts reinsuring names' liabilities into Equitas cannot be completed until Lloyd's can demonstrate that the assets available to Equitas are such as to ensure it has the minimum solvency margin I have required. Lloyd's statement of assets available to Equitas will be subject to independent review by Coopers and Lybrand, which is to be appointed as Equitas' auditors once the contracts are completed. Secondly, there are conditions to ensure that if developments between now and August should lead to an increase in the estimate of the overall level of liabilities, then a matching increase in the assets would have to be provided. In addition, there is a condition making any dividend to any shareholders or return premium to reinsured names subject to DTI consent. Any future proposal that Equitas should undertake further business would require DTI consent.

Under section 32 of the Insurance Companies Act 1982, UK insurance companies are required to maintain a minimum margin of free assets, calculated according to a formula. The formula was not devised with circumstances such as the Equitas proposal in mind, and is likely to produce widely fluctuating requirements over the first four years of Equitas' life. I have therefore decided to exercise the discretion to which I am entitled under the Act to make a direction under section 68 to modify the normal requirements in 1996 and 1998.

In reaching this decision, I have been mindful of my responsibilities under the Insurance Companies Act 1982 in relation to the authorisation of new insurance companies and the protection of policyholders in general. In this case, I have to consider whether policyholders would be better protected if Equitas is authorised than if it is not. I must also be satisfied that all the statutory requirements for authorisation under the Act have been met.

The main reasons for my decision are as follows.

First, policyholders will benefit from substantial additional funds which would not otherwise be likely to be forthcoming. The provisions made for 1992 and prior liabilities have been increased by more than £1.5 billion. Equitas will be funded to meet its estimated liabilities and to provide the additional margin of free assets. Some £1 billion plus of the funding is to be provided from sources which have no obligation to support 1992 and prior losses, together with approaching a further £2.5 billion deriving from new money from names, the settlement of the current litigation and from 1993–94–95 profits which would not otherwise be necessarily or immediately available to support these losses. The Equitas proposals will also ensure that the assets to cover these provisions will be fully paid, in contrast to the present position in which some £4 billion of Lloyd's assets is represented by uncalled losses or unpaid cash calls. Furthermore, subject to the division of Equitas' assets between US, Canadian and UK trust funds, the assets of Equitas will be fully mutualised and all available to support all of Equitas' liabilities to policyholders.

Secondly, the creation of Equitas offers a strong prospect of lower claims handling costs and higher investment yields than would otherwise be the case, the benefits of which will accrue to policyholders in the first instance.

Overall, I am satisfied that the resources available to support 1992 and prior policyholders through Equitas will be greater and more certain than without its authorisation. The Government Actuary takes the view that there is a reasonable prospect that Equitas will be able to pay off its liabilities in full as they fall due.

Thirdly, if, against expectation, the liabilities of Equitas at some future point should appear to be on the point of exceeding the assets available, arrangements will have been built into the reinsurance contract with names designed to ensure that policyholders would continue to receive an uninterrupted flow of claims payments, albeit at less than 100 per cent., with the residual balance of claims falling back on to the reinsured names. These arrangements would provide a much superior outcome for all policyholders, including reinsured names, than conventional insolvency proceedings for Equitas.

Fourthly, the creation of Equitas as proposed will very significantly improve the security of 1993 and subsequent policyholders at Lloyd's, by substantially removing the risk that further deterioration in the 1992 and prior liabilities would affect them.

Last, if Equitas does not proceed, Lloyd's has acknowledged that there is a significant risk that Lloyd's as a whole would have to cease underwriting. In that event, the subsequent run-off would face an uncertain future. I therefore consider Lloyd's proposals are a well-judged response to this situation in the interests of existing Lloyd's policyholders, and of reinsuring names as policyholders.

It is now for the members of Lloyd's to decide whether to support Lloyd's proposals as the next step before Equitas can go live later this year.

Iraq (Exports)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what guidelines covered the provision by United Kingdom companies of computer services for the Iraqi air force immediately before the outbreak of the Gulf war; what dispensation had been (a) sought by and (b) given to the ICL company at West Gorton, Manchester; and if he will make a statement. [21295]

Mr. Lang: The provision of services to Iraq before the imposition of UN sanctions in August 1990 was not controlled and there were no guidelines.

ICL and other computer companies applied for many licences under the Export of Goods (Control) Orders to export computer equipment to Iraq. These applications are included in appendix A, part A of Sir Richard Scott's report and were considered in the same way as other equipment with potential for military use. Sir Richard Scott looks at some of the licence applications submitted by ICL in sections D2.403.10 and D6.269.76 of his report.

Proprietary and Mutual Companies

Mr. French: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what legal provisions prevent a proprietary company from calling itself mutual. [21253]

Mr. Nelson: None.

Employment Legislation

Sir Roger Moate: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about the cost to British companies caused by the application to contracting for services of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and the acquired rights directive; what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in this matter; what progress is being made in securing changes to the directive; and if he will make a statement. [23589]

Mr. John M. Taylor: My Department has received a great many representations concerning the financial and practical implications of the application of the EC acquired rights directive to contracting for services. The Government do not believe that the directive was generally intended to apply to the contracting out of a service or to the transfer from one provider to another of a contract to supply services, nor is it suitable for such circumstances.

Despite several rulings by the European Court of Justice, uncertainty still exists about the application of the directive. The Government believe that such uncertainty can be resolved only by amendment of the directive itself, and have sought, with the support of several other member states, changes to it. The European Commission brought froward a proposal in September 1994 to amend the directive in a number of respects. It has not been possible to reach agreement on the basis of that text but the Government will continue to press for changes to the directive. We expect the Commission to bring forward a revised proposal shortly.

Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many orders under the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day they have been made since January 1995. [23314]

Mr. Lang: One.

Overseas Visits

Mr. Hall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a list of all overseas visits made by all Ministers of his Department since 1990, including (a) details of the places visited and brief reasons for the visit, (b) details of the size, composition and cost to public funds of the delegation and (c) the names of non-ministerial members of each delegation and the capacity in which each was present. [17484]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 1 March 1996]: The lists for the years 1992 to present have been placed in the Library of the House. Recovery of data for the years 1990 to 1992 would incur disproportionate costs. Details of the size, composition and function of each delegation would also incur a disproportionate cost. Business people accompanying Ministers are not normally paid for by public funds and the need for officials to accompany Ministers is reviewed on a case-by-case basis.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

China and Taiwan

Sir Nicholas Scott: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make clear to the Government of China during his forthcoming visit that the attempts of China to interfere by the threat of force in the democratic politics of Taiwan are unacceptable to the United Kingdom, that a programme of interference in recognised international sea and air routes by firing shells and missiles is also unacceptable and that any renewal of either of these will result in restrictions on investment in trade with China. [22207]

The Deputy Prime Minister: We have already made very clear to the Chinese Government our grave concerns about their recent military activity. We will continue, on every appropriate occasion, to urge restraint and an early resumption of dialogue with Taiwan.

HMSO

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what changes he plans to HMSO's external finance limit for 1995–96. [24344]

Mr. Freeman: Due to adverse trading conditions and costs associated with an on-going redundancy programme, HMSO is now expected to have a positive external finance requirement in the current year. An external finance limit will therefore be set for 1995–96 at £20,000,000. The increased requirement will be funded from the reserve and will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Civil Service Management Functions

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which civil service management functions he proposes to delegate to Departments and agencies from 1 April 1996. [24343]

Mr. Freeman: I have agreed that, under the terms of the Civil Service (Management Functions) Act 1992, Ministers and office holders in charge of Departments should have delegated authority from 1 April 1996:

(a) to prescribe the qualifications (so far as they relate to age, knowledge, ability, professional attainment, aptitude and potential) for the appointment of home civil servants (with the exception of the fast stream development programme) in their respective departments; and

(b) to determine in respect of home civil servants in their respective departments the number and grading of posts outside the senior civil service and the terms and conditions of employment in so far as they relate to the following:

(i) classification of staff, with the exception of the senior civil service;

(ii) remuneration and allowances, with the exception of the senior civil service;

(iii) allowances for the senior civil service in respect of service overseas;

(iv) expenses;

(v) holidays, hours of work and attendance;

(vi) part-time and other working arrangements;

(vii) performance and promotion;

(viii) retirement age and redundancy;

(ix) re-deployment of staff within and between departments.

A revised management code, taking account of the new delegations and the creation of the senior civil service, has been issued to Departments and agencies. Copies are available in the Libraries of both Houses.

ENVIRONMENT

Secondary Liquid Fuels

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will require manufacturers of secondary liquid fuels to make publicly available their chemical composition. [22954]

Mr. Clappison: If a cement or lime kiln is to use secondary liquid fuel, the operator sends the fuel specification to Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution. This specification includes the technical data that the inspectorate needs for the statutory regulation of the process at the kiln. The specification is put on the public register. Chemical analyses are provided if they are relevant. If the inspectorate decides to authorise the process, the authorisation, which includes the details of the fuel, also appears on the public register. A further requirement would impose upon industry without returning regulatory benefit to the public.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date trials of secondary liquid fuel began at Barrington cement works. [23248]

Mr. Clappison: Trials began on 9 November 1993, for 25 per cent. substitution of fuel.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date use of secondary liquid fuel at Barrington was approved. [23246]

Mr. Clappison: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution issued a variation to the company's authorisation for the burning of secondary liquid fuel on 8 November 1995, which came into effect on 13 November 1995.

Environmental Pollution Reports

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on which criteria and within which time scale he expects to respond to reports produced by the royal commission on environmental pollution. [23063]

Mr. Clappison: We have told the chairman of the royal commission that our general aim is to respond to its reports in nine to 12 months, but that a different timetable may be appropriate in particular cases.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number and title of the reports of the royal commission on environmental pollution to which the Government have (a) responded and (b) not responded indicating for (b) the factors underlying the absence of response. [23064]

Mr. Clappison: The Government have responded to the following reports by the royal commission on environmental pollution:

First Report.

2nd Report: "Three Issues in Industrial Pollution".

3rd Report: "Pollution in some British Estuaries and Coastal Waters".

4th Report: "Pollution Control: Progress and Problems".

5th Report: "Air Pollution Control: an Integrated Approach".

6th Report: "Nuclear Power and the Environment".

7th Report: "Agriculture and Pollution".

8th Report: "Oil Pollution of the Sea".

9th Report: "Lead in the Environment".

10th Report: "Tackling Pollution—Experience and Prospects".

11th Report: "Managing Waste: The Duty of Care".

12th Report: "Best Practicable Environmental Option".

13th Report: "The Release of Genetically Engineered Organisms to the Environment".

14th Report: "GENHAZ—a system for the critical appraisal of proposals to release genetically modified organisms into the environment".

15th Report: "Emissions from Heavy Duty Diesel Vehicles".

16th Report: "Freshwater Quality".

17th Report: "Incineration of Waste".

The Government have not yet responded to the following:

18th Report: "Transport and the Environment". The Government are considering the royal commission report in the light of responses to the national transport debate. A report drawing together all the threads of the national debate will be produced during 1996.

19th Report: "Sustainable Use of Soil". The Government are considering this report, which was published on 29 February, and will respond in due course.

Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many orders under the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day they have been made since January 1995. [23313]

Sir Paul Beresford: None.

Civil Estate (Efficiency Scrutiny)

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the report of the implementation of the recommendations of the efficiency unit's scrutiny of the management of the civil estate will be available. [24288]

Mr. Gummer: Following the scrutiny of the management of the civil estate, the responsibilities for property on the civil estate currently exercised by the Department of the Environment's property holdings are being transferred to departments. This transfer will take effect on 1 April 1996. I have placed in the Library of the House the final report of the scrutiny action manager on the action taken to implement the 84 detailed recommendations of the scrutiny.

Office Waste Minimisation Strategy

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the office waste minimisation strategy being adopted by his Department; and if he will list each of the targets. [23371]

Mr. Clappison [holding answer 28 March 1996]: I expect to announce the waste minimisation target for my Department shortly.

WALES

Development Board for Rural Wales

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was allocated to the Development Board for Rural Wales in (a) 1993, (b) 1994 and (c) 1995 in real terms by his Department; and if he will make a statement. [23180]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The resources allocated to the DBRW are shown in the following table. Figures are at 1995–96 prices and have been calculated using the latest GDP deflator.

£ million

Year	Grant-in-aid	Housing subsidy
1993–94	14.506	2.588
1994–95	14.808	2.540
1995–96	7.980	2.368

The grant in aid provision for 1995–96 reflected the decision to transfer responsibility and funding for all economic and social grants to the local authorities and tourism activities to the Wales tourist board and the higher levels of self-generated receipts which have been used to re-invest in the economy of Wales.

Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many orders under the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day they have been made since January 1995. [23308]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22507]

Mr. Burt: DSS headquarters and the independent statutory bodies have made no payments in respect of equal opportunities breaches over the years 1993–94 to 1995–96. Two payments of £2,000 and £2,250 have been made by the Department's executive agencies to members of staff, both in 1994–95. Neither case proceeded to a tribunal or court.

Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded by his Department and its executive agencies on the basis of single negotiated contracts in each of the last three years; if he will list the companies involved and the value of the contract in each case; what percentage this represented of contracts awarded by his Department and its agencies after competitive tendering; and, in each case, why the contracts were awarded on the basis of a single negotiated tender. [22866]

Mr. Burt: It is not possible to say how many contracts have been awarded in each of the last three years since information on numbers of contracts is not available in the format requested. Any contracts entered into on the basis of single tender negotiated procedures are subject to regulations specified in the DSS purchasing and supply manual and the relevant EC legislation.

Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many orders under the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day they have been made since January 1995. [23311]

Mr. Burt: None.

Age Allowance

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Harlow (Mr. Hayes) of 18 March, Official Report, column 17, what would be the estimated cost to the Exchequer of paying the age-related premium on the basic pension in a lump sum at the same fixed point in the year for all pensioners. [23603]

Mr. Heald: There would be no cost to the national insurance fund as the effect of paying some individuals in advance would be counterbalanced by the effect of paying other individuals in arrears.

If the lump sum is not treated as weekly income for the purposes of calculating entitlement to income-related benefits, the timing of payment would not affect the impact on income-related benefits expenditure.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many orders under the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day they have been made since January 1995. [23305]

Mr. Boswell: None.

SCOTLAND

Equal Opportunities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what amounts of money have been paid out by (a) his Department and (b) executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies and other organisations for which he is accountable to Parliament, to how many staff or former staff in respect of (i) alleged equal opportunities breaches which do not proceed to tribunals or courts and (ii) equal opportunities breaches which proceeded to tribunals or courts in (1) the current year and (2) the two previous years. [22506]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Higher Education (Inquiry)

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning a Scottish advisory committee to the Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education in the United Kingdom; and what response he intends to make. [22429]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have received so far 63 representations from bodies in Scotland about the composition and draft terms of reference of the Government's Committee of Inquiry into Higher Education, and how the distinctive nature of higher education in Scotland should be taken into account. My right hon. Friends and I expect to announce the outcome of the consultations after Easter.

Prisons

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what time scale he is applying to the private finance initiative for future prisons; and what estimate he has made of the capital costs and annual running costs of these prisons in each of the years of the private finance initiative; [22840]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 618, what representations he has received advocating that prison staff secure the management contract to run any future private finance initiative prison; [22841]

(3) pursuant to his answer of 28 February, Official Report, column 618, if he will make it his policy to allocate the contract for the management of any future finance initiative prison to the prison staff. [22842]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The new prison is not expected to open before 1999 at the earliest. Early cost estimates are around £18 million to £20 million per annum. Payments would be revalued using an appropriate indicator over the contract period, which is expected to be 25 years. The Secretary of State met the Scottish Prison Officers Association on 29 September 1995, following which he has received no further representations. However, representations from SPOA have been received on this matter by the Scottish Prison Service chief executive. The option of involving Scottish Prison Service staff in a privately financed prison has not been ruled out.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what allocations the new unitary councils received from the Scottish Office in their notional budgets in 1995–96 for meeting the costs of operating valuation appeals committees. [22908]

Mr. Kynoch: The notional amounts for each of the new mainland councils which were prescribed in the notional amounts report 1996 approved by the House on 28 February, were based on the actual 1995–96 budgets of the outgoing councils.

It is not possible to identify the costs of operating valuation appeals committees within these notional amounts but the table gives details of each of the new councils notional 1995–96 budgets for both lands valuation and council tax valuation as returned to the Scottish Office by the outgoing councils.

[1]Lothian regional council was unable to disaggregate the regional assessor's budget. As a result the figure shown against lands valuation also includes registration of electors and council tax valuation.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what operational expenses will be incurred by each joint valuation board in Scotland in meeting the costs of valuation appeals committees operating within their areas in 1996–97. [22907]

Mr. Kynoch: Responsibility for determining the costs associated with valuation appeal panels and committees drawn from them, as well as the funding of them, rests with the appropriate council or joint board as the appropriate valuation authority.

Justices of the Peace

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement indicating how many justices of the peace have been appointed by his Department in each year since 1979; how many of these appointments are permanent; and what other bodies are entitled to make nominations for justices of the peace. [22927]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Justices of the peace are appointed by either the Secretary of State for Scotland under section 9 of the District Courts (Scotland) Act 1975 or under section 11(2) of the same Act by local authorities. Appointments made by the Secretary of State are permanent unless the JP resigns or is removed by order of the Secretary of State. In making appointments, the Secretary of State takes advice from local JP advisory committees. Local authorities are entitled to nominate up to one quarter of their elected members to serve as ex officio JPs for as long as they remain a member of the local authority and retain their authority's nomination. Once appointed, ex officio JPs are governed by the same statutory provisions as JPs appointed by the Secretary of State.

The table below details the total number of JP appointments in Scotland since 1983. Figures for the period 1979 to 1982 could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many orders under the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day they have been made since January 1995. [23306]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None of the orders I have made since January 1995 which have been subject to the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the same day that they were made.

TREASURY

EU Finance

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assistance has been received per head of population from (a) the common agricultural policy and (b) European structural and cohesion funds since the Edinburgh conclusions by (i) Ireland, (ii) Wales and (iii) the United Kingdom. [22432]

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The available information in respect of the these territories is as follows:

Interest Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the impact of an immediate reduction of 2 per cent. in nominal interest rates on United Kingdom (a) output and (b) employment within (i) 12 months and (ii) 24 months. [22964]

Mrs. Angela Knight: We never speculate about interest rates.

Interest rates are only one of many influences on economic growth, and the impact of an interest rate reduction on the economy depends on the interaction with these other factors. The Government will continue to set interest rates at a level consistent with meeting the target for inflation of $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. or less.

Open-ended Investment Companies

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on legislation to introduce open-ended investment companies. [24218]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Following consultations in the second half of 1995, the Treasury is nearing completion of a review of the draft regulations under the European Communities Act 1972, which will permit open-ended investment companies—OEICs—to be set up in Great Britain. The Northern Ireland Department of Economic Development will prepare separate regulations, also under the ECA, to permit OEICs to be set up in Northern Ireland. The Securities and Investments Board is studying parallel responses to its draft product regulations published in October 1995. Responses to the consultations, which have been encouraging and constructive, have raised a number of important issues.

In reviewing the Treasury's draft ECA regulations, my firm intention has been to maximise flexibility where possible without reducing the level of protection for investors. During the consultations, there was great interest in the corporate structure of the British open-ended investment company. After careful consideration, I have decided to allow greater flexibility than initially proposed. The revised regulations will require a minimum of one director. This will enable an oeic either to appoint a single director—provided that the director is a corporate body authorised under the Financial Services Act 1986—or to appoint more than one director. Promoters of OEICs will therefore be able to choose the structure most appropriate to their particular circumstances. The product regulations to be introduced by SIB will be relevant to the powers and duties of directors.

The interests of an OEIC's shareholders will also be protected by a fully independent depositary—also authorised under the Financial Services Act. The OEIC's annual general meeting will enhance accountability to its shareholders.

I am also considering a number of minor and technical amendments to the draft ECA regulations. The aim where possible is to increase flexibility, backed up by greater emphasis on disclosure. The draft ECA regulations will be laid before Parliament in draft when revision of the text is complete, probably in the early summer. I believe that this initiative will give the UK fund management industry new opportunities to compete in international markets. At the same time, UK investors will gain access to a modern flexible vehicle for pooled investment, with opportunities for access to expertise and economies of scale with the same high standards of investor protection that currently apply to authorised unit trusts.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what occasions civil servants or Ministers have signed public interest immunity certificates to deny documents to the defence in the case of Inland Revenue v. Michael Allcock; what other powers are being used to deny documents requested by the defence; who authorised these actions; and if he will make a statement. [18100]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 29 February 1996]: No such certificates or affidavits have been signed. The hon. Member's question relates to a prosecution pending at the central criminal court which is being conducted by the Crown Prosecution Service, not by the Inland Revenue, and it would not be appropriate to comment further on the case.

On the general issue of public interest immunity, where a need arises for information to be withheld from the defence, the issue of whether that information should be disclosed by the prosecution falls to be determined by the trial judge. According to the circumstances such a claim may be made by means of a certificate or affidavit, or by prosecuting counsel making a direct application to the court.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which tourist information centres have been informed of the locations of countryside open to the public by virtue of conditional exemption from inheritance tax; and when it became his policy to pass such information to them. [22676]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 25 March 1996]: The owner of land conditionally exempted from inheritance tax—or capital transfer tax—must publicise the agreed public access arrangements. The agreement may include provision for publicity through tourist information centres. This has been the position since 1975 when capital transfer tax replaced estate duty.

Each case is considered individually by the appropriate heritage advisory agency, taking account of all relevant factors, including the existing level of publicity. Although the extent of public access may already be widely known, for example where substantial public access is already given, the owner will generally be required to take specific steps to publicise the public access arrangements, for example by advertising the access arrangements in a local tourist office or town hall. For new designations of scenic land in England, owners are required to display at all points of entry on to their land map boards showing the agreed public access.

It is for the owner to take the necessary steps to provide the agreed form and level of publicity and, where appropriate, to inform the relevant tourist centre(s). The advisory agencies monitor owners' compliance with the agreed public access arrangements including matters relating to publicity

I am unable to provide the requested information about tourist information centres as it is not held centrally. And, in any event, providing such information may help identify individual cases of tax exemption, thus compromising the normal rules on taxpayer confidentiality.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the total area of land and the number of locations in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales which have been granted conditional exemption from inheritance tax on the basis of public access having been granted. [22677]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 25 March 1996]: The area of land exempted from inheritance tax—or capital transfer tax—and to which public access arrangements apply is around 56,000 hectares in England; 48,000 hectares in Scotland; and 2,000 hectares in Wales.

The information requested about the number of locations which have been granted conditional exemption is not available. This is because in some cases, a designation may cover more than one site. However, there have been 153 designations of land for conditional exemption from inheritance tax—or capital transfer tax—in England; 28 in Scotland and eight in Wales.

Income Tax (Savings and Investments)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the annual cost of exempting the first (a) £200, (b) £250, (c) £400, (d) £500, (e) £750, and (f) £1,000 of income from savings and investments from income tax. [22775]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 26 March 1996]: The full-year costs at 1996–97 income levels are given in the table. The estimates do not take account of any behavioural effects which might result from the introduction of such an exemption.

Exemption limit £	Cost in full year at 1996–97 income levels £ million

HEALTH

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will instruct the NHS executive heads to report the details of the irregular payments to the top managers of the Yorkshire regional health authority to the fraud squad of the North Yorkshire policy authority. [21722]

Mr. Malone: The police were notified of certain details concerning the former Yorkshire regional health authority. The majority of issues covered in the inquiry set up by the chief executive of the national health service were, however, not criminal in nature.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for which health service bodies each of the 17 persons in receipt of irregular payments from the former Yorkshire regional health authority now works. [22731]

Mr. Malone: The Information is as follows:

	Number
York Health Services NHS trust	1
Royal Hull Hospitals NHS trust	2
Northallerton Health Services NHS trust	2
East Yorkshire Hospitals NHS trust	1
Harrogate Healthcare NHS trust	1
Bradford Hospitals NHS trust	1
Alexandra Healthcare NHS trust	1
North Yorkshire Ambulance Service NHS trust	1
Trent RHA (until 31 March 1996)	1
North Yorkshire HA	1
United Leeds Teaching Hospitals NHS trust	1
Northern and Yorkshire RHA (until 31 March 1996)	1
No longer in NHS	2
Place of employment unknown	1

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the last chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority was provided with a car in connection with his chairmanship; and what was the cost of such provision. [22912]

Mr. Malone: Sir Bryan Askew was not provided with a lease car in connection with his chairmanship of the former Yorkshire regional health authority.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the reports of the district auditor into cases of irregular severance payments to the former director of personnel of the former Yorkshire regional health authority, and to the former district general manager of Scunthorpe district health authority, to be available. [23431]

Mr. Malone: This is a matter for the auditor.

Mr. John Greetham

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many miles have been travelled on national health service business by Mr. John Greetham since he became chair of the Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority. [22894]

Mr. Malone: According to the latest information available, John Greetham travelled 29,885 miles on national health service business between April 1994 and November 1995.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what national health service appointments have previously been held by Sir John Greetham; what national health service posts he currently holds; what posts he will hold on 1 April; and if he will indicate the remuneration received for membership of each such post. [22896]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is listed below:

Post	From	To	Annual remuneration entitlement
Regional Chairman for the Northern and Yorkshire region of the NHS executive	1 April 1996	31 March 1998	£20,925
Chairman, Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority	1 April 1994	31 March 1996	£20,925
Chairman, St. James' University Hospital NHS trust	17 December 1990	31 March 1994	£19,285
Non-executive member, York district health authority	1990	1990	Nil
Non-executive member and later vice-chairman, Yorkshire regional health authority	1984	1990	Nil
Non-executive member, Scarborough district health authority	1980	1984	Nil
Non-executive member, North Yorkshire family practitioner committee	1978	1980	Nil

Electronic Systems

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to link electronic systems holding identifiable health information in his Department to other Government Departments. [22910]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health's network does not handle identifiable health information, being concerned only with anonymised statistical aggregates. Identifiable health information is used by NHS organisations under strict rules set out in recent guidance from the Department of Health. Where the care and treatment of individuals is shared between NHS staff and local authority care staff, identifiable health information has to pass between the responsible clinicians and care workers. Any proposals to use the NHS networking system for this purpose have to follow the very strict controls laid down in the guidance.

Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines are currently in force in his Department and its executive agencies relating to competitive tendering and the use of single negotiated tenders; on what grounds single negotiated tenders can be used; and what procedures are in place within his Department to ensure that the use of single negotiated tenders in competitive tendering processes is justified in all cases. [22852]

Mr. Horam: The Government's public purchasing policy consolidated guidelines require goods and services to be acquired by competition unless there are convincing reasons to the contrary. In addition, the EU procurement directives and the World Trade Organisation Government procurement agreement require most contracts above specified thresholds to be awarded following competition, subject to certain specified exceptions. The central unit on procurement's guidance note No. 40 provides an overview of best practice in the competitive tendering process.

Two internal publications within the Department of Health, the "Purchasing and Supply Manual" and "Guidance Notes on the use of Management Consultants", provide guidance to staff in the Department and its executive agencies on the whole range of procurement matters.

Single negotiated tenders are permissable only where: (i) when the work is an extension of a recently completed project and it can be clearly demonstrated that the value of staying with the same supplier outweighs any possibility of reduced costs that would occur from competitive tendering—further work must be shown to be essential to complete the project; (ii) the expertise is not available from any other source; (iii) unforeseeable circumstances that require extreme urgency of action. A trained purchaser must be involved if the contract value exceeds £50,000.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many contracts for goods or services have been awarded by his Department and its executive agencies on the basis of single negotiated contracts in each of the last three years; if he will list the companies involved and the value of the contract in each case; what percentage this represented of contracts awarded by his Department and its agencies after competitive tendering; and, in each case, why the contracts were awarded on the basis of a single negotiated tender. [22867]

Mr. Horam: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will break down the figure of £159.7 million in paragraph 36 of the report of the Comptroller and Auditor General in the "NHS (England) Summarised Accounts 1994–95" to show the amount of money paid in each financial year between April 1990 and March 1995 by each family health service association to enable general practitioner fundholders to meet the additional costs incurred in managing their funds; and if he will list the fundholding practices in each family health service association area which received the largest amount of money for this purpose between April 1990 and March 1995 indicating the amount of money received by each of those practices. [22991]

Mr. Malone: Information about general practitioner fundholder management allowance payments by family health services authority will be placed in the Library.

Payments to individual practices are governed by a maximum level of reimbursement which is set out in guidance annually. Detailed information about practice level payments is not available centrally.

General Practitioners (Premises)

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner premises fall into each of the condition categories in each of the London boroughs. [23350]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

Ambulance Costs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the ambulance costs per mile for each ambulance authority for 1994–95. [23343]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what diseases in humans his Department classifies as associated with BSE. [23427]

Mr. Horam: None.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons he did not alert the EEC before making a statement on the health consequences of BSE. [23758]

Mr. Horam: I understand that the Commissioner of Agriculture and Rural Development was informed before statements were made to the House on 20 March.

EDS Software

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what out-sourcing contracts his agencies have with the EDS software computer system; what is the current cost; when the contract ends; what are the penalties involved should he seek early termination of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [23725]

Mr. Horam: None.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease have occurred in each of the last 10 years in the United Kingdom. [23425]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is published in the fourth annual report of the national Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease surveillance unit—August 1995—copies of which are available in the Library. The provisional figures for 1995 are 37 sporadic cases, four iatrogenic cases and one case of Gerstmann-Sträussler-Schneiker syndrome.

NHS Network

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the written technical specification which has been prepared or approved for the AT and T clearing house system for the NHS network. [23684]

Mr. Horam: The NHS-wide clearing service is a managed service provided by AT and T ISTEL under the private finance initiative. The specification of the service is the "user requirement", the details of which are contained in the invitation to offer; copies will be placed in the Library. The contract specifies rigorous acceptance trialling to ensure AT and T ISTEL's technical design fully meets the user requirement.

Rural Pharmacies

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking (a) to develop adequate pharmacy provision in rural areas and (b) to ensure that there is satisfactory co-operation and co-ordination between rural pharmacies and general practitioners including dispensing general practitioners. [23576]

Mr. Malone: The essential small pharmacy scheme helps to protect the income of small pharmacies in rural areas. I have recently met both the General Medical Services Committee and the Pharmaceutical Services Negotiating Committee to discuss relationships between community pharmacists and general medical practitioners in rural areas.

Cancer

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations he has held with the royal colleges on guidelines on the appropriateness of diagnosis and treatment of cancer; if he will list those consultations which are ongoing and with which royal college; and when he expects them to report to him on this matter. [23574]

Mr. Horam: None. The production of guidelines on appropriate methods of diagnosis and treatment of cancer is a matter for the professions.

Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many orders under the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day they have been made since January 1995. [23309]

Mr. Horam: None.

Human Embryos

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the means by which the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority collects and records the creation and fate of human embryos and the reliability of any statistics produced by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority. [23594]

Mr. Horam: Information about in vitro fertilisation treatment and donors is collected on forms prepared for the purpose by the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority and these are completed by licensed clinics. The HFEA also monitors the use of embryos in research. These arrangements are checked by the HFEA through validation of the forms and inspection of centres.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors led to the giving of incorrect figures to his office by the Human Fertiliszation and Embryology Authority for provision of answers to parliamentary questions on the number and fate of embryos created between 1991 and 1994. [23590]

Mr. Horam: The mistakes were due to human error. The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority has assured me that there is no underlying problem with its database.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many embryos created before August 1991 were still in existence in August 1991; [23591]

(2) if he will give the number of embryos created before August 1991 used from that date until 1994 for (a) research, (b) treatment cycles and (c) freezing as well as the number of such embryos destroyed by 1994. [23592]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many embryos frozen up to 1994 were subsequently used in (a) treatment cycles and (b) research up to 1994. [23593]

Mr. Horam: Between 1 August 1991 and 1994 inclusive the number of frozen embryos used in in vitro fertilisation treatment cycles was 22,019. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 25 March, Official Report, columns 422–23 which stated that the number of embryos donated for research in the same period was 27,524. This figure includes fresh and frozen embryos.

Dioxins

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the report of the chief medical officer on dioxins to be available. [23429]

Mr. Horam: The chief medical officer's expert advisory Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment reported on its most recent review of dioxins last year. The report was published in the August 1995 edition of the MAFF—Department of Health food safety information bulletin.

Copies of the COT's report will be placed in the Library.

Cause of Death

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were (a) the 20 most usual causes of death in descending order and (b) the 20 least usual causes of death in ascending order; and what was (i) the number and (ii) the percentage of deaths from each cause for each of the last 10 years. [23601]

Mr. Horam: The ninth revision of the international classification of diseases categorises causes of death and disease into 17 broad chapters which individually cover diseases of the various body systems, infectious diseases, congenital anomalies, injury and poisoning.

Individual causes within each chapter have their own three-digit code and most of these three-digit codes are further subdivided by a fourth digit.

Ranking causes in terms of the comparative numbers of deaths can be done in terms of individual three-digit codes, four-digit codes, or groups thereof. According to which level of detail is chosen, different rankings will result.

Causes of death at both the three and four-digit levels can be found in table 2 of "Mortality statistics: cause', series DH2, copies of which are available in the Library. A table giving five leading causes is published each year in the appendix tables of the Department of Health's volume "On the State of the Public Health", copies of which are available in the Library.

NHS Management (Salaries)

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of staff on each point of the senior managers scale in the NHS pay spine; and what is the number of female staff on each spine point. [23731]

Mr. Malone: This information is not available centrally.

NHS Divisional Chief Executives

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the pay of each regional chief executive of NHS regional suppliers in each of the last five years. [23420]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally, as it is an operational matter for national health service supplies. Divisional chief executives of NHS supplies are paid on the same scale as a district general manager 2, which from 1 September 1995 ranges from £47,980 to £69,180.

Health Authority Chief Executives (Remuneration)

Ms Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total remuneration for each district health authority's chief executive for 1993–94. [23554]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 16 February 1995, column 808.

NHS Trusts (Executive Pay)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the payments made in each NHS trust to (a) chairs, (b) non-executive directors, (c) chief executives and (d) executive directors in each year since 1993–94. [21562]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 18 March 1996]: Information as extracted from the annual accounts of national health service trusts for 1994–95 will be placed in the Library. The payments listed represent remuneration in respect of the total gross salary, bonus payments, monetary value of benefits in kind, taxable expenses allowances and pension contributions in relation to the offices described rather than to an individual. They may also include remuneration in respect of services other than directorships, such as clinical duties.

DEFENCE

Departmental Staff (Working Hours)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents. [21505]

Mr. Arbuthnot: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Pay and Personnel Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. P. Isaacs to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 29 March 1996:

You asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many persons in his Department worked in excess of 48 hours per week in any of the last 52 weeks; and what percentage of the staff employed this represents.

2. The number of staff recorded as being paid for overtime which took their hours worked to over 48 hours in a week is 10,624 non-industrials and 21,716 industrial staff, which represents approximately 10% and 58% respectively of the Department's staff employed in these groups during the 52 weeks up to the end of February 1996.

3. However, no records are held centrally of the hours worked either by senior staff not eligible for paid overtime or those on flexible working schemes.

Unmanned Aerial Vehicles

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what (a) research, (b) development and (c) procurement studies for unmanned aerial vehicles his Department has (i) commissioned and (ii) evaluated. [22590]

Mr. Arbuthnot: My Department maintains an active programme of research into technologies relevant to unmanned aerial vehicles, focusing on uses in support roles such as surveillance, target acquisition and communication relay. Development studies are in progress on more realistic targets for air-to-air weapon systems, which could have wider application to UAVs. A study into alternative systems to meet the Army's Phoenix requirement has been undertaken, while an agreed programme of work is conducted by the contractor at its own expense. This study assessment has been completed and is now being evaluated.

Anti-personnel Fragmentation Grenades

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what advice his Department has given to Compass Safety International in respect of the description of anti-personnel fragmentation grenades since 1987. [22972]

Mr. Arbuthnot: I am not aware of any advice provided by my Department to Compass Safety International in respect of the description of anti-personnel fragmentation grenades.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's classification of anti-personnel fragmentation grenades. [22970]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Anti-personnel fragmentation grenades are classified as high explosives.

Married Quarters

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what study has been carried out into examples overseas, with particular reference to Australia, of selling the armed forces married quarters estate to private property developers; and what have been its conclusions. [23068]

Mr. Arbuthnot: We have studied the defence housing arrangements of both the French and the Australian Governments, and in particular the latter's experience in establishing a defence housing authority. We are not aware of any overseas parallels to our current proposals for the transfer of the married quarters estate in England and Wales to the private sector.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the main terms proposed for the sale of the married quarters estate, indicating the variations from the terms of sale of local authority housing by means of large-scale voluntary transfer under sections 135 and 136 of the Leasehold Reform, Housing and Urban Development Act 1993. [23106]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The main terms proposed for the sale of the married quarters estate in England and Wales were set out in the preliminary information memorandum published on 30 November 1995, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House. The proposed sale cannot readily be compared with large-scale voluntary transfers, as is illustrated by the fact that those properties which are required to accommodate service families will be transferred on a leasehold basis and rented back to my Department.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assumptions his Department has made on the anticipated level of income from rents from the married quarters estate over the period (a) five, (b) 10, (c) 20 and (d) 30 years. [23105]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The level of married quarters charges recovered from occupants by my Department in future years will depend upon future recommendations on charges by the Armed Forces Pay Review Body, and on the take-up of married quarters by entitled personnel. Our assumptions concerning the level of rents payable by my Department to the future owners of the married quarters estate in England and Wales are commercially confidential.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance is being offered to potential purchasers of the married quarters estate towards the cost of renovating the properties; and under what provisions this is being offered. [23104]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Under the terms of the sale, maintenance and renovation of quarters leased by my Department will be its responsibility for the duration of the relevant leases. Maintenance and renovation of surplus quarters which are passed over to the owners of the estate—whether at the outset or subsequently on the termination of leases—will be a matter for those owners.

Portland Naval Base

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to sign a contract with Portland Port Ltd. for the sale of Portland naval base; and if he will make a statement. [23553]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Contracts for the sale of Portland naval base to Portland Port Ltd. will be exchanged today, when the purchaser will take possession and accept responsibility for the site.

Service Children (Education)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about Defence Agency status for service children's education. [24412]

Mr. Soames: On 1 April 1996, the existing Service Children's Schools (North West Europe) defence agency and the Service Children's Education Authority will be merged to become a new defence agency to be known as Service Children's Education. The aim of SCE will be to provide or ensure an efficient and effective education service for dependent children residing with MOD personnel serving outside the United Kingdom; and to provide advice and support to service parents on the provision of local education authority, grant-maintained and independent education to service children in the United Kingdom. The new defence agency will be owned by the Adjutant General on behalf of the Secretary of State for Defence. The location of the SCE headquarters is under review but it will initially be based at Rheindahlen in Germany, with a small advisory branch in Worthy Down, Hampshire. The defence agency's 58 schools will be responsible for educating some 14,500 pupils and are located in Germany, the Netherlands, Belgium, Sardinia, Cyprus, Gibraltar, Belize, Falklands, Brunei, Naples and Viborg.

The chief executive will be required to build upon the SCS(NWE) and SCEA reputation for providing a high standard of service and to achieve even better value for money. The chief executive has been set the following key targets for the first year of operation:

1. To sustain an effective education service overseas which is comparable to sound UK practice, the agency will:

   Exceed the United Kingdom Local Education Authority average percentage of pupils gaining GCSE grades A to C in five or more subjects by 2 per cent.

   Achieve A-level pass rates at grades A to C that equal the UK average percentage.

   Achieve an overall percentage pass rate for BTEC diploma of 90 per cent.

   Exceed the UK average percentage pass rate at standard attainment tasks and tests at ages seven, 11 and 14 in English, maths and science by 2 per cent.

   Achieve as a minimum a satisfactory standard in each Ofsted school inspection.

2. Formulate policy and seek approval for an overseas nursery education scheme by 30 June 1996.
3. Have three establishments and supporting organisations gaining accreditation in investors in people.

I have arranged for copies of the agency's framework document to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mortar Ammunition

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account he has taken of Britain's future ammunition capability in his decision to procure 81mm mortar ammunition. [23259]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 28 March 1996]: Tenders for the supply of 81mm ammunition are being conducted in accordance with our policy of securing value for money through competition where possible. Tenderers' proposals will be assessed in the light of all relevant factors including consideration of industrial implications. I expect contracts to be in place by the end of April.

Arms Sales

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the total annual cost of all forms of United Kingdom Government support for the export of armaments and all forms of defence sales. [22683]

Mr. Arbuthnot [holding answer 26 March 1996]: Within the Ministry of Defence, promotion of defence equipment exports is principally undertaken by the Defence Export Services Organisation, the net running costs of which are around £16 million a year. Other branches and individuals are from time to time involved in specific activities but it is not possible to estimate the cost. In addition, estimated receipts of about £1.5 million in 1995–96 have been forgone for commercial and policy reasons in connection with assistance to foreign Governments in respect of training.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Al Fayed Brothers (Citizenship Application)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will exceptionally give reasons for the refusal of United Kingdom citizenship to the Al Fayed brothers. [20066]

Mr. Kirkhope: No.

Prisoners

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of likely changes in the prison population over the next three years. [22707]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 29 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking what estimate has been made of likely changes in the projected prison population of England and Wales over the next three years.

The latest long term prison population projections will be published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 4/96 'Projections of the Long Term Trends in the Prison Population to 2004' on 2 April. A copy will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

The average prison population is expected to be 53,500 in 1997; 54,300 in 1998; and 55,100 in 1999. The long-term prison population projections do not take account of the sentencing proposals to be outlined in the forthcoming White Paper.

Prison Visitors

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice is given to prison governors about the searching of visitors to prisons. [22664]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 29 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about advice given to prison governors on the searching of visitors to prisons.

Instructions on the searching of visitors can be found in section 69 of the Prison Service Manual on Security, copies of which are held in the Library of the House.

Women Prisoners (Domestic Violence)

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will commission a study into the number and percentage of women prisoners who have been the victims of domestic violence. [22665]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 29 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking if he will commission a study into the number and percentage of women prisoners who have been the victims of domestic violence.

There are no plans to conduct such a study.

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions to date (a) cell lock or (b) other door or gate lock keys have been lost at Doncaster prison since it opened; and if he will make a statement. [23070]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from A. J. Butler to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 29 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me, in the absence of the Director General from the office, to reply to your recent Question about the loss of cell locks, door locks and gate lock keys at Doncaster prison.

No keys which permit access to cells or which would open gates have ever been lost. One key, which opened a store-room, was mislaid on 17 January 1996. The lock was changed immediately. Enquiries revealed that a member of staff had inadvertently removed the key from the prison. It was subsequently returned.

Prisoners (Drug Tests)

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have tested positive for using class A drugs as a result of mandatory drug testing over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [23173]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Elfyn Llwyd, dated 29 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoners who have tested positive for using class A drugs in the last 12 months.

Between February 1995 and January 1996 there were 470 random test results positive for opiates, methadone, cocaine and LSD, the class A drugs tested for. Results for February 1996 are not yet available.

Orders

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many orders under the negative resolution procedure have been brought into effect on the day they have been made since January 1995. [23315]

Mr. Howard: None.

Irish Prisoners

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 25 March, Official Report, column 404, what conditions were imposed by the discretionary lifer panel on the release of Noel Gibson, Sean Kinsella and Stephen Nordare; when those conditions were removed; what decision has been made in respect of Brendan Dowd; when the Northern Ireland Parole Board is going to consider the case of Paul Norney; and if he will make a statement. [23760]

Miss Widdecombe: In addition to the standard conditions imposed on all life licensees, Noel Gibson, Sean Kinsella and Stephen Nordone were required to live initially at addresses in England or Wales in order to comply with the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1991. In response to recommendations from the Probation Service and the Parole Board, these conditions were removed on 18 March, thus allowing the men to leave the country.

Mr. Dowd's request to be repatriated to the Irish Republic has been granted and he has consented to this. It is now for the Irish Government to confirm their consent by obtaining a warrant for his removal to, and continued detention in, the Republic.

The timing of the referral to the Northern Ireland life sentence review board of the case of Paul Norney is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Section 95 Publications

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his plans to publish material this year, pursuant to his obligations under section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991. [24186]

Mr. Maclean: I have today placed in the Library copies of the section 95 publication for 1995.

This latest publication is based on the work done by the Criminal Justice Consultative Council in following up its 1994 report on race. The report shows considerable progress across a wide range of areas and makes clear the commitment of each agency and Government Department to ensuring that any discrimination in the criminal justice system is eradicated.

Police Custody Deaths

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths there were in police custody in the Metropolitan police district in each of the last five years; and if he will break down the figures by ethnic origin. [24284]

Mr. Maclean: The following is the information required:

Deaths in police custody: metropolitan police district

	White	Black	Asian	Unclassified	Total
1990[1]	14	1	1	4	20

Police Information System and Information Technology

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his proposals for bringing competition to bear on police IS/IT services. [24187]

Mr. Maclean: It is the Government's intention that compulsory competitive tendering should be introduced to police white collar support services as part of a rolling programme. Detailed consultation proposals for police information systems/information technology services were issued on 31 March 1995. The Government have now considered the responses received from the police service and other interested bodies.

The Government have decided that police authorities will be subject to the same CCT regime for IS/IT services as other authorities defined under the Local Government Act 1988, except for a number of specific exemptions. There will also be a reduction in the overall competition requirement. The adjustments take account of the specialist a nature of police work, and focus on the a need to protect operational effectiveness and force security.

Racial Incidents

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racial incidents were recorded by each police force in England and Wales in 1993–94 and 1994–95; and if he will make a statement. [24188]

Mr. Macelan: The figures are set out in the table. The increase in reported racial incidents since 1993–94 of 8 per cent. is partly due to improvements in recording practices, and also to the efforts made by police forces to encourage victims and communities to report racial incidents.

The term racial incident adopted by the Association of Chief Police Officers relates to any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation, or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation made by any person.

Buckley Hall Prison

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the specific areas where Buckley Hall prison has performed to a higher standard than other male category C training prisons since it opened. [21890]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 21 March 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 29 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about specific areas where Buckley Hall prison has performed to a standard higher than other male category C training prisons since it opened.

As Buckley Hall prison has not been fully operational very long it is not possible to make too many direct comparisons.

Buckley Hall is, however, currently above the average on time out of cell, and hours of purposeful activity. They also recorded a lower than average rate of assaults on staff for the first two months of this year.

The prison is also performing to a high standard in tackling offending behaviour, incentives relating to prisoner behaviour, and pre-release work.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the key performance indicators as stipulated in the contract awarded to Group 4 for the running of Buckley Hall prison; and if he will publish the statistics in respect of which performance indicators have been met since the prison opened. [23338]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 28 March 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the temporary Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 29 March 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about key performance indicators as stipulated in the contract awarded to Group 4 for the running of Buckley Hall prison.

Under the contract awarded to Group 4 for the management of Buckley Hall prison the contractor's performance is assessed against 120 criteria. I have arranged for a copy of the performance system to be placed in the Library.

Performance is measured over periods of 12 months, with the first performance year running from 14 December 1994. The Prison Service and Group 4 are currently reviewing performance for this period against the criteria and I will write to the hon. Member when that work has been completed.

Public Bodies

Dr. Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those of his Department's advisory non-departmental public bodies which (a) the Government are required to consult prior to legislative proposals and (b) the Government are required to publish its response to advice supplied by them. [21859]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 21 March 1996]: The Government are required to consult the following advisory non-departmental public bodies before legislative proposals:

Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs;

Animal Procedures Committee;

Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council;

Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England;

Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales;

Poisons Board.

In addition, the Government's response to advice supplied by the following bodies must be published:

Parliamentary Boundary Commission for England;

Parliamentary Boundary Commission for Wales.

Lloyd Inquiry

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what formal alterations of the terms of reference of the inquiry being held by Lord Lloyd of Berwick and Mr. Justice Kerr have been made since the ending of the IRA ceasefire; what further guidance in holding his inquiry has been given to Lord Lloyd; and if Lord Lloyd approached him for further advice. [22723]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 27 March 1996]: Lord Lloyd discussed his terms of reference with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland after the ending of the Provisional IRA ceasefire. It was agreed that the original terms of reference would stand as the Government remain committed to securing a lasting peace in Northern Ireland. The conduct of the independent inquiry remains a matter for Lord Lloyd himself.

Prison Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to initiate a study into the relations between the Prison Service and the Home Office in accordance with the recommendation of Sir John Learmont; and if he will make a statement. [23140]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 28 March 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Ms Anderson) on 14 March, columns 708–09.

Fire, Police and Prison Services

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what categories of information are collected centrally in relation to (a) fire services, (b) police forces and (c) the Prison Service; and if he will make a statement. [23141]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 28 March 1996]: For police forces and the Prison Service, annex C of "Digest 3: Information on the Criminal Justice System in England and Wales" lists the publications containing statistical information issued by the Research and Statistics Department of the Home Office, by Her Majesty's chief inspectorate of constabulary and Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons. For the fire service, information is published in "Fire Statistics UK 1993" and in "Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services for England and Wales for 1994–95". Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Irish Procession, Liverpool

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the recent troubles in Hope street, Liverpool, during the Irish community's procession on 17 March; [22456]

(2) how many police personnel were on duty in the Mount Pleasant area of Liverpool on 17 March for the Irish community's procession; and if he will make a statement; [22457]

(3) if he will list the offences committed during the Irish procession on 17 March; how many arrests were made; and if he will make a statement. [22458]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 28 March 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question by him on 27 March, column 599.

Fur Imports

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors underlay the decision not to implement EC regulation 3254/91 in the United Kingdom on 1 January. [22885]

Mr. Clappison: I have been asked to reply.

The 1991 leghold traps regulation requires the Commission to determine which countries have met the conditions to import furs into the Community. Since this has not been done, and the necessary implementing measures have not been adopted, there is some doubt as to whether member states would be acting lawfully if they attempted to implement a fur import ban on 1 January 1996. In view of this, and the absence of routine controls on intra-Community trade, the Government reluctantly concluded that it would not be appropriate to implement the ban.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total cost of answering parliamentary questions in each parliamentary Session since 1989–90. [22900]

Mr. Hanley: Neither the FCO (diplomatic wing) nor the Overseas Development Administration calculates the data requested; they could be provided at disproportionate cost only.

Kashmir

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ask the Indian Government to permit observer groups to witness elections in Kashmir. [23345]

Mr. Hanley: We have made it plain to the Government of India that we would favour the greatest possible openness in the conduct of the election process in Jammu and Kashmir.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Indian Government regarding elections in the Indian-occupied Kashmir; and if he will make a statement. [23332]

Mr. Hanley: The Indian Government are aware of our wish to see the development of a genuine political process in Kashmir. The Indian Election Commission has announced that parliamentary elections are to be held in Jammu and Kashmir on 7, 23 and 30 May.

India

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of India over the arrest and subsequent disappearance of Mr. Jalil Andrabi, chairman of the Kashmir Commission of Justices; and if he will make a statement. [23756]

Mr. Hanley: Our high commission in New Delhi has reported that the body of Jalil Andrabi was found in the Jhelum river on 27 March. The circumstances surrounding his death are unclear. We have contacted the Indian authorities to register our concern at this shocking incident and to press for a full inquiry.

Guatemala

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made about human rights abuses in Guatemala. [23194]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We regularly raise our concerns about human rights abuses in Guatemala. I did so most recently at the EU/central America ministerial meeting in Florence on 21 March.

We have also welcomed the measures taken by the new Guatemalan Government to bring the Guatemala security forces under democratic control.

India (Hawk Aircraft)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the supply by British Aerospace to India of Hawk 100 aircraft; and if he will make a statement. [23759]

Mr. Hanley: There have been no recent representation other than those made by the hon. Gentleman.

General Affairs Council

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the General Affairs Council on 25 March. [24013]

Mr. David Davis: The A points listed in document 5975/96, which will be deposited in the Libraries of the House as soon as it is available, were approved. These included a draft mandate for a free trade agreement on South Africa, on which the UK abstained.

The Council took note of the resolutions in documents 4970/96 (PE-RE 15) and 5126/96 (PE-RE 18). Copies of these documents will be deposited in the Libraries of the House as soon as they are available.

The Council discussed the follow-up to the Barcelona conference and progress on negotiations and exploratory talks on Euro-Mediterranean agreements. The Council also discussed the MEDA regulation, covering financial assistance to Mediterranean countries; and had a brief discussion of EU-Albania relations, noting the Commission's intention to make a proposal for a new EU-Albania agreement.

The Council discussed EU-Turkey relations. The Association Council with Turkey was postponed to allow the Council to consider Prime Minister Yilmaz' statement of 24 March. The presidency stressed its determination to reinstate the Association Council shortly, in order to register real progress.

The Council gave its formal agreement to the convening of an intergovernmental conference. The first meeting will be in Turin on 29 March. The Council also reached agreement in principle on the mechanism for keeping the European Parliament informed about the progress of the intergovernmental conference.

The Council discussed former Yugoslavia and agreed the appointment of a new EU administrator in Mostar. The Council agreed that compliance by the Bosnian parties with Dayton would be an important condition for the April donors' conference. The Council also adopted a decision on demining in former Yugoslavia.

The Council discussed the middle east peace process. The presidency gave a brief report on the follow-up to the recent Foreign Ministers' meeting in Palermo and the Sharm el Sheikh summit.

The Council discussed the World Trade Organisation telecoms negotiations and agreed a statement pointing to EU willingness to improve its offer in Geneva.

The Council discussed EU-Canada relations, agreeing that the Presidency and Commission should draw up an EU action plan with Canada.

The Council heard a report from Portugal on the recent all-party talks on East Timor held in Austria under UN auspices.

A Portuguese proposal for an EU-Africa summit and a Commission communication on conflict prevention in Africa were remitted to officials for further consideration.

A declaration on the latest developments in Chechnya was agreed.

In the margins of the Council, the EC/Belarus interim agreement was signed. This provides for interim application of the trade provisions of the EU/Belarus partnership and co-operation agreement.

Apart from the UK's abstention on the A point on South Africa, noted above, no other votes were taken at this Council.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Angola

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response was made by Her Majesty's Government to the appeal from the Secretary-General of the United Nations for additional resources to assist with the quartering of the Angolan rapid reaction police in support of the peace process in Angola. [23552]

Mr. Hanley: Following an appeal by the special representative of the United Nations Secretary-General, we considered providing tentage to assist with the quartering of the rapid reaction police. However, after clarifying the precise requirements, in common with other major donors, we decided not to proceed with this.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 274

SESSION 1995–96

18th March—29th March 1996

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
